H. H. Van Loan and wife (the latter a star with the Universal Film Mfg. Co.) passed through Cleveland last week en route from New York to Universal City. They were guests of C. G. Thompson, manager of the Victor Film Service. Mr. and Mrs. Van Loan were married before the camera recently on board a United States cruiser during the review of the fleet at New York.

Hall Caine's masterpiece, "The Eternal City" is announced as an early attraction at the Alhambra theater, E. 105th street and Euclid avenue, Cleveland. The picture will be shown for seven days, starting June 21 and at advanced prices.

New Theater in St. Louis

The Ritz, to Be Built by the St. Louis Amusement Company on Ninth Street, Will Seat 1,000 Persons—Its Aim Is High Class Feature Offerings—Officers of the Company—Other Theaters Projected.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE St. Louis Amusement Company has taken a ten-year lease on a site at 208-10 North Sixth street, upon which a modern exclusive moving picture theater is to be built. The building now on the ground will be razed, and a new fireproof structure, with a seating capacity of 1,000, will be erected, the balcony seating 400, and lower floor 600. Only high-class features and pictures will be shown, and as that section of Sixth street is bright with new buildings, restaurants, cafes and theaters, the new house should receive a goodly share of patronage.

The theater will be called the Ritz, and the building, together with the handsome decorations planned, will cost approximately $40,000. Alfred H. Murphy is president and George E. Lawler, secretary and treasurer of the amusement company. Work wil be begun on the new house as soon as the present tenant finds another location for his cafe, which has been occuying the house.

Theater and amusement investments have been very active in the real estate market in St. Louis this spring. Besides the Ritz, which will be begun soon, a very pretentious theater building in the west end of the city on Delmar avenue, near Hamilton, is nearing completion. Negotiations are in progress for a costly theater on Shaw avenue, near Vandeventer. A number of other theaters in various sections of the city are under way, and airdomes are springing up like mushrooms on likely vacant lots in all parts of town and suburbs.

BARNEY ROSENTHAL TO MANAGE UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE.

Barney Rosenthal has been appointed manager of the Universal exchange in St. Louis, to succeed A. F. Beck, who goes to New York to join the forces of the United Film Service in that city. Mr. Beck leaves many good friends among the exhibitors who have had dealings with him, and as an appreciation of the tact and good fellowship he displayed while manager of the exchange, he is to be given a banquet at one of the leading hotels before he leaves for New York. Mr. Rosenthal, who has been assistant manager to Mr. Beck, is almost as well known as his predecessor, and is an experienced film man.

ARBOR DAY FILM.

Another film made in St. Louis that is being shown in other states is the Arbor Day celebration held at Fair Grounds Park on April 9th. The Mayor and many other city officials participated in the celebration, planting trees, and acting as judges in the many games and contests.

MOVING PICTURES AT COLISEUM.

If a plan for the refinancing of the St. Louis Coliseum Company by a reissue of its stocks and bonds through the Business Men's League is accepted, the Coliseum, at Washington and Jefferson avenues, among other things, will be used for moving picture shows during the dull seasons. The announcement was made by A. C. Einstein, president of the company. Mr. Einstein says that the plan is to build a portable stage which can be used for theatrical performers and moving picture shows, and removed when the arena is needed for other purposes.

ST. LOUIS POST OFFICE IN FILMS.

Moving pictures were made of the workings of the St. Louis Post Office recently, showing every feature of the handling of mail. The new Post Office at 18th street and Clark avenue, is called a "model" by experts, who say that the facilities for the rapid handling of mail are as near perfect as human ingenuity and skill can make them. Postmaster Selph is seen in the film directing the work in the many departments, from the time the mail is brought in by the collectors until it is sent away on the trains, and from its arrival in the city until it is delivered to the address by the letter carriers. The parcel post system is also shown in the film, showing farmers gathering fruit and vegetables, plucking and dressing poultry, packing ready for the mail, and the entire transaction from the time the parcel leaves the farm until it reaches its destination. These films are now on exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco and are screened eight times a day at the model Post Office there.

ST. LOUIS AIRDOMES.

The "Nebraska."

The new Nebraska airdome, Park and Nebraska avenues, opened on May 23d. There were speeches and responses by prominent St. Louisians, an excellent program, with special features and songs by the poular Verdi Quartette. James L. McKelvey, Building Commissioner of St. Louis, made the opening remarks, and a response followed by Gus Baur, Alderman of the 14th Ward. Other speakers were Dr. L. E. Lehmberg and Henry Hoffman. J. Wm. Deubach, treasurer of the Olympic theater is manager of the Nebraska, and his policy for the skydome will be patterned after that of the Olympic. Only first run high class pictures, with the best singers and quartettes obtainable, and an orchestra composed of some of the most capable musicians in town will be seen and heard at the Nebraska.

The "Olivette."

The Olivette airdome, a new show place on Olive street near Grand avenue, opened on May 24th with Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady in "The Boss." The Olivette intends to maintain an exclusive feature program.

"Crystal Feature Dome."

The Crystal Feature Dome, at Delmar and De Baliviere avenues, is a new skydome just opened, showing high-class pictures and features exclusively. On the opening night "The Fifth Commandment," with Julius Steger in the lead, was shown as the principal attraction. The Crystal is also showing "The Goddess" on Monday nights.

The "Woodland."

The Woodland airdome was turned over to the Morganford School Patrons' Association on the night of May 21, for the annual school entertainment. The program consisted of moving pictures, games and drills, and a short address by President Bircher of the Association.

The "Mozart."

The Mozart airdome, at 4800 Delmar avenue, opened its summer season on May 22nd with an exclusive moving picture program, including large features. The Mozart has a seating capacity of 2,000 and charges ten cents admission.

"Hamilton Skydome."

The Hamilton skydome, at Hamilton and Easton avenues, heretofore specializing on vaudeville, with perhaps three reels of moving pictures, is now advertising multiple reel features, and a serial, "The Goddess," for Monday nights.

The "Maryland."

The Maryand, a new airdome, at 1910 South 13th street, opened on May 22 with an all-picture bill.

LIBERTY BELL Features

"LIBERTY BELL" is the name we have chosen to identify those Lubin photo plays of unusually high quality (of 4 reels or more) with famous theatrical stars in the leading roles, to be released through the V. L. S. E., Inc.

For the present we are offering in 6 parts, which is playing to packed houses in all parts of the country. "The Eagle's Nest," featuring Edwin Arden and Romaine Fielding, is one of the most picturesque and thrilling dramas ever shown on the screen. The scenic effects are notably beautiful, having been photographed principally in the world famous "Garden of the Gods."

"THE EAGLE'S NEST"

—Also

"THE COLLEGE WIDOW"

from the celebrated play of the same name by George Ade, featuring Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer. "The College Widow" is unquestionably the greatest college picture shown. It comprises an exciting football game, a "snake dance" of nearly 10,000 students and the most sensational fire scene ever pictured.

The Lubin LIBERTY BELL feature for release June 7th is Cecil Raleigh's successful comedy drama with the popular and famous star, Rose Coghlan, in the cast.

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS"

Viola Allen as "White Sister" Achieves Great Film Success

Probably no announcement caused a greater stir in the photoplay world than that made recently by Essanay to the effect that Viola Allen had been secured to play the leading role in "The White Sister." Thousands will remember the wonderful part as it was played by Miss Allen on the stage.

The "White Sister" has been made into a marvelous photoplay by Essanay and Miss Allen has given to the world a film record that will be an everlasting tribute to her art.

This is the first photoplay in which Miss Allen has ever appeared. This wonderful actress received many offers from film companies to appear on the screen. She refused them for Essanay.

Only the knowledge that Essanay could and would make a master production of "The White Sister" decided Miss Allen to accept the offer. As a friend of the late F. Marion Crawford and his family Miss Allen felt that she could do no more than pay a tribute to the author's greatness by a film record of his most popular work.

Essanay is now offering this greatest of all productions to exhibitors throughout the United States. It is unnecessary to tell you what this stupendous photoplay will mean to you and your theatre. You can apply for bookings now through any branch office of the V. L. S. E. (Inc.).

New Orleans New Theater

The Athenaeum, Largest Auditorium in Southern Metropolis, Is to Show Pictures—Some of the Special Advantages Manager Weisfeld Will Have in the Way of Advertising—Prices for Show and Good Music.

Special to Moving Picture World from Trades News Service, New Orleans.

THE opening of the Athenaeum, New Orleans' largest auditorium, as a picture house was eagerly looked forward to both by the trade and the public. Sunday, May 30, was day set, "The Heart of Maryland," featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter, being the first booking; "Salambo," World Film feature, the second. The house seats two thousand comfortably, though by reducing the aisle and promenade space this can be extended to 2,400. Its name carries more prestige than that of any other house in New Orleans, it being the official "palace" of the king of the Carnival, the scene of the greatest annual Mardi Gras balls, and the place where Damrosch and Kubelik are heard.

So much for the hall itself. This, alone, it is thought, would go far toward assuring the success of the venture, which is admittedly revolutionary in New Orleans. Most important, however, is the support being given the enterprise by the Young Men's Hebrew Association, the owners of the house. The membership of the association comprises roundly a thousand men, who, between them, practically "own Canal street." These men, by way of helping indirectly the finances of the club, have volunteered to display in their show windows some hundred photograph stands. "That," says Mr. William Weisfeld, waving his hand at the thoroughfare, "is my lobby."

In addition to this advertising, Mr. Weisfeld has contracted to spend about $150 a week on newspaper advertising, this amount being much in excess of the bills of any picture house now running. It is estimated that about $100 will go for "paper." Two floats carrying twenty-four sheets will be kept on the street regularly and, altogether, one would have to be both deaf and blind not to know about the "pictures extraordinary" which are promised for the Athenaeum weekly.

The prices will be ten, twenty, thirty and fifty cents for box seats, this also being a new departure, no New Orleans picture house having previously scaled their prices. This means of course that it will cost considerably more to go to the Athenaeum than elsewhere, but Mr. Weisfeld thinks, and he has good reason to, that the Athenaeum with its big pictures will get the consideration of an extraordinary attraction so that neither the higher prices or the necessity of taking a street car, or walking, ten blocks from Canal street, will stand in anybody's way.

Tosso's orchestra, the best available in New Orleans, will in itself constitute a not inconsiderable attraction. It will play several pieces by way of overture before the first run, which begins at half past seven, and between the first and second runs.

NEW ORLEANS NOTES.

J. C. Butner, formerly feature manager for the Mutual at Boston, has been put in charge of the Mutual office at New Orleans, succeeding E. Auger, recently resigned to become southern manager for the World Film.

"Who Pays?" Pathe feature, is playing a number of New Orleans suburban houses. At a recent feature night at the Pastime, where the picture was booked, two policemen were put at the door by the management to stem the rush. "Who Pays?" played one of the Canal street houses for a time, but for reasons not made clear the booking was terminated.

Phillip J. Reilly, formerly a New Orleans newspaperman, is on the road for the Paramount, traveling out of Dallas. Phil is putting them over, from all reports, just as he used to do in newspaper row, fast.

The Coquille Film Company is reported to be developing extensive plans, calculated to put that organization rather high up in the producing line. Certain members of the old company are being retained, it is learned, but the new company will be built up largely from experienced talent, it being a plan of the company to go in for Broadway Stars productions.

BANGOR'S STRAND OPENS SOON.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

A BIG force of workmen is making every effort to rush to completion the work of the new theater which E. E. Boucher is building between Main and Water streets, Bangor, Maine. When completed the place is to be known as the Strand and it is now expected that it will be ready for the first exhibition of moving pictures by June 14. Henry J. Thibodeau is to be the manager of the new enterprise.

Proprietor Boucher is sparing no expense to make this one of the most desirable indoor picture houses in the state and in furtherance of this plan, he is having installed the Sturtevant system of heating and ventilating, which is unusual in this part of Maine.

The auditorium is planned to seat 720 people and at either side of the main entrance on Main street will be convenient toilet rooms for men and women. The chairs will be arranged to insure comfort for every occupant and the seats will be all on the main floor, without gallery. The use of the splendid gold fibre radium screen, which only awaits installation, makes possible the best of results from all parts of the house, with no eye strain to the nearest nor the most distant

The lobby will be beautifully designed, being profusely lighted and the entire front of the building finished in white stucco, formed into an archway, with most attractive Cupid decorations.

Popular prices will prevail and the pictures will be of the most refined and the best the market affords. Every feature will be a surprise, says Manager Thibodeau and there will be three performances daily, in the afternoon at 2.30 and evening at 7 and 8.45.

Proprietor Boucher believes that one good way to boost Old Town is to give the people a good, up-to-date theater, with such pictures as will make the public feel it is getting full value for money spent at home.

Bangor, Maine is already the chief film distributing point in the state of Maine but it has a claim to distinction in this line that is not very well known although rather important. From this city are sent each month the hundreds of film plays that are exhibited on all the ships of the mighty Atlantic fleet which is just now so much in the public eye as it would be the nation's bulwark in case of war. Manager A. L. Ehrgott of the General Film Company is the man who sends the reels to the Atlantic fleet and this is one of the most important branches of his exchange.

The question may well be asked, how is it that so many films are dispatched from such a comparatively small city as Bangor instead of sending them from Boston or New York? The answer is that by the system of film circuits the majority of the General Film reels finally end up in the Bangor exchange so it is most convenient to ship them from this city direct to the Atlantic fleet.

Manager Ehrgott says that one and two reel plays are mostly used and the fleet officers exercise a scrupulous care in the selection of the films for the sailor boys. Plays with love scenes or love stories are not desired as they have a tendency to make the sailor lads homesick and thus sometimes discontented. Brisk dramas of western setting, in fact anything with plenty of action, also the news films of current events are mostly in favor for the Navy. Films are rented by the month.

MAINE NOTES OF INTEREST.

E. M. Chase, of the Orono Amusement Co., has leased the Camden Opera House for one year and will operate the same in connection with the Orono Opera House.

About 500 members of the University of Maine student body attended the Orono moving picture theater in a body during the past week, in connection with the Rising Day exercises. As the students entered, cheers were given for Manager Devoe, who had decorated the theater with banners.

A STRING OF PICTURE HOUSES IN ATLANTA.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of the organization of a corporation to establish a string of motion picture theaters in Atlanta in the residence districts, which plans ultimately to have a theater in each of the ten wards.

Frank Montgomery, the well known theater man, is managing director of the plan, and has associated with him H. R. Polk, head of the Memphis, Tenn., Telephone Co. Several leading Atlanta business men are also interested in the enterprise.

Actual work on the first theater has begun, and it will be open to the public in thirty days. It will be located on Peachtree, between Ponce deLeon avenue, and North avenue, and will have a seating capacity of 450 people.

The Regent will be the name of the new theater, and several thousand dollars are being spent in making it one of the most attractive in the city. Mr. Montgomery announces that pretty girls chosen from good Atlanta families, will be ushers in this, the same as in other theaters they plan to build. They will wear uniforms, and work with the management to make the house a safe place for women and children.

It is announced work will begin next week on two other theaters, one on Peachtree and Tenth streets, the other in Inman Park. Mr. Montgomery states negotiations are under way, and he expects to acquire sites for five other theaters to be erected and opened late in the summer and early fall.

ITEMS FROM ATLANTA.

W. C. Brandon, whose Atlanta office handles the business of eight southern states for the V-L-S-E has been in Charleston and Savannah during the week on business for his company.

Mrs. William S. Oldknow, wife of the well known theater man, died last Sunday night, following a long illness, and was interred Tuesday in Westview cemetery. The picture exchanges of Atlanta sent beautiful floral offerings to the grave, and the casket and mound were veritable bowers of flower beauty, attesting to the friends that Mr. and Mrs. Oldknow have in Atlanta.

The Vaudette theater, which is always crowded from opening to close, announce for the week Dorothy Gish in "Out of Bondage"; Pearl White in "Exploits of Elaine" and W. S. Hart in "The Conversion of Frosty Blake." The Vaudette is perhaps the most modernly equipped theater in the south, as nothing new in the moving picture equipment is placed on the market until it first enters this theater. All seats are 37 inches apart in order that patrons may not be disturbed during the show.

"The Littlest Rebel" holds the boards at the Montgomery for three days during the week, followed by "Captain Courtesy," "The Captive" and "The Fifth Commandment."

W. L. Pavloski, formerly of the Washington, D. C. office of the World Film Corporation, has joined the sales force of the Atlanta office, which is under the management of J. Walter Lamb.

A NEW TEMPERANCE FILM.

A delegation of the National Unitarian Temperance Society, which held a convention in Boston, last week, were the guests of Manager Fred B. Murphy of the New England office of the United Film Service at a runoff of the photoplay "The Spender," written by the Rev. Charles J. Harris. This play is to be used by the Society in its world wide campaign against intemperance. All expressed their appreciation of the film and asserted that they were positive it would produce good results, as its quality was unexcelled. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. William Tilton of Cambridge, Mass.; F. H. Lawton of the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League; Rev. Edgar S. Weirs of Montclair, N. J.; Rev. Thomas Elliott of Lowell, Mass.; Rev. Lyman Rutledge of Cambridge, Mass. and the Rev. John H. Holman of New York.

NO "BIRTH OF A NATION" DECISION.

A decision as to whether "The Birth of a Nation" will be permitted to continue to run in Boston may be handed down by the new newly created censor board in the near future. Each of the members will see the film in order that they might better judge its character.

The board held its first meeting last week and organized with Mayor Curley as chairman and License Clerk John M. Casey as secretary. In the meantime, the management of the Tremont theater, where the film is showing, is circulating a petition which will be presented to the board. None of the members of the board will comment on the film until they meet in executive session.

It is claimed by politicians of authority that this bill would have never become a law had the lobbyist engaged by the management of "The Birth of a Nation" known what he was doing. Politicians of state wide fame claim that this lobbyist fell into his own trap.

This lobbyist, in endeavoring to draw up a bill that would protect that film's interests and appease the colored protestants, suggested the idea for the present bill which gives arbitrary power to the board composed of the Mayor of Boston, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the municipal court.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

Frank Boschetti, a member of the firm of Boschetti and Janelli, Inc., owners of the Majestic theater, Haverill, Mass., and the Cosmopolitan theater, Lawrence, Mass., has purchased both the property and the business of the Star theater at Lawrence. He will be sole owner of this enterprise. It is his intention to remodel the building and install a new organ and several hundred additional seats.

A unique policy has been adopted by Manager W. A. Graves of the Mirror theater at Springfield, Mass. His playhouse is located near a large motorcycle manufacturing plant. He runs a show during the noon hour, charging a five cent admission. A large number of the employees of the plant attend this show and while enjoying the picture, also eat the luncheon. It is proving to be very successful.

Miss Helen Noonan, who has been employed as a stenographer in the New England office of the United Film Service since the office opened, has resigned her position to be married. A large number of the office associates gathered at her home in Leroy street, Dorchester, the other evening and gave her a linen shower.

State Censorship Deferred

Massachusetts Exhibitors Given a Year of Grace Before a New Fight on State Censorship Opens—Resume of Recent Censorship History Given Plenty of Reason Why Picture Men Should Be Alert to Danger of It.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MASSACHUSETTS is to be free from censorship for a year at least. The Ways and Means committee of the State Senate, before whom censorship has been argued, has reported that the state-wide censorship problem would be referred to the next General Court.

The picture interests in Massachusetts should regard this report as a great victory. It was won only after a hard fight. It is now time that the Massachusetts exhibitors get together and prepare for a harder battle next year.

The majority of exhibitors do not seem to realize what censorship will mean to them. Their shows will cost them more and many of them will be forced to close their houses.

Many times during the past six months, it appeared as though the proponents of censorship would win their fight.

The fight first started when Carl C. Carstens, special agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, presented a petition to the legislature seeking the establishment of a state-paid censorship board under the jurisdiction of the State Board of Labor and Industries. This board was to view and approve every moving picture film before it should be presented for public exhibition. A price of $1 was to be charged for every film of less than 1,000 linear feet and $2 for every film exceeding 1,000 feet.

A public hearing was granted on this bill by the member of the joint legislative committee on Mercantile Affairs. At this hearing, over 200 women were present in favor of the bill and in fiery speeches the members of the committee were urged to report this bill favorably. Almost every woman who was present as the representative of some society went on record as in favor of the bill.

The committee then took the matter under advisement. After a couple of weeks, when the committee made its report, it urged that the bill be referred to the next General Court. Senator Sanford Bates of Dorchester, who presented the bill for Carstens, asked that the bill be substituted for the report of the committee. This was done.

The bill was then turned over to the Ways and Means Committee. At the opening hearing before this committee, several representatives of women's organizations again appeared in favor of its passage.

At the next hearing, Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Censorship, appeared before the committee and explained how this body did its censorship work. The picture interests were contending that the approval of the National Board should be sufficient without establishing a state board.

The proponents of censorship then began to realize that their bill was not strong enough to be carried and they started out to "slip one over" on the film interests.

Through James A. Lowell, also of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, another censorship bill was presented to the Ways and Means Committee to be substituted for the Carstens bill. The Lowell bill sought to place the censorship power in charge of the District Police. There was to be a censorship board of nine members, who were to compile standards according to which the films were to be censored. The censoring was to be done by five persons to be appointed under civil service rules and to be paid salaries of state police members. They were to censor all films according to the standards compiled by the censorship board.

This bill had been drawn up and presented to the committee and the opponents of censorship did not know of it. It is evident that the proponents thought they would catch their opponents off their guard.

At a hearing on this bill, the legislatures appeared to be very much disturbed over a rumor which was in circulation throughout the State House. They claimed that they had learned that the picture interests were prepared to throw in on the screens of the various theaters throughout the State, the pictures of any representative or senator who might vote in favor of censorship. Although there was no foundation for the rumor, nevertheless, it caused considerable discussion.

This only goes to show how the power of the screen is feared and picture interests should realize the amount of power they control and if necessary should use it to defeat the reformers and any politician who votes against their interests. They will find that if they do this there will be less fanatical legislation enacted against them. The screen is every bit as powerful as the press and why should such an enormous power be idle?

In commenting on this power, the Boston American says,

"There can no longer be any doubt that the day is not far distant when political campaigns will be fought on the screen. The film will replace the stump. Arguments will be presented in picture form. Principles will be visualized and the records of office holders, who have been untrue to their oaths and their constituents, will be blazed before countless eyes. Every theater could be turned into a rally headquarters in the heat of a campaign. Reforms could be advocated in a manner that would leave no doubt.

"Likewise the average person is more easily interested instructed and convinced by pictorial arguments than by circulars or in the worn hoarse voices of candidates and their retinue of stumpers, who will not be obliged to waste their physical and vocal powers and hazard their health by whirlwind tours in unfavorable weather.

"The distributors and exhibitors of films control a power greater than they realize."

The Ways and Means Committee then arranged for a conference between the opponents and proponents of the bill to see if a compromise bill could be agreed upon. This meeting was held in a private chamber of the State House. After several hours or arguing, no result was reached. The film interests were just as determined that films should be given at least one display to permit the public to judge, rather than a few critics. They stated that they believed that approval of the National Board of Censorship was sufficient, but that they were willing to have an unbiased and unpaid State board pass on all films which might not meet with favor after they had been exhibited once.

The proponents of the bill insisted that all films should be censored before they were publicly exhibited. The result was that Hiram A. Miller presented a bill on behalf of the picture interests. This bill provided for the establishment of an unpaid state board, which would review any film over which there was any discussion.

It is evident that the legislators realized that the proponents of censorship did not know what they wanted and that they thought the easiest way out to solve the problem was to refer the bill to the next general Court.

Southwestern Convention

A Convention of Exhibitors and Exchange Men in the Southwest Is Being Agitated —Idea Finds Encouraging Response—May Be Held in Dallas During Coming Fall—New Orleans People May Help.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A NUMBER of prominent exhibitors and film exchange men have been talking of holding a Southwestern Exhibitors' Convention in Dallas some time during October of this year, and letters are being sent out to a number of exhibitors in Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana to ascertain the sentiment of such an undertaking, before definite plans are arranged.

The exchange men of Dallas are heartily in favor of a convention of this kind and they believe the New Orleans exchanges will help to "put over" a good convention. A number of the exchanges in Dallas handle Louisiana in their territory; and some of them handle Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, the Louisiana territory being handled by an office in New Orleans.

It is pointed out that the interests of exhibitors in these four southwestern states are identical and that plans could be worked out for all states at once, and the strength of such an organization would have much weight in legislative matters.

DALLAS EXCHANGES MOVE.

The film exchanges in Dallas effected by the two-story building clause of the new city ordinance regulating film exchanges, have made arrangements to move or have moved into quarters approved by the municipal authorities.

The Pathe Exchange has moved from 405 Andrews Building to 2004½ Commerce street, where it has much larger and better arranged quarters.

The Apex Feature Service has arranged to move to Rooms 204-5-6, 1919½ Main street; in which building also is the new Peerless Feature Film Co., on the main floor, and the Progressive Feature Film Co., in Rooms 201-2-3 on the second floor, moved from 214-5 Andrews Building.

The Picture Playhouse Film Co. has planned to move on Monday from Room 202 Andrews Building to 1911½ Commerce street.

The Standard Film Co. will move from 1027 Busch Bldg. to 2010½ Commerce street.

With these changes, in the 1900 Block on Main street, there will be the United, Peerless, Progressive, Apex, Western Automatic Music Co., Thrash Film and probably the Dallas Film.

On the same block on Commerce street, the next parallel street, there will be the Metro, World, Fox, Alliance, Picture Playhouse, Consolidated, Southwestern, Paramount and V-L-S-E; while the General, Standard and Pathe will be one block further out on Commerce.

It is understood the Mutual will move from 1807 Main street within the next few weeks, but they have not yet secured a suitable location.

TWENTY-THIRD EXCHANGE IN DALLAS.

The Peerless Feature Film Co., the twenty-third exchange in Dallas, has opened at 1919 Main street, with Harry T. Peebles, manager.

This new addition in the film ranks of Dallas will handle the output of the Gotham Film Company of New York, and will secure about four big productions each month from the open market.

Mr. Peebles was recently manager of the Fox Film Corporation office at Dallas, and some time ago, under the old arrangement, was manager of the Warner's Features office of the same city. He is an experienced film man, having received his training in the ranks from shipping clerk, road man and on up. The Peerless will handle Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

TO MAKE RELIGIOUS PICTURES.

For some weeks, the newspapers have carried articles of rumors of a film producing concern to be organized in Dallas to make religious pictures. Mr. E. J. Matthews of Bowie, Tex., a prominent member of the State Methodist Board, was in Dallas last week, and he gave out an interview to the press in which was stated that arrangements had about been completed for the organization of the new producing company, which will have a capital stock of $200,000.

It is understood the incorporators will be prominent men in the Methodist Church in Dallas and Fort Worth, with Mr. Matthews of Bowie, Tex.

The new company will arrange a series of pictures to be used in connection with the International Sunday School lessons in churches of all denominations.

It will be some weeks before incorporation papers are drawn up.

BUFFALO NEWS OF THE WEEK.

By Billy Bison, Special Correspondent, 229 Oxford avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

GROUND has been broken for the new Keith theater and office building on the Whedon property in South Salina street, Syracuse. The structure will be five stories high and cost about $400,000. The theater will seat 3,000. The front and interior will be very elaborate. The building will have seventy-two feet frontage. The entrance to the theater will be at the north and to the office buildings at the south side of the front. The theater will be on the ground floor. The structure will be fireproof. The Syracuse Theater and Realty Corporation has been incorporated to erect the building. Paul Keith and E. F. Albee are the principal owners. It is planned to have the theater opened on next Thanksgiving day. It is announced that David Bispham, Calve and other stars will be featured at the house.

The Syracuse Regent, Inc., a moving picture corporation, has been organized in Syracuse with a capital of $30,000. Jefferson C. Hatch, Stanley Kingsbury and Bartholomew A. Gibbons are the directors.

The Olympic theater, Buffalo, recently celebrated its first anniversary. Manager Densinger had a special programme of vaudeville and moving pictures in honor of the event.

E. R. Jones has improved the New theater, Buffalo, with two new Powers 6A machines. Mr. Jones has been a traveling representative for Marshall-Field & Co., of Chicago, for thirty years. He opened the New theater eight and a haif years ago. Some time ago he sold the house, which he again took over recently. Chas. C. Lewis is his operator.

Mitchell S. Mark, Eugene L. Falk and John F. Burke, composing the Frontier Holding Co., have bought the Family theater at Broadway and Washington street, Buffalo, from E. G. S. and Annie Miller.

Fire recently damaged part of the stage, scenery and curtain of the Bijou theater, Corning, N. Y. The blaze started ten minutes after the audience had departed from the evening performance. Samuel W. Clark, manager, was quickly summoned and aided the firemen. The blaze originated from some unknown cause under the stage. The Bijou will be reopened about the middle of June.

The Rex theater, a new moving picture house, was recently opened at Yorkville, N. Y. The opening bill included Billie Ritchie in "The Dentist." The price of admission to any part of the house is five cents.

A new $1,000 stage setting, an exact replica of the one used at the Strand theater, New York, has been completed at the Majestic theater, Schenectady, N. Y. The other improvements made at the Majestic by Manager Berystrom include sanitary drinking fountains.

Charles D. Blessing has sold his interest in the Carroll theater in Utica, N. Y. to his partner, E. M. Daly.

Morgan Niles has opened a moving picture theater at Sharon Springs, N. Y.

Fire recently caused a slight damage at the Plymouth moving picture theater at Rochester. The blaze occurred shortly before the afternoon performance.

Joseph Lang, who managed the Adelphi theater, Buffalo, from 1884 to 1892, is dead in Chicago, where at one time he managed the old Halstead Street theater and later the Academy of Music. Lang was formerly a minstrel. After taking part in a benefit performance in Buffalo years ago he received a gold watch, the gift of the late Grover Cleveland, former President. Mr. Cleveland was sheriff of Erie County, N. Y., at the time.

Manager William Hayward is improving the Hayward opera house of Dolgeville, N. Y. A new roof and steel sidings have been built and a new inverted lighting system installed. Raised seats and a convertible floor that can be removed for dancing will be installed. Mr. Hayward will also have a new stage setting and a new Powers 6A machine.

Proprietors of theaters and other places of amusement have been notified by Vincent H. Riordan, internal revenue inspector of Buffalo, that all special licenses expire on June 30th and that all these taxpayers who wish to continue in business must procure and post up their licenses before July 1st. He says those who conduct business without a new license will be reported to the United States district attorney for prosecution.

Royster & Dudley are managing the theater at Rorick's summer resort near Elmira. Light opera and moving pictures will be featured.

In addition to moving pictures Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, is featuring musical comedies for the summer season. The Academy Musical Comedy Co., consisting of twenty-four persons, is giving the performances. Mr. Michael formerly was connected with the Keith interests in Boston, where he received a thorough training in the show business.

William Bean, owner of the Majestic theater, Buffalo, will be a candidate for City Commissioner under the new charter commission next fall. He is endorsed by the Buffalo branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

INDIANA STATE ITEMS.

William E. Burridge has bought the lease and equipment of the Irwin theater, Goshen, from Peter and James Polezoes. The consideration was $1,450. John W. Burridge, son of the purchaser, will be in charge.

Della May McCoy Foster, to use all of it, is visiting her parents at Pennville, Ind., and an effort is being made to get some of the Keystone comedies for exhibit at Portland, the nearest show town, so that D. M. M. F.'s neighbors and friends may see how the "fat lady star" performs.

The Lyric theater attempt to show Johnson-Willard fight pictures at Columbus, Ind., failed. The police would not even allow the distribution of advertising matter.

Royalty W. Bennett and Bruce Hunter have bought the Twentieth Century theater of E. G. Elbe and W. O. Kennedy, the former owners. The theater policy will be changed and some improvements made, the new owners say.

Harry Benson tacked up a piece of crepe on the door of the Madison theater in Laporte, Ind., and notified his creditors that he would pay all his bills.

George W. Sink, Veedersburg, has sold his moving picture show to C. L. Siddios of West Lebanon. Siddios will take charge.

VOTES SAY OHIO CENSORS WERE OFF TRACK.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Majestic theater, of Springfield, O., spent some money on newspaper space last week, gaining thereby some peculiarly good advertising, in adition to that which filled the space. The management invited the public to express its opinion on the production of "The Mystery of Morrow's Rest," which is the well-nigh impenetrable alias under which the Sheldon play erstwhile known as "The Nigger" is now masquerading, by reason of the objections of the Ohio Board of Censors and others. The management, referring to these objections, and to the fact that the Ohio Board originally approved the picture, and then withdrew its approval, preventing the Majestic from showing the picture for the full period for which it was booked, asked whether, in the opinion of its patrons, there was any ground for the action of the Board; and the expressions received were well-nigh unanimous to the effect that there was not. Manager Phil. Chakeras stated that he felt that the notoriety attending the withdrawal of permission to show the picture might very well be construed as unfavorable to the reputation of his high-class house, and took the action referred to in order to show his good faith in the matter, as well as the position of the public on it.

SERIALS IN CINCINNATI.

The arrival of "The Goddess," the Vitagraph feature, was announced in Cincinnati last week by a full page advertisement in the paper in which the story will appear in serial form. A list of the theaters at which the production will appear was also included. "The Diamond From the Sky," the American Film Co.'s $10,000 prize scenario by Roy McCardell, with Lottie Pickford as the head-liner, was similarly announced, together with the contest which will be held for the best solution of the plot. With these two leading serials, and others which are scheduled for appearance later, Cincinnati fans who saw "The Million-Dollar Mystery," "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" and others now nearing a close or already closed, will have plenty to keep them busy this summer.

CINCINNATI NOTES.

Fitzhugh Lee, for several seasons manager of the Sun theater, one of the most popular houses of Portsmouth, O., has severed his conenction with that house, and will probably become connected with some other theatrical venture there. The new manager of the Sun has not yet been announced.

The Majestic, of Springfield, has made arrangements for a series of special travelogues in moving picture form, for use twice a week for the next year, on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons at 4 o'clock. On these days the youngsters will be entertained by the management with pictures which will take them all over the world, and which, therefore, are expected to prove of high educational value, and to appeal strongly to parents who appreciate the importance of good moving pictures.

It is announced by persons interested in the Ivanhoe theater, of Sandusky, O., that the house is to be taken over by Chicago people, who will reopen it at once. The house has been closed since the middle of April, although it is one of the prettiest and most modern in the city. It will make the third of a chain owned by the Chicago prospective purchasers, it is understood, as they now have two houses in Chicago.

The Lasky production of "Stolen Goods," which was featured at the Strand the first part of last week, with Blanche Sweet and House Peters in the leading roles, made a particularly strong appeal at this time.

"White List" of Theaters

"The Catholic Theater Movement," an Organization Whose Object Is to Purify and Uplift the Stage, Is Now Turning Its Attention to Motion Picture Theaters —Proposes to Publish a "White List" of Such as It Approves.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

THE Catholic theater movement, which recently computed a list known as the "White List of Plays," has been extended to moving pictures. In a bulletin recently issued it was pointed out that a censorship of films by the movement is impossible on account of their vast number. The stamp of approval will therefore be placed directly on the moving picture houses.

A "White List of Moving Picture Halls" is proposed. To facilitate the formation of such a list committees will be appointed in each parish. These committees will draft a list of the moving picture houses in the respective districts, after which the managers will be visited and requested to make it a point not to exhibit any pictures which are objectionable from a religious or moral standpoint. Members of the committee will act as censors and will visit the theaters and see if the request has been complied with. If the investigators find an objectionable picture, the name of the theater will be stricken from the list.

The bulletin urged that the committees act prudently. It added, "Allowance must be made for mistakes on the part of the moving picture theater proprietor. Objectionable films will very likely creep in every once in a while. But if there is a persistent failure to present proper films, in spite of warnings, the name will be withdrawn."

NEW SUPERINTENDENT OF EARLE MASTBAUM CO.

John A. McCarthy, a trust officer of the Real Estate Trust Company, Broad and Chestnut streets, has been appointed superintendent and Harry Ertel, well known in moving picture circles in this vicinity, assistant superintendent, of all the moving picture theaters owned and controlled by the Earle Mastbaum Syndicate, among which theaters are the Globe, Stanley, and numerous other well known houses in this city.

JACK DELMAR RECENTLY SICK.

Jack Delmar, the progressive and energetic manager of the Jefferson theater, has recently been confined to his home from an attack of bronchial trouble. Mr. Delmar is one of the most popular men in the motion picture field in this vicinity. At the time of his appointment as manager of the Jefferson, the theater was a losing proposition. In a short period of time Mr. Delmar has not only reversed this condition, but has made the theater one of the best paying propositions in this city.

DR. OBERHOLTZER, NEWLY APPOINTED CENSOR.

Dr. Oberholtzer, the new member of the State Board of Censorship who was recently appointed by Governor Brumbaugh, was surprised by the appointment and recently announced that he had not yet had time to formulate any plans for the carrying out of his duties, save that he pledged himself to give a "fair deal and no favoritism to all manufacturers of films." Dr. Oberholtzer was director of the historical pageants held in Philadelphia during the years of 1908 and 1912, and is the author of various books on historical subjects dealing principally with the Revolutionary and Civil War times in this city and state.

AN ENGAGEMENT REPORTED.

It has been reported in moving picture circles in this city that Mark L. Swaab, son of Louis M. Swaab, of the Swaab Film Service Company, 1327 Vine street, is engaged to be married to Miss Catherine Westwood, of West Philadelphia.

"THE NIGGER" CAUSES TROUBLE.

Jay Emmanuel, proprietor of the Ridge Avenue theater, recently exhibited the picture called "The New Governor," from Sheldon's play, "The Nigger." Result, much agitation in the neighborhood among the colored folks. They congregated in front of the theater and created much disturbance, it becoming necessary to call the police to disperse them.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

Peter Magaro, owner and manager of the Regent, 410 Market street, Harrisburg, Pa., recently announced the installation of a $10,000 Moller pipe organ, which came direct from the factory at Hagerstown.

The abandoned plant of the Hazelton Electric Light and Power Company, installed in 1886 by Thomas A. Edison as the second power corporation in the United States to use his then newly discovered incandescent lights, was recently purchased by A. J. Feeley, who will erect a large theater on the site.

SOUTH BEND WOMEN WOULD CONTROL SHOWS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE women of ten clubs in South Bend are making things interesting for South Bend exhibitors. They are asking that exhibitors exclude sensuous and sex films, and that they do not advertise with "morbid pictures" whatever that means, and that particularly, they should abstain from the use of alluring posters with a warning to the effect that the show is "for adults only." The South Bend women, and the major's public amusement committee, headed by U. G. Manning, are not satisfied to accept the judgment of the Chicago board of censors, and are urging that the Chicago board is too lenient. They are declaring that it is up to the local board to set its own standards.

INDIANA NOTES.

The cool and breezy airdomes in Indiana are still chilled. Several that got early starts have had as many as four "openings." Most of them are rain soaked and discouraged. If the weatherman is found dead, suspicion will point straight to the airdome owner nearby.

The U. S. theater, Noblesville, has started the Ten Commandment series of three-act photo dramas.

The Indiana Union Show, the Indiana University picture show, has started once more in its own interest, after having devoted the earnings to charity for several weeks. Famous Player Company features will be used. Earl Moore, the new manager, is planning a number of improvements for the Indiana Union.

The girl detective series of pictures has caught on in the South Side theater at Greensburg, "Old Isaacson's Diamonds," the second in the series pulling a better than average crowd. Manager Alcorn is pushing along his airdome plans on South Broadway.

The Union Airdome, Richmond, has postponed the opening for the third time.

The Horton Brothers Gaiety Airdome, Rensselaer, cut out the advertising line "good ventilation" in their ad reading "a good roof and good ventilation." Publicity finesse.

WHEN THE MIND SLEEPS (Broadway Favorites' Special Three Parts June 14).—Roberts, who has inherited an estate solely upon the condition that he care for Bess, proves unfaithful to his trust. The girl, although eighteen, possesses the mind of a child. After a vain attempt to make love to Bess, Roberts plans to get rid of her. Tom, who ekes out a scanty living by playing his violin on the streets, meets Bess. The two are attracted to each other. Seeing an opportunity to get the girl out of the way, Roberts tells Tom he can have her. Hall, one of Roberts' friends, is attracted by the girl's beauty. The man informs Tom that it would be a crime for him to marry Bess because she is not in full possession of her mind. Although he realizes this, Tom knows that Bess would suffer a worse fate if left to Hall's tender mercies. He takes the girl to his cabin in the woods. There, as the weeks pass, he teaches her how to sing. Later, the two perform in front of a sanitarium where Hall is taking the rest cure. The head of the institution, Dr. Carlson, is deeply interested in cretinism, or arrested mentality. Believing that he can restore Bess to her normal mind, he requests Tom's permission to perform an operation upon her. The violinist gives his consent.

The operation is performed. Dr. Carlson, however, finds that Bess can remain normal only so long as she receives the stimulant, the formula for which he alone knows, given to patients who have been operated upon for cretinism. Dr. Burke, an assistant at the sanitorium, falls in love with Bess. The girl, ignorant of her life with Tom, returns Burke's love. This angers Laura, Carlson's daughter, who also loves the young doctor. Hall, still determined to gain possession of Bess, abducts her. Burke discovers what has happened and pursues the man. The kidnapper's auto breaks down near Tom's cabin and Hall carries his victim into the hut. There Burke finds him. Aided by Tom, the doctor overpowers the scoundrel. The violinist pleads with Bess to remain with him, but the girl, ignorant of what had transpired prior to the operation, departs with Burke.

Carlson falls in love with his patient. This pleases Laura, who now believes that she can win Burke. Bess is informed that unless she weds Carlson, the latter will refuse to give her the stimulant which keeps her from reverting to her former condition. Thus, the girl is compelled to consent. Burke, heartbroken, resolves to secure the secret formula. Carlson, however, mockingly destroys the document. The desperate lover thereupon attempts to seize the bottle which contains the precious liquid. A terrible fight ensues. Although Burke obtains the stimulant after slaying Carlson, he himself sustains a mortal wound and dies just as he gives the liquid to Bess. But the girl, gazing upon the body of the man she loves, decides that she was far happier when ignorant of worldly things. Deliberately choosing to revert to her former mental condition, Bess throws the stimulant away. Laura presently comes to gloat over her rival, but the girl does not understand—cannot even remember her. Back she goes to the cabin in the forest—and Tom.

RASKEY'S ROAD SHOW (June 15).—Just as Ham, with murder in his eye, is about to slay Bud for dropping a sandbag on his head, the arrival of the members of Raskey's Road Show causes the boss property man to stay his hand. While Bud falls in love with fair and fat Madame Duffy, Ham loses his heart to Goldy, the trapeze performer. Raskey, owner of the show, opens the performance that evening with his magical act. Ham acts as his assistant. But for a little blunder on Ham's part, Raskey's act might have been a success. Unable to stand the wriggling of the rabbit concealed under his shirt, Ham brings it into view several minutes ahead of time.

Goldy's act is next on the program. While waiting for Bud to raise the curtain, the trapeze artist and Ham become so interested in each other that they fail to see the curtain rising. Not until the roar of laughter reaches their ears do they realize what has occurred. Furious, Ham chases Bud. The latter lets go of the trapeze rope and dashes across the stage. Ham, following, is crushed flat when Goldy comes tumbling atop of him. Shortly afterward, Madame Duffy and her trained lion and tiger occupy the stage. The animals get into a fight three minutes after the act commences. Madame Duffy waves her whip in vain. At last, in their efforts to get at each other, the lion and tiger remove their headpieces—revealing Ham and Bud. The show breaks up with promptness and dispatch.

THE VANISHING VASES (Special—Two Parts—June 16).—Micky Weston, a crook, sees Harding admiring a pair of priceless porcelain vases on exhibition at the museum. When the millionaire departs, Weston follows him. Marie and Mears receive word the following morning, that the vases have been stolen. An hour or two after they tackle the case, Weston is arrested as the result of a saloon brawl. A card bearing Harding's address is found in the crook's pocket. At Marie's suggestion, Weston is freed. She and Mears trail him. Late that night, the investigators see him break into Harding's home. Marie and Mears follow the crook into the mansion and capture him. They find Harding bound and gagged.

The sleuths catch the collector in the act of begging Micky to keep silent. The crook, however tells his story. It appears that he had attempted to hold Harding up after following him from the museum, but the millionaire turned the tables. He gave Micky his freedom and promised him $5,000 upon condition that the crook steal the vases he had coveted. Although Weston carrried out his end of the agreement, Harding, after receiving the vases, drove the crook from his mansion. Rendered desperate by the thought of what awaits him, Harding attacks Mears before Marie can interfere. Micky, however, leaps upon the unscrupulous millionaire and saves the detective's life. Although Weston realizes he faces a long term, he chuckles with glee as Harding's wrist is shackled to his own.

RIVAL WAITERS (June 18).—Nothing would please either Gustave or Alphonse more than the sight of the other perishing miserably. A deadly feud exists between the two. His hatred getting the best of him, Gustave heaves a cream puff at his foe. His aim is bad. Instead of hitting Alphonse, the cream puff hits Mae, who is eating at Alphonse's table. Fearing his foe, Gustave beats a retreat. Failing to notice where he is going in his backward march, the waiter lands in Mrs. Junker's lap. The next moment, the woman's strong arms hurl him into the kitchen, where he collides with Pasquale, the chef.

Furious, the chef annoints Gustave with a plate of hot soup. This he follows up with an attempt to make the waiter a target for an egg. Missing Gustave, the egg travels until stopped by the face belonging to Wild Ike, a wild and wooly westerner. Wild Ike promptly unlimbers his artillery and commences a bombardment which makes the effort of the English fleet at the Dardanelles pale into insignificance. In terror, Alphonse and Gustave take refuge under a table. There, fear breaks down the barriers that have existed between them, and they cling together for mutual encouragement.

THE EAGLE OWL (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—The Eagle Owl, the boldest and most ravenous of all owls, is used as a decoy for crow shooting. It is hated and feared by the feathered denizens of the air, and, as shown in this picture, is admirably suited for decoy purposes. The ferocity with which crows make their attack upon the captive eagle owl, shows how deadly is the feud waged between this outlaw and other fowl.

NEAR ETERNITY (Episode No. 32 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—June 19).—Hume, a quarryman, falls between the ties while walking over the Loring Trestle. Only Helen's work in freeing him, saves the man's life. As it is, both are compelled to leap from the trestle into the river to escape death beneath the wheels of a train. The following day, Hume is knocked down by the arm of a mail crane when the 7.14 passenger passes Lone Point. Believing this to be the result of carelessness on the part of Billy, the mail clerk, the quarryman later attacks the boy. Helen, however, comes to Billy's rescue. Intoxication brings about Hume's dismissal. In his befuddled condition, the quarryman in some manner blames this upon Billy and resolves to secure revenge. Stealing several sticks of dynamite, the man climbs to the arms of the crane and ties the explosive to the mail bag.

Helen sees what is taking place. While Hume, staggering away from the track, chuckles as he thinks of Billy's impending fate, Helen climbs to the arm of the crane and unties the dynamite. With the passenger train but a short distance down the track, the telegrapher hurls the explosive away. It lands near Hume. A terrific explosion occurs. Billy, glancing out of his mail car, sees Helen on the crane. He lowers the arm on his car just in time to avoid hitting the girl. The train is halted and its crew hastens to the spot where Hume had stood. They find the man crushed to death beneath tons of earth.

VITAGRAPH.

JONES' HYPNOTIC EYE (June 4).—After attending a hypnotic exhibition in his home town and witnessing the marvelous powers of the professor, leaves the hall thoroughly imbued with the idea that he could be a hypnotist himself without much trouble. He determines to try it, studies at home, and, very much to the amusement of his household, attempts demonstrations upon the cat, the dog and even the chickens, with, of course, no result, except creating laughter among those watching him. Troubles camp on his trail when he attempts to practice on human beings. His beloved wife finds him stroking his stenographer's face in an endeavor to hypnotize her, and, misconstruing it, makes things hum for a while. Next he tries his powers on a bold, bad bookagent, and, for once, the latter is actually frightened out of a sale. On the family's Sunday picnic he has an excellent opportunity to practice hypnotism, and at the same time make a hero of himself, but when he stares into the mild face of the wandering cow and makes passes before her, the animal lowers her head and goes for him. He dodges and Mrs. Cow gallops right through the middle of the lunch carefully spread on the grass. Finally Jones lands in jail on the charge of flirting. With the Magistrate's assistance, Mrs. Jones makes her husband resolve to leave psychological phenomena alone.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES NO. 11—MR. JARR AND THE LADIES' CUP (June 14).—The Dill Pickle Bowling Club, of which Gus, the saloonkeeper is president, notifies its members that they are to bowl that night at the "Cheese Hill Inn," but Mr. Jarr fails to get his card. It happens that that same night the "Inn" holds a dancing contest, offering a cup to the best lady dancer. Clara Mudridge-Smith and her friends, the Misses Cackleberry, call and take Mrs. Jarr to the dancing contest, dragging Mr. Jarr and old Jabez Smith, her husband, along. Mr. Jarr is the only man of their party who can dance and he is kept busy. Gus, Slavinsky and the other bowling club members learn of Jarr's presence, and the poor fellow has to do double duty; bowling and dancing. At home, Gertrude, the Jarr's servant, entertains Claude, her fireman beau, while the Jarr children cut the expensive table cover to ribbons and spill ink all over the new carpet and themselves. The Dill Picklers and the Smith party get into an altercation and all are ejected from the place. Jarr then invites the whole crowd to his flat to wind up the evening. Gertrude and her beau beat it out the rear entrance to the prize dance. Mrs. Jarr finds Gertrude and her beau have drank up all the beer in the house, but this is nothing to the sensation created by the appearance of Willy and Emma. After a few kind remarks on the "delightful evening" they have all spent, the guests depart. When Gertrude turns up next morn with the ladies' cup, Mrs. Jarr's wrath subsides and Gertrude is forgiven.

THE LITTLE DOLL'S DRESSMAKER (Special—Two Parts—June 15).—June, sixteen years old, lame and daughter of a lodging house keeper in the poorer districts, spends most of her time when not sewing for her ill-tempered chorus-girl sister, Nance, in making doll clothes for the children of the neighborhood, who idolize her. The father, feeble and good-natured, is June's good friend and chum, and the two often indulge in surreptitious feasts to which they invite John Lincoln, an impecunious young writer who lodges with them. Gradually a tender love develops between John and his little lame friend. To satisfy her insatiable craving for pretty clothes, Nance steals from an elderly lodger, who notifies the police. The money is found in a bureau used jointly by Nance and June. The former flatly accuses her sister, her mother upholds her, and June is sent to a reform school. There her sunny disposition slowly transforms the whole atmosphere of the school. She gets the roughest element to spend their spare time dressing dolls for the children of the orhpan asylum next door. Through her sweet influence, one of the hardest characters is reformed and through this June comes to the notice of the directors and a cranky old surgeon. He becomes interested in her case and pronounces June's lameness to be curable.

Meanwhile, Nance has eloped with one of their lodgers, only to find at the birth of her baby that she is not his legal wife. She returns home and on her deathbed confesses the theft for which June is paying the penalty. The sanitarium gives a fair, in which dolls made by the inmates are put on sale. June, dresses as a doll, poses on a pedestal with the sign "Not for sale," but John Lincoln, now a successful author, sees the girl, and offers her a loving heart as the purchase price, which June smilingly accepts.

PHILANTHROPIC TOMMY (June 16).—All the joy is taken out of her birthday when, despite her beautiful presents, Tommy, as she is called, is made unhappy by finding she will have to eat her birthday dinner alone. Mr. Moreland, her father, has to keep a business appointment, there's a society reception her mother simply can't neglect, and sister Edith is planning to elope with Walter Pierrepont, a society profligate, of whose real character she is not aware. Poor lonesome Tommy is about to sit down and eat, with the butler for her company when a messenger boy arrives with a note for Edith. It is from Pierrepont, postponing the hour of rendezvous. Tommy takes pity on the boy's hungry appearance and invites him to her party. "Mother Mary," a poor old lady, comes to beg at the back door and Tommy insists that she, too, come in. They have no sooner started than Bill, the burglar, comes to rob the house, and is discovered by Tommy, who, although frightened at first, politely invites him in also. Touched at her childish faith, the crook awkwardly follows her to the dining room, where the butler seats them all. While this is going on Edith, tired of waiting for Pierrepont, returns home. Mr. Moreland finds himself involved in a crooked business deal and phones his wife to meet him at the house at once. Their arrival, together with Edith's, breaks up Tommy's party and, dismayed, she quickly hides her queer guests. They are discovered as the business promoter arrives and demands money. The burglar recognizes the fellow as his escaped cellmate, and he goes out like a whipped cur. Pierrepont arrives and Tommy exposes the rascal's villainy. He leaves the house forever and the Moreland family, happily reunited, tenderly watch Tommy blowing out the candles on her birthday cake.

TO THE DEATH (June 17).—The Warrens and the Darbys, sworn enemies, are engaged in a deadly feud until finally but one member of each family remains alive—Jim Warren and Joe Darby. By chance, some years later, Jim gets a job at the ranch where Joe is employed. The two men recognize each other and the old hatred breaks out anew. While out riding the range the two men get to fighting. They are seen by an old miner and hermit, who, after learning the cause of their quarrel, says: "You think you hate each other, but to convince yourselves that the hate is not genuine, will you take a test?" They assent, and leading them to his cabin, he shows them a box containing a huge rattlesnake. He suggests Jim and Joe cut the cards and the first to turn up an ace thrust his hand into the rattlesnake box. Watching each other narrowly, the men commence cutting the cards until, finally, Joe turns up an ace. Goaded on by the taunts of the other, he plunges his hand into the box. The snake strikes and, overcome by horror, he sinks into a chair, watching the little red spot on his arm as if fascinated. For a while Jim gloats over his enemy's fate, but gradually his sneer changes to a look of pity, and he grasps Joe's arm in an attempt to suck out the poison. With a smile of satisfaction the old miner then explains that the snake is perfectly harmless—that he had extracted its fangs. They turn to Joe, only to find the man is dead—he has died of fright.

A MISTAKE IN TYPESETTING (June 18).—Mark Pelham and Mulvina Minchen have been engaged when young, but quarreled over some foolish trifle and parted. Mark is well-to-do and a bachelor, while she is a spinster and living on a very small income. Her one pet is a little dog, Fido, which has a bad habit of barking and yapping at all hours, until her landlady informs Mulvina she must either get rid of the dog or get out. The lady sadly puts an ad in the paper in hopes that some kind person will see it and undertake the care of Fido. Mrs. Murphy, a hard-working Irish woman, is left a widow with her daughter's child, but unable to care for it, advertises for someone to adopt it. Miss Minchen lives at 298 W. 65th street and Mrs. Murphy at 298 E. 65th street. Harry Bates, the typesetter, his head full of his girl Jessie, blunderingly makes the baby ad read west and the dog ad east. Mr. Jamieson, a kind-hearted man, sees the dog ad and tells his wife he is going to investigate. Knowing his easy-going nature, she follows him to see he does not get stuck with some miserable mongrel. Mark Pulham spies the baby ad and resolves to adopt it. Jamieson arrives at Mrs. Murphy's, and the good woman places the baby in his arms, to his great astonishment. Mrs. Jamieson sees this and, horrified, fears the worst. Meanwhile, Pulham calls on Mulvina, and after a joyful runion, offers to care for her and her child, supposing her to be a widow. She is naturally indignant and the poor fellow gets in very wrong. However, after the arrival of Mrs. Jamieson, explanations clear up matters. Mark gives Mrs. Murphy a position as housekeeper, allowing her to keep her little grandchild, while Mulvina, now his wife, shares her husband's affection with Fido.

MISS JEKYLL AND MADAME HYDE (Special—June 19—Broadway Star Feature).—Madeline Jekyll meets Barch Stana, a distinguished looking man, and finds her father has promised her in marriage to Daggerts, a politician, who, in reward, has agreed to see that Jekyll is elected governor. Madeline is already in love with Robert Mayhew, and rebels at the prearranged marriage. Later Madeline overhears Baron Stana and Daggerts threatening to expose Jekyll because he has forged Daggert's name to a note, unless he gives his daughter's hand to Daggerts. To save her father she stops Daggerts with the demand "What is your price?" He replies, "You!" And she agrees to marry him in return for which he hands over to her the incriminating note. When Jekyll learns of his daughter's sacrifice he is almost crazed with grief, and that night dies of a broken heart. Madeline, in her boudoir, dreams that Stana appears before her. He tells her that Daggerts loves her for her purity and innocence and to escape him, she must become the antithesis of this: hard, sophisticated and reckless. Stana then takes her to a luxurious dance saloon. Horace, a young gentleman of leisure, falls in love with her, but meets only ruin and death, while she and Stana continue on their way until, finally, Madeline sees herself old, dissipated and forlorn. Then Stana taunts her and she kills him. Awakening from her dream Madeline learns of her father's death. Daggerts and Stana quarrel and the former is frightened to discover that bullets have no effect on the Baron, who, with a sardonic laugh says, "I am Satan, and you are mine!" Daggerts drops dead from heart failure, leaving Madeline and Mayhew to their complete love and happiness.

LUBIN.

ROAD O' STRIFE (Series No. 11, "The Valley of the Shadow"—June 14).—The date set for the execution of Alene for the murder of Gilbert Jerome is only one day off, and there appears no hope of saving her, the governor having refused to intervene. With a desperate effort, Robert Dane shakes off the stupor of despair which has numbed his brain and strains every faculty in an effort to find the key to the mystery. He is absolutely sure of Alene's complete innocence and that she is the victim of strange circumstances. Suddenly a light seems to break through the darkness, but so strange and startling is its suggestion that he is almost forced to regard it as an insane fancy rather than a logical deduction. Yet, to every test of reasoning, the idea persists, and he realizes that, assuming Alene's innocence, it must be the truth, and that in the silver cup is the secret of Gilbert's death. The mysterious words upon the cup assume meaning as he now recalls them:

Drink without a fear
Life I promise here—
But death to whoso' dare
Touch his lips elsewhere

Dane appeals to the court officials for permission to experiment with the cup, but is told that it is a part of the records and cannot be permitted in his possession. He realizes that to urge his theory without positive proof would be utterly futile, but does not for an instant abandon his plan to save the girl he loves from the gallows. He makes a quick trip to Elmhurst, returning with a flask of water from the mineral spring, and when the courthouse is untenanted except for a night watchman, undertakes to steal the silver cup, from the court records. He succeeds in gaining possession of the cup, but is fired upon by the watchman, who also sends in a police call. Dane, with the cup, reaches his room, though he is badly wounded. The court officials recall Dane's effort to borrow the cup, and the description given by the watchman identifies Dane as the thief. Detectives at once set out for his lodging house. Meanwhile, ignoring the wound through which his lifeblood is being drained away, Dane works with desperate swiftness to prove by chemical analysis and coordination that his startling theory is fact. There is little time to lose—it is now a matter of hours only before the law will demand of Alene her life.

CAPTURING BAD BILL (June 15).—Bill was such a bad man that the insurance companies would not let their clients run for sheriff of Mustard County and the mayor had to advertise the job. Even then there were no applicants until Pete Pepper, tired of feeding Bill and then having his restaurant shot up, took the job and the badge. Bill was a man of his word. He promised to pay the funeral expenses of the sheriff and right away he sent an undertaker to measure Pete for a coffin, which so cheered Mary, Pete's wife, that she bought a widow's cap and weeds, which cheered Pete a whole lot.

But he was not such a fool after all. He knew that Bill would continue to favor him with his patronage and the first time he did so Pete doped his coffee. As the other brave citi-

Make Your Theatre the Coolest Place in Town

Put G-E Six blade oscillating fans in your theatre—as they swing from side to side they search out the stuffy corners and keep the air in motion—fresh and cool. They run silently, without rustle, rattle or vibration—there is no distraction from the full enjoyment of the show.

A cool place inside is a good investment—which is realized in the box office at the end of the day. Insist on the

Six Blade Oscillating Fan

See that the G-E trade mark is on the center. Then you will be sure of getting the fan that is built especially for moving picture theatres; you can be sure also of your fans lasting season after season without the slightest trouble or attention beyond oiling once a year.

Those are the kind of fans to get—that will be just as good five or six years hence as they are today. Every G-E Fan is like that, because it has G-E quality and over twenty-five years' experience and knowledge in fan building behind it.

CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS (June 15).—Jim More, the local Justice of the Peace, has little peace in his home life. Samanthy, his wife, has decided views as to the conduct of the family bread winner. When she catches him joining "the boys" in the great American game (poker) to the neglect of his household duties, she confiscates the jack pot and the deck, sending the boys on their way, and Jim about his duties.

However, he soon makes his get-away, and, with the boys, seeks a peaceful game in a vacant building. Samanthy discovers this and decides to teach Jim a lesson. She sends for the police and adjourns to the building next door to witness the raid. The game is at a high point when the police arrive. The boys escape by jumping to the window of the next building and into the very room where Samanthy is watching. The police follow and all are captured, including Samanthy, but Jim escapes by hiding in a packing box and returns to his office where the culprits are brought to trial. The boys are found "not guilty," there being no evidence against them. But cards, money and chips are found in Samanthy's pockets and on this evidence Jim gives her thirty days. She is dragged out of the court room, and the Judge settles down for a peaceful game with the boys.

THE INSURRECTION (Special—Three parts—June 16).—Lieutenant Charles Hubbard, who has met Lolita on a previous trip to South American waters, renews his acquaintanceship when the fleet is ordered there to quell an outbreak which threatened American interests. Lolita's father, professedly a doctor, is the active head of the revolution, and observing the young lieutenant's infatuation for his daughter, sees a way to embroil the United States in his quarrel. He lets his daughter understand that an attack will be made upon the fleet from the south shore and she conveys the information to the lieutenant. He in turn advises the admiral and all precautions are made for a south shore attack, leaving the north shore entirely unguarded. The revolutionists dress their men the same as the American sailors and a landing party reaches the north shore and surprises the battery placed on the hill and commanded by Lieutenant Hubbard. The skirmish is short; Hubbard is captured and to die at dawn.

Meanwhile, the admiral has learned of the attack and sends a message to the Governor that unless the captured men and those responsible for the outbreak surrendered by noon the next day, he shall shell the town. The revolutionists, satiated with glory, send no reply. Lolita pleads for her sweetheart's life, but finds little response. Thinking there is no hope, and realizing their deep mutual love, she resolves to die with him. Some poison pellets in her father's office open a way out of the trouble, and taking them, she secretly visits his prison. She talks with him through his window, but refuses to be dissuaded from her purpose to die with him at dawn. Learning a massacre of foreigners is planned for midnight, Hubbard tells her how to signal the fleet fearing she, personally, might not be able to reach them. She leaves, vowing that if she fails she will die rather than live without Hubbard.

Captured and confined to her bedroom before she can send word to the fleet, the flashlights of the battleships give her a desperate idea. As a beam of light strikes full upon her at the window, she frantically signals; the light sheers off, returns and holds. The message regarding the massacre of the foreigners at midnight is brought to the admiral and a revolutionist just brought before him confirms it. He orders the town shelled. Lolita's father and the other revolutionists are about to depart from the former's home to put into effect their direful purpose when the boom of the fleets' big guns are heard. The town is shelled and catches fire. All the revolutionists but Lolita's father losing their nerve flee. Hubbard's prison shack is struck by a shell and he staggers out of the flaming debris free, but with the awful thought that Lolita will take the poison tablet before he can reach her. Dawn finds him in front of her home. He staggers in and is confronted by the doctor. They grapple below in the library while Lolita, unaware, is preparing with the first streaks of light to meet her fate. Hubbard, in a frenzy of strength, overcomes the doctor and pounds on Lolita's bedroom door just as the poison tablet reaches her lips. Out on the bay the revolutionists, finding the town in the hands of the American sailors, are trying to escape to sea. A shot ploughs across their bows unheeded. Lolita and Hubbard are roused from their happy reunion by the sound of an explosion. A torpedo following the shot has stopped their boat at the mouth of the bay.

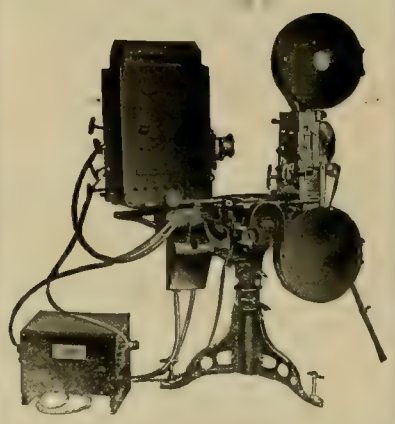
Because it Serves You Right



The Master Model

From Mr. Stanley Kelley of the Vernon Theatre, Long Island City, New York, comes this letter:

"We have in operation two STANDARDS and will cheerfully say that we have no complaint to make against the machine. I am willing to wager any amount that we project or produce the steadiest projected picture in Greater New York. I am satisfied with the STANDARD."

During its seven years of existence the American Standard Motion Picture Machine has won the approval of exhibitors and the esteem of operators, due to its perfect service.

Because the earlier models of the STANDARD served them right, STANDARD users are now buying our MASTER MODEL.

The American Standard MASTER MODEL is a projector with which every up-to-date exhibitor and operator should be acquainted.

FROM CHAMPION TO TRAMP (Special—Two Parts—June 17).—Shirley Christy, Champion Mile Runner of the World, has become a tramp and finds himself in the mountains of Arizona. Looking back over the cause of his present condition, we see his enemy, Anderson, strike down a running mate at one of the International Meets. Shirley is falsely accused, tried and condemned, although he is innocent. His enemy has the Board of Directors of the International Athletic Club to dismiss him for all time, and as a tramp he wanders aimlessly about the mountains and the deserts heartbroken. His old grey-haired mother is pining away and praying for her son's return.

Shirley strikes a new mining camp where he seeks work, and to his amazement discovers Anderson. Anderson is about to enter a fixed race in the new mining camp,and at the last moment determines to double-cross his running mate, when Christy stumbles upon the runner that Anderson has doped and takes his place, winning again from his enemy. The runner, after recovering, tells the sheriff of the incident and produces the bottle which Anderson had taken the medicine from which incapacitated Jamison, the runner. In the fight which follows, Christy saves the owner of the mine and his daughter from serious injury and perhaps their lives. He is rewarded by being taken in by the mine owner and given a position. The daughter feels strangely drawn to this man, who finally, through a confession secured from Anderson, proves the guilty must pay the penalty for their crimes and virtue its reward secures. With a loving thought and yearning for his dear mother, he tells the girl of her, and we leave him as it was meant to be, every inch a man and no longer the tramp.

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS (June 18).—Robert Jarvis, a young bridge contractor without contracts, loves Rita Gray, daughter of Richmond Gray, a banker. Gray objects to the match on the grounds that Robert is not able to support Rita. The city of Brockton, where the action takes place, is about to let the contract for a $200,000 concrete bridge. Barney Riley, alderman, is in search of a hardup contractor who will come through with a slice of the spoils. Riley calls on Robert when the latter is disconsolate over the result of his affair with Rita. The alderman cheers him by announcing that he will see that Robert gets a contract for the new bridge. The contract is duly awarded to Robert, and on the strength of it, Gray agrees to the marriage or Rita and Robert if the young contractor makes good. The bridge proves more costly than anticipated and Robert finds himself facing ruin if he does not complete the structure according to the specifications. To add to his troubles, Riley at this time demands $10,000 as his share for delivering the contract. Robert blankly refuses. Riley sends the city building inspector to the bridge and the latter tells Robert that he will condemn the entire structure unless the $10,000 is forthcoming. Under such pressure, Robert is compelled to "come through." Facing bankruptcy and the loss of Rita, the young contractor, after a severe struggle with his conscience, determines to insure himself a profit from the construction of the bridge by using an inferior grade of cement in the remaining arches. The bridge completed, Robert prepares for his marriage to Rita. The wedding night arrives. On the way to the church, where Rita and her father are waiting, Robert buys a newspaper extra. The Brockton bridge has collapsed, killing twenty people, and the arrest of the contractor, Riley and the city building inspector has been ordered. Robert sees only one way out. He goes to his office and, before the police arrive, ends it all with a bullet.

A SAFE INVESTMENT (June 19).—Mr. Hoppington is kept on the hop in his endeavors to retain his position as head of the house. He has just discharged the servant girl because she was not good looking, and his wife is forced to prepare the breakfast. Mrs. Hoppington goes about it unwillingly and when Hop does not appear downstairs on time, she awakens him in a novel and effective maner, which brings him down on the run.

In the meantime the wife has telephoned for a new servant, and while they are eating, the doorbell rings. Mr. Hoppington condescends to answer. It proves to be the new girl, and a good looker. At once he is interested, and before a flirtation can be started, the wife pilots the girl inside. Mr. Hoppington hurries around the house and commences a flirtation, with the result that the girl is fired by the wife.

Mrs. Hoppington's husband always accompanies her on her shopping tours, but one trouble she has is that he cannot be left for any length of time before he starts a flirtation. Although loaded down with bundles he still seizes every opportunity to flirt, but a happy thought strikes her and she makes a purchase that cures him of all future efforts in that line, and when he has made a safe delivery of it, he is

CARTOONS IN THE PARLOR (June 16).—There are various bits of acting injected between the cartoon subjects. Mrs. Waite chaperones her daughter and the latter's sweetheart rather severely advising them to wait until they are married before they kiss. The Grouch Chaser is produced and soon mamma is distracted from the young persons by it and the lovers are not disturbed for a time.

The first cartoon is another of "The Hicks in Nightmareland." Hercules, this time, dreams that he takes a tonic which gives him great strength. He lifts a safe into a trunk with the ease of a Sampson crushing a toothpick. He wakes up to find his wife slapping his little bald head because he had talked loudly in his sleep. "The Three Loose Jointed Dancers" shows a dwarfed colored man with a silk hat, an ostrich and a skeletonic son of Terpischore tripping the light fantastic.

Some clever cartoon work is also seen in "The Lovers' Version of a Chaperone." The two lovers are seated on the sofa with the ugly chaperone guarding them. Suddenly the chaperone evolves into a most hideous dragon. In this monstrous form the chaperone continues to glare at the couple through its bulging eyes, and opens the large mouth wide, showing its fangs. The dragon is then reduced to the chaperone again. The real chaperone sees the picture and realizes that it is time for her to make herself scarce.

THE WORKING OF A MIRACLE (Special—Three Parts—June 18).—Roy Conover has just returned to his village home from college. At church the villagers wonder why Roy does not accompany his mother into the edifice. He smilingly declines to enter, and as he walks off, meets Mary Turner, a school teacher, and ward of Jason Kent, a religious fanatic. Roy is subsequently introduced to her and they soon become friends. Kent is very jealous and reproaches Mary for keeping company with an infidel. He spends most of his time reading religious books and pamphlets.

Angered because Mary takes so much interest in Roy, Kent, himself desirous of marrying her, orders her to keep away from him and when she refuses, determines to force her. He forges a note to her, asking her to be at the cliff at seven o'clock in the evening. Mary, thinking the note genuine and written by Roy, arrives at the cliff on time. She meets Kent who tries to embrace her, and dissuade her from associating with Roy. The latter appears and has a battle with Kent, who, after having been knocked down by a well-directed punch, strikes Roy with his cane. Roy falls over the cliff, and when picked up later is found to be alive. Kent explains to the people and authorities that he struck Roy to save the girl, and in self-defense. Thus sentiment is stirred up against Roy and Mary.

Roy is told that he will be paralyzed from the waist down, and thinking himself unworthy of Mary in that condition, asks that their engagement be broken. Mary thinks that he has lost faith in her, and sorrowfully hands back the ring. She is dismissed from the school, the trustees thinking a person found under the circumstances Kent said she was, unfit to teach children. She tries to get work in vain and even more strongly refuses Kent's overtures for marriage. On one afternoon, Roy, always watching for Mary through field glasses, sees her in an encounter with Kent. The later gets the better of her, and throws her upon the railroad tracks to save her from the infidel, as he put it. Roy can see no help near, and rising from his chair, makes an effort to run. He can and is soon at Mary's side. He pulls her from the tracks as the express whizzes by. Then there is an understanding.

THE CORPORAL'S DAUGHTER (June 19).—Kate, the corporal's daughter, has been snubbed and humiliated by her sweetheart, Lieutenant Garrison. On the day in question, on the parade ground near Fort Millierton during the period when hundreds of whites were being murdered by the Indians in the border wars, Lieutenant Garrison neglects to recognize Kate as he passes by with some aristocratic friends whem he is showing around. Subsequently, Kate gives back her engagement ring and will not even listen to explanations. Changes have been ordered at the garrison, and Kate leaves with her father. At the new location, she is warned not to go far from the garrison because of the activities of the Indians in that section. She meets Tom Keen, a government scout, and they become interested in each other at once. A few minutes later he sees Indians attack Kate and rides off with a detachment of men to her assistance. She is rescued.

A few days after, Tom and Kate are playing checkers and Tom makes a significant move, asking Kate to be his wife. She accepts. Soon after, a new consignment of troops with Lieutenant Garrison in command, arrive at the garrison where Tom and Kate are. A report is brought in that a massacre has just taken place. Troops ride out, including Lieutenant Garrison and Tom. They occupy a basin at the floor of a mountain. Against the face of the cliff is a boulder and down the almost perpendicular precipice is a large vine. The men are finally unable to get out as an attempt of this kind would mean certain death. At night a man is sent out, making his way up the vine and escaping. He gives the alarm at the fort, but the commander does not want to leave women and children alone and refrains from sending men to the assistance of the prisoners, preferring to wait for reinforcements. Kate, attired as a squaw, goes to the place where the men are entrapped, first learning from an old Indian at the fort that escape could be made through a tunnel in the mountain, dug for a coal mine. The men draw straws to determine who shall remain to cover up the escape of the majority, and Tom, who saw a change come over his wife when she saw Garrison, draws two cards. He gives the card of escape to Garrison and decides to remain. Kate determines to remain with him, because she says she prefers death to separation from him. Troops arrive from the fort together with the news that Garrison has been killed.

FATHER FORGOT (June 10).—Having decided that his son must "settle down," John Burns sent George to the home of Jim Perkins, his friend, to meet and marry Mr. Perkins' daughter Nellie. As George alighted from the train he met Lucy, who is also on her way to the Perkins home to visit Nellie. In a short time George has fallen in love and has married Lucy, while Nellie becomes the wife of Jack Sutton. George telegraphs the news of the wedding but fails to mention his bride's name. His father, of course, assumes that daughter-in-law is no other than Nellie.

George is in a quandary when he receives a note from his father saying that he has decided to call on the newlyweds. He fears the parental wrath that is sure to come down upon him for marrying another than his father's choice. To help him out of his dilemma he consults Jack, who suggests that they exchange wives until Lucy can win over George's father. Acting upon the suggestion George has Nellie by his side when his father arrives. But the two grooms cannot bear to be separated from their wives and whenever Mr. Burns steps out of sight only to return a moment later he finds his son embracing Lucy, and Nellie entwined in the arms of Jack.

Realizing that George's father suspects something unusual in this situation, Lucy tries to win over Mr. Burns before their secret is out. She succeeds so well that Mr. Burns forgets himself so far as to put his arms around her just as Jack, her supposed husband, enters upon the scene. This leads to a perplexing situation, finally culminating in a fistic argument in which every member of the party participates. When the argument seems to have become too merry George steps in, explains everything to his father, who forgives the newlyweds.

ESSANAY.

WHOSE WAS THE SHAME? (June 14).—Reuben Hewett paints a portrait of Camilla Lohen and falls in love with her. Hewett's father, anxious for his son's success, has slaved for him on the old farm for years. When Reuben discovers his love, he is a bit ashamed of the old father. Luke Pelham, Reuben's friend, suggests that Reuben invite Camilla to the farm where she may see the old father and decide for herself. He does so and she is greatly taken with the kindly old man. On the farm Reuben is ashamed of his momentary feeling toward his father and confesses it to Camilla. She says that her father sold her as a mere child to a man who was not fitted to meet a woman. He tells her of his love and she happily replies that she is glad not only to have won his love but that of a real father.

THE LITTLE DECEIVER (Special—Three Parts—June 15).—Henry and Tom Bisbee love the same girl. Tom wins her and Henry is embittered, turning into a crabbed old bachelor. Frances, at the age of sixteen, is left an orphan. Her mother left a letter asking the uncle, Henry Bisbee, to take care of the daughter. He, much against his will, decides to accept the trust if it is a boy. Frances disguises as a boy and goes to her uncle, who receives her coldly. She loves flowers, books and pretty things. The uncle finds a mirror and powder puff in her bureau and accuses the supposed boy of being a "sissy." "Jerry the Rat" tries to rob the house and is prevented by Frances. The noise calls everybody to the scene and Frances faints. Her sex is discovered, but the uncle has learned to love her and forgives her. He then reveals the tragic story of his love for her mother and the duplicity of his brother, Tom. Dick Truesdale, who is the only young man the crabbed old uncle would tolerate at his home, finds a great charm in Frances, when she is supposed to be a boy. When he discovers she is a girl, he tells her of his love and finds it is reciprocated.

VAIN JUSTICE (Special—Two Parts—June 19).—Lieutenant Pendragon, Betty's brother, is surprised with his command near his home by Union soldiers under command of Captain Rutledge and taken prisoner. Pendragon tries to escape and after a terrific hand-to-hand fight perishes. Betty swears vengeance. That night she finds Rutledge badly wounded on the battlefield. She has him taken to her home where she nurses him back to health and strength, but all the time nursing her revenge. Rutledge wins her love and she becomes torn between love for him and desire for vengeance. Love conquers when Pendragon appears and tells how he escaped death in the river. He takes Rutledge prisoner, but the latter and Betty renew their pledges of love and Rutleuge promises to return for her after the war is ended.

THE BROKEN PLEDGE (June 17).—Three young girls, pledged to spinsterhood and contempt for mankind, go camping in the woods. Three boys, unpledged to anything save fun and the joy of living, likewise go camping. Fate spins the wheel and the six—pledged and unpledged—pitch their tent not far apart. The boys get curious about their neighbors and investigate. The girls spurn their advances and the boys retreat in good order to plan a new campaign. The boys play Indians and frighten the girls into hysterics, almost. One of the girls, in the excitement, fires a gun. The shot strikes one of the boys, inflicting a slight wound. He sends word to the girls' camp that he is wounded unto death and needs the ministrations of one of the girls, or he may die. Womanly sympathy gets the upper hand and the girls go to the boys' tent. Cupid does the rest and the play ends in a triple love making and prospective marriages.

BRONCHO BILLY'S WORD OF HONOR (June 4).—Broncho Billy and his pals hold up a stage coach. In rifling the mail bag, Broncho discovers a letter from his mother in which she begs him to come back home, as she is dying. Before he can comply, he and his band are captured. He is placed in charge of a young man, who hopes to get enough money from the reward for the capture of the bandits to marry his sweetheart. Broncho shows him the letter. He is touched and lets Broncho go on his word of honor that he will return. Broncho is detained longer at the bedside of his mother than he expected. Finally she dies and he returns. His capturer in the meantime, has been stripped of his badge and disgraced for letting his prisoner go. When Broncho returns he is restored to his rank.

DREAMY DUD, "In the Swim" (June 16).—In this cartoon Dud and Wag, his dog, eat too much jam and at once swell up to enormous size, just as Dud's mother told him he would if they stole jam. The shrink just as quickly and become so small that Dud can just look over the top of a tea cup, filled with milk and standing in a sauver. Dud balances on the edge of the cup and does high dives, as does Wag. They tire of this just as Mr. Cat comes along. Dud climbs down on the floor, where Mr. Cat plays with him as it would with a ball of yarn, incidentally giving Dud a "ride a cock horse to Banbury Cross" on its tail. Wag interferes and Mr. Cat chases him until he is tired. Mr. Cat goes back to the cup and saucer, where Dud is high diving again. Mr. Cat drinks all the milk leaving Dud high and dry in the bottom. Mr. Cat is about to swallow the terrified Dud, when he wakes up to hear his mother scolding him for eating the jam.

Queenstown, Ireland.—Last honors are paid to the victims of the Lusitania. Stirring pictures show the survivors of the great disaster, the lifeboats of the ship, the temporary morgue where victims are identified, the manner in which the caskets were marked, the soldiers digging graves and the long funeral procession to the cemetery and the services at the great grave where many bodies were interred.

THE WEB OF CRIME (Special—Two Parts, June 7).—Marion Ward is the daughter of a woman who conducts a thieves' den. Tom Egan, a criminal, makes Mag Ward's home a rendezvous. Marion, never knowing any other life, does not realize the difference between right and wrong. After an unusually successful haul, Egan resolves to celebrate the event with a wedding. Marion overhears her mother and Egan planning and tells Sandy Murry, another crook, that she will not marry Egan. They escape. Marion finally reaches a picturesque fishing village where she meets Earl Worth, a young fisherman. He takes her to his mother's home.

Egan, now a fugitive from justice, reaches the fishing village where he finds Marion. Earl sees her talking to the stranger and believes that she has deceived him. He is downcast and on the verge of denouncing her when detectives appear. They see Marion and by watching her they locate Egan. Egan spies the detectives. He forces Marion into a boat, and a thrilling race ensues. Egan tries to jump into the sea and drag Marion with him. Earl Worth makes a flying leap to Marion's rescue, lands safely, deals Egan a crushing blow and the crook is knocked into the sea where he drowns.

SAVED BY HER HORSE (June 8).—A party of settlers emigrating westward with a wagon train to find new homes, go into camp for the night. Tom Golden bids his sweetheart, Nell, good-bye and rides off into the hills to look for hostile Indians. Savages are discovered. Nell offers to go for help, and is captured by Indians after her horse escapes. The horse, Tony, finds Nell's hat and carries it to the settler's camp, in his mouth. Tom Golden starts in search for Nell, with Nell's horse leading the way. Nell's horse, Tony, runs to the Indian camp; Nell hears him neigh and she whistles. He runs to her, and she mounts him and starts to find help.

WILLIE GOES TO SEA (June 9).—Willie, arriving at the dock, is surprised and pained to see his sweetheart embark on a vessel with his rival in love. Willie summons up courage and secretes himself in a large packing case, which is nailed shut, and is hoisted into the hold of the vessel.

Willie's effeminate ways earn much trouble for him. He is a failure at scrubbing the deck and at peeling potatoes. Willie finally conceives the great idea. He studies up the art of boxing, engages members of the crew in fistic combat, and overcomes one after another, including the captain of the ship. Finally it is discovered that Willie has secreted a horse shoe in a boxing glove, and his plot so wins the admiration of the captain that Willie is given all conveniences of the vessel.

BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT

The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

PALS IN BLUE (Special—Three Parts—June 10).—Tom and Jerry join a traveling circus as rough riders. After a few months of circus life Tom becomes dissatisfied and longs for the West. At this juncture the circus is unable to meet expenses and is attached by the sheriff. Tom and Jerry, out of employment, sell their saddles and plan to leave at once for the West. A chance acquaintance springs up in the town between Tom, Jerry and two girls. Jerry carries his own and Tom's money from the sale of the saddles, and one of the girls unsuspectingly gets the money from Jerry's pocket. Tom and Jerry are unable to pay when the waiter of the cafe presents the bill. An argument results, and Tom shoots up the place. They are arrested and sentenced to fifteen days in jail. Upon their release Tom and Jerry join the U. S. Army and are sent with a detachment of recruits to do duty at Fort Apache, Ariz. Jessie, the wife of Lieut. Manning, arrives from the east simultaneously with the appearance of Tom and Jerry. Captain Shiers, the commanding officer, drills Tom and Jerry with other recruits. Captain Shiers becomes infatuated with Lieutenant Manning's wife, but the lieutenant overhears it all and encounters the captain, who leaves the house.

Captain Shiers is informed that the paymaster will arrive at the depot, several miles away, with money for the troops. The captain plots to get rid of the lieutenant and win his wife. He sends Lieutenant Manning with a small escort of troops to meet the paymaster. The captain then sends a halfbreed Indian to notify some hostile Indians, whom Lieutenant Manning has kept subdued in the past, that they can avenge themselves on the lieutenant by attacking the stage. The half breed delivers the message to the Indians, who open fire on the stage coach and surround it. The Indians also surround the station which has been fortified by the troopers. Captain Shiers at the fort has been trying to force his attentions again on Lieutenant Manning's wife, but with no success.

The fight between the soldiers and Indians continues unabated. Tom and Jerry volunteer to go to the fort for help. There is another running fight, in which Tom falls from his horse, his foot catches in the stirrup and he is dragged. The horse falls; Tom gets free as Jerry rides up, and Tom jumps up behind Jerry, and they make another effort to reach the fort. Jerry is shot from his horse by pursuing Indians, and Tom, after seeing Jerry is lifeless, shoots and kills one of the Indians and rides onward. Tom arrives at Fort Apache and a detachment of troopers is dispatched immediately to the station. The Indians decide to burn up the station by another method. They take the wheels from the overturned stagecoach, tie rags on them and roll them down hill. This method is successful and the station soon becomes a mass of flames. The troopers still hold out.

Mrs. Manning, at the fort, cares for Tom in the hospital. She goes to her home for medicine when she is again accosted by Captain Shiers. She repulses his actions; he becomes angry and tells her of his plan for revenge. He embraces her and she screams and there is a struggle. Tom, lying in the hospital, hears Mrs. Manning's screams. He slowly rises, takes his six-shooter and staggers to the home of Lieutenant Manning. He sees the struggle inside and shoots and kills Captain Shiers. The troopers sent from the fort now arrive and the Indians are defeated. The troopers in the burning station are rescued. Upon entering his home on arrival at the fort, Lieutenant Manning finds his wife nursing Tom. Mrs. Manning explains all to her husband, who shows his gratitude to Tom. Jerry is laid to rest with honors due a brave soldier.

THE JOURNEY'S END (June 12).—Garland Grant, an author, has written a book entitled "Journeys Through India." He has returned from India and Ned Bradford, a hunter, visits him. Bradford tells Grant that he has often wondered why Grant has never married. Grant and Helen Gray are looking forward to meeting each other after a long correspondence, which has developed a strong love interest. Helen becomes ill and pines away.

At the end of a month Bradford kills a tiger. He carries it home and is congratulated by Grant. The tiger's mate follows the scent. Grant reclines in a hammock thinking of Helen. The wild beast, tracing its dead mate, comes into the enclosure and springs upon Grant, who becomes a victim of its teeth. Helen, in an invalid's chair, enters into the sleep that knows no awakening, and the spirit form of Helen meets Grant's approaching spirit.

LETTERS ENTANGLED (Special—Two Parts, June 14). John Wilson and Grace Livingston are sweethearts. John goes to the city. He writes a letter, telling Grace to keep their secret and as soon as he gets a position they will be married. Grace's aunt finds this letter and makes Grace leave the house. Grace goes to the city. Her aunt returns John's letter in which he gives his address, and so they lose track of each other. Grace gets a position in Mrs. Day's dressmaking establishment, and Mrs. Day gives her a home. A little daughter is born to Grace.

Sixteen years pass. John Wilson, now a successful lawyer, is engaged to be married to Gloria Ashton, a society girl. Grace, by this time, has a dressmaking establishment of her own, and Gloria has her make a gown for her. Grace delivers this gown herself and John happens to be at Gloria's house, in the room alone, when Grace comes. They recognize each other, and John takes Grace into his arms, happy to find her again. Gloria sees them embracing and immediately breaks her engagement. John follows Grace to her home, where they tell of their experiences since they had parted, sixteen years ago. Together they look out of the window into the garden, and see Florence, their daughter, among the roses. Grace tells John that Florence has been brought up to think her father dead—that it is too late now.

THE HEART OF THE SHERIFF (June 15).—Grace Martin, the adopted daughter of Sheriff Martin, was rescued by him from a band of Indians when she was an infant. She is in love with Buck Gibson. Grace asks the Sheriff's consent to marry Buck, and his thoughts revert back to the time when he saved Grace from Indians. He gives his consent to Grace's request to marry Gibson, and Grace runs away happy to tell her lover of the good news.

That night Buck Gibson and some pals rob the town bank, and Buck is identified as one of the bandits. Sheriff Martin is notified and organizing a posse, gives chase, overtakes the robbers, and starts in pursuit of Buck, who tries to escape alone after the others are captured. Sheriff Martin kills Buck Gibson. Grace, who has ridden away in hopes of finding her sweetheart comes upon her father standing over the dead body. She understands that Buck is guilty, and turns to the Sheriff, who takes his little girl home the second time.

BIOGRAPH.

A ROMANCE OF OLD CALIFORNIA (June 14).—The blind son of the wealthy don loves Chiquita, the peon's stepdaughter; but his mercenary cousin schemes to make a match between the boy and her own daughter. The don's brother, a physician, studies the boy's affliction and believes that he can cure him. He discovers the boy's secret, but remains silent, even after the scheming mother has revealed her tactics and the boy's father, also, has expressed his hope that the children marry. Chiquita, fearing that her lover may not deem her pretty enough when he can see, buys a string of beads to enhance her beauty. Her drunken stepfather is furious at this waste of money which should have come to him, and illtreats the girl. His sight restored, the boy asks for Chiquita, and the doctor goes in search of her. She has become ill and delirious through brooding and has wandered away. The doctor barely saves her from throwing herself off the top of a ruined wall. Lifting her unconscious form, he bears it to the hacienda and joins his entreaties to those of the boy, whose family are scandalized. When Chiquita opens her eyes, she finds that her dream has come true—her lover thinks her beautiful, and his father consents to their marriage. The scheming cousin and her mother are unable to understand how so proud a man as the don can countenance the alliance of his heir with a lowborn girl—but, then, they do not understand what love is.

MRS. VAN ALDEN'S JEWELS (Special—Two Parts—June 15).—Marian Ross is the social secretary of John Van Alden and his wife. Van Alden advertises for a valet, and chooses from among the applicants one Davidson, who has satisfactory references. While he is conversing with Davidson, Marian enters the room, and a glance of recognition passes between her and the man. At the earliest opportunity Davidson waylays the secretary and demands an interview. "You!" she exclaims. "I thought you were dead." He assures her that he is very much alive, and, as they can talk no longer without risk of discovery, promises to see her again. Marian, unnerved by the meeting, goes about her duties. Mrs. Van Alden sends her to the safe deposit company to get her jewels. Securing the jewels, Marian returns to the house and enters her own room to think out a plan of dealing with Davidson. She finds under her door a note from Davidson, demanding that she meet him that night in the grounds. She keeps the engagement and Davidson demands that she help him get hold of the Van Alden jewels. She refuses and they part. Knowing the man with whom she has to deal, Marian decides to take desperate measures. She goes to a pawnshop and secures a revolver, with which she will defend the jewels in case of attack. Mrs. Van Alden gives her the jewels to put away in the safe in the library, writing the combination on one of her visiting cards.

Just as she is closing the safe Davidson enters the room and wrests from her the card bearing the combination. That night Mr. Van

Alden telephones his wife that he will stay at the country club, and asks her to send Davidson with his evening clothes. Davidson contrives to slip away from the club, boards a train, and enters the town house by a window. Marian is in the library, taking the jewels out of the safe to hide them, in case her fears come true. Davidson attacks her after snatching the jewels, and they struggle for possession of the revolver. Mrs. Van Alden, hearing the noise, enters just as the pistol explodes, and the bullet passes through her heart. Davidson flees and regains the club, unobserved. Marian is held for trial. She takes the stand and tells the story of her life. She had married Davidson and soon discovered his true character. Detectives were seeking him for his latest outrage. She hid him in a trunk as the detectives burst into the room, and set them on a false trail. Davidson, climbing out of the window, stole a motor car, and, hotly pursued, made for the country. At a bridge over a river he made a daring leap from the car, which plunged over the embankment into the water. Marian and the detectives thought him drowned. Her testimony is dramatically confirmed by a newsboy, who, selling a paper to Davidson in a saloon, finds his wallet containing Mrs. Van Alden's card with the combination written upon it. The wallet also contains a note making an appointment at a pawnshop to dispose of the jewels. Davidson is arrested after a fight, in which he is mortally wounded. Before dying he substantiates Marian's story and she is set free.

HIS WARD'S SCHEME (June 17).—Mr. Wise places his young ward in a select finishing school, where she makes a number of charming friends and acquires modish tastes. The old fellow has a susceptible heart, and from a fondness for pretty girls in general he arrives at a stage of infatuation in which he imagines himself in love with his ward. So, when, on her return from school, she announces that she has invited her friends to a party, he acquiesces in this terrible waste of money because it will please her. One of the guests is a young man who, to Mr. Wise's way of thinking, is far too attentive to his ward; he intimates to this young man that his presence in the house is not desired. At the first opportunity he proposes to his ward in the manner recommended by the heroes of popular novels. The girl, to get rid of him, says: "I have expensive tastes, which you cannot satisfy. Beautiful gowns, hats and jewels are necessary to my happiness." Her guardian, nothing daunted, goes forth to buy the engagement ring. The audacious young man hangs about the house, and the girl tosses him a note, which reads: "Meet me in an hour. We will do some shopping." And it was indeed some shopping. Mr. Wise discovered when, coming downstairs all primped and perfumed for the ceremony of bestowing the ring on his ward, he found the table piled high with boxes containing gowns, hats and jewels. He could never support a wife with such extravagant tastes. So he wrote to the jewelers: "Please exchange this engagement ring for a pair of gentleman's cuff links, and oblige." And he gave them his blessing.

LOVE IN AN APARTMENT HOTEL (Jun 18—Biograph Re-Issue, No. 2).—The bellboy loves the maid, but all his blandishments, including a bank book showing fat deposits, fail to move her. She adores the wealthy bachelor whose room is on her list. He has a charming fiancee. One evening he has a poker party in his rooms. They are just sitting down to the game when his fiancee and her father are announced. His friends make a hasty exit and he clears away "the evidence." Hardly has his fiancee entered the room when a muffled scream is heard from a closet, and out stumbles the maid, bound and gagged. His fiancee misunderstands the situation and sweeps haughtily from the room. He learns from the maid that a burglar shut her in the closet. The burglar comes out from under the bed, and after a tussle the bachelor overpowers him. His fiancee thereupon gives him the reward of a hero. The maid, seeing that she has misplaced her affections, wisely turns an attentive ear to the bellboy's pleas. Mae Marsh gives an artistic and highly amusing performance as the maid who languishes for the bachelor.

THE WAY OUT (June 19).—While packing her trunk preparatory to leaving home for the adjoining county, where she has been called to teach, the young schoolteacher discovers that one of her rings is broken. Her father volunteers to have the ring mended and bring it to her. On her first day at school a new pupil is enrolled—the motherless daughter of a resident, who personally escorts the child to school. The ecquaintance thus begun ripens into love. The girl's father writes that he is coming to visit her. He does not come, but is brought in, dead, by men who have found his body on the trail, a victim of bandits. When the girl resumes her school work, her lover's daughter, among others, brings her a little token of sympathy. As she hands up her gift the teacher's eye is caught by a ring on the child's finger. It is the ring her father was to bring her. The child says that she found it on the table in her home. Hardly daring to think, the girl goes to her lover's home and learns from him his guilty secret. He is a bandit, but for her sake he had resolved to go straight. Penniless, he had made one more hold-up; the victim had resisted, and he had been forced to kill him. While emptying the dead man's wallet, he had not seen the ring roll out on the table. Aghast at the news that he has killed his sweetheart's father, the bandit offers her his pistol; but she will not shoot, and he goes out, taking the weapon with him. A shot is heard. He has found a way out. The girl leads his orphaned daughter to her own home.

ONE MAN'S EVIL (Two Parts—June 19).—Harvey Clay is called "The Stranger" in Boulder. He is well liked by the young folks for his happy-go-lucky ways, but the parents, suspicious of his silence, will have none of him. Jim Daley is especially prejudiced, for his son, Bert, has taken to drinking and gambling since the "stranger" arrived; he has also made inroads in the affections of Bliss Daly. The sheriff of Boulder County loves Bliss and wishes to make her his wife. Lucy Kent arrives home from college. She is the daughter of the wealthiest rancher in the valley. The Kent and Daly ranches adjoin and in their childhood, Lucy plighted her troth to Bert, so it is natural that when she returns, a beautiful young lady, Bert feels he has a claim on her. She encourages Bert till the "stranger" crosses her path, when she transfers her affections to him.

At last Clay urges Lucy to elope. She consents but later backs out. Bert comes from hiding, confronts Clay and accuses him of evil intentions. Clay taunts him; Bert jumps upon him. A struggle takes place between them. In the tussle Clay's gun drops to the ground. The "stranger" throws Bert from him and with a sneer at Bert's poor showing as a fighter, walks away. Bert finds the gun and is about to shoot when he thinks better of it. But later, under the influence of liquor, the murderous inclination again passes him. He starts out determined to find Clay. Hidden in the brush, he sees Lucy about to depart with Clay. He becomes crazed, levels the gun and fires at Clay.

Lucy, however, makes a sudden move away from Clay and receives the bullet. She falls apparently dead. Bert is horor-struck. He throws the gun from him and runs away filled with terror. A crowd of ranchers soon gather. Clay is dazed at the sudden turn of affairs and remains silent; the gun is found and proves to belong to the "stranger." The crime is naturallly attributed to him and he is arrested. Bert returns home to Bliss, looking for money with which to clear out of the country. He breaks down, and confesses to Bliss. She is heart-broken but helps him to get away. Later she learns through the sheriff that Harvey Clay has been arrested for the crime.

An immense mob surrounds the jail intent on lynching Clay. The sheriff asks Daly to assist him in restoring order and again Bliss is thrown into a panic, for she realizes how futile their puny efforts will be. By careful maneuvering, she leads the sheriff into a love declaration. While in his embrace she contrives to get the keys to the jail. Another urgent call is made for the sheriff and he tears himself away from his love-making. Bliss, on horseback, loses no time in making a cross-cut to the jail. She creeps along the rear of the buildings, sees the guards called off duty to assist in holding the front of the jail against the mob. She enters the rear of the jail, finds Clay's cell and leads him out to liberty. Bert has reached the nearest large town. He sees an account in the newspapers of the shooting, learns that Clay has been arrested and that mob violence is feared. He has a conflict with conscience and decides to return and face the consequence of his act.

The crowd in front of the jail is beyond the control of the law-abiding. Guns are drawn and the sheriff, seeing that other lives are in danger, promises to hand over the prisoner. He reaches for his keys, finds them gone and is puzzled. The mob will not wait, however. They wreck the jail and force an entrance followed by the sheriff. They find the prisoner gone and abuse the sheriff. The sheriff decides to return to the Daly ranch where he remembers having the keys last. Poor Bliss meanwhile has started her long journey home, making desperate haste. She hears a horse's hoofs behind and scrambles into hiding. She sees the sheriff gallop by and fear possesses her but she goes on.

The sheriff reaches the ranch, sees the evidence of Bliss' hasty departure and a terrible doubt takes hold of him. He has been tricked by Bliss so she could set her lover free. At this critical moment Bliss staggers in and falls fainting. His suspicions confirmed, he takes the keys and, heart-broken, is about to leave when Bert bursts into the room. He gives himself up to the sheriff, confessing his guilt. He in turn learns there is a chance for Lucy's recovery. The sheriff is overcome on learning that Bliss' concern was really for her brother's sake. He tenderly lifts her up and places her in her brother's arms. He tells them as far as he is concerned Bert's confession shall never be used against him. In the due course of time Lucy recovers and Bert devotes his life to her. Bliss has also learned her lesson and can appreciate the true worth of men like Sheriff Howe.

THE LAST ACT (June 15).—Herbert Harwood, a young playwright, has had a play accepted by the manager of Hilary Herndon, a well known actor. Harwood is an ambitious man, living well but modestly, with his wife, Janet. Herndon comes to see Harwood about the play and the fresh beauty of Janet attracts him and his polished manners charm her. Herndon leaves and Janet grows restless and discontented. Her husband notes her frame of mind and unselfishly plans for her to visit the city.

Janet goes to the city and there renews her acquaintance with Herndon, who introduces her to the gay life and excitement of the Great White Way. Fascinated by the glamor of the city and attractions of Herndon, she loses all love for her husband and eventually writes him that she will not return. He goes to the city and is horrified at the life Janet is leading. He appeals to her to return to their home but is met with scorn. Appealing to Herndon, he is sneered at. The idea of revenge or punishment takes possession of him. The day of the first performance of the play arrives and that afternoon Harwood makes a final effort to persuade Janet. Convinced of the futility of his efforts, he adopts a plan.

In one scene of the play, Herndon, seated alone in his apartments, is served a drink by his man servant. Harwood, who as author of the play, has free access to the stage, goes to the dressing room of the man who is to play the part of the butler. Overpowering and binding the actor, Harwood assumes the servant's costume and answers the call. Herndon seated in an arm chair, before an open fireplace, the light from which throws him in strong relief, calls for a drink and Harwood, entering from the rear, pours wine from a decanter into a glass. He also puts poison in the drink. Approaching Herndon from the rear, he hands him the glass, and Herndon without looking at him, takes it and drinks part of the contents and hands back the glass. Janet, in a box, has been looking at the servant with surprise and, recognizing him when he prepares the drink, suspects what has been done and screams a warning. Too late. Herndon springs up and with horror realizes his fate as Harwood, facing him, drains the glass and sinks into the chair as the curtain falls.

POWERS.

THE PANZER TROUPE (June 17).—The facial contortions of the midget, a member of the Panzer Troupe, as he is popped from a large champagne bottle, much to the surprise of the startled reveler, who has ordered wine and is served a grotesque midget is really extremely humorous. The troupe also perform a series of humorous and novel aerial tricks.

One of the numbers which has attracted universal attention is the amazing performance of the midget sliding on his head down a slack wire to be caught in a basket contrivance hung from the back of Mr. Panzer. For a moment the audience is led to believe that the midget has mysteriously disappeared until Mr. Panzer, in walking out of the picture, is seen with the midget clinging to his back.

HER MYSTERIOUS ESCORT (June 19).—A young wife after waiting all night for her husband's return, reads the morning paper and finds he has been arrested in a raid on a roadhouse. Angered and ashamed, she leaves him. Rose LeRue, a cafe singer, wherever she turns, sees the leering faces of clucking hands of men before her.

One night, outside the window of the cafe, Rose sees the pale and hungry looking face of a young girl. Two men are on each side of her clutching her arms. Rose leaves the cafe and takes the little stranger to her dressing room. Later, in the cafe, two of Rose's admirers quarrel as to who is to take her home. Fearing a scene, Rose hurries to her dressing room and finds the young girl in the clutches of the cafe manager. Rose then takes her home in a taxi. The two men follow to her apartment, obtain admittance and demand to see the man who they think has taken Rose home.

Drawing aside a curtain, Rose bids them. One of the men recognizing the girl as his own wife, drops his head in shame. Rose tells him how she found his wife and brings about a reconciliation. Tired of the clutching hands and luring faces, Rose returns to her mountain home and her girlhood sweetheart.

a tomb in the Pyramid. Prince Tousson is forced to admit the loss of the documents, without which the Christian massacre cannot take place. He is granted twenty-four hours by the Khedive in which to find and return the papers or pay the penalty. Spies are placed at every entrance to the city, and Zohra, who has bravely volunteered to procure food for the fugitives, is seen, followed and the hiding place disclosed to Prince Tousson. He at once sets out for the Pyramid with soldiers and a camel caravan, intending to capture his bride and carry her across the desert to his palace in the oasis.

The fugitives anticipate an attack and barricade the entrance of the tomb with a huge boulder. A fight in the tomb takes place and Stanley Clyde, in final desperation, hurls the rock down the steps, crushing the Prince's men. He is wounded in the attempt and a search for the Princess and the precious documents follows. She hides in the coffin of a queen, almost escapes capture, but is betrayed by a portion of her veil becoming caught in the lid of the coffin. The documents are torn from her and carried post haste and at the eleventh hour, to Said Pasha who, from the balcony of the Palace, decrees the death of the infidels at the hands of the fanatical Mussulmen. Mean while, with the Princess and Zohra once more in Tousson's power and Stanley Clyde a prisoner, the dreary caravan sets forth upon its desert journey.

IMP.

THE TOY-MAKER OF LEYDEN (June 5).—Old Hans is an old toy-maker in a little Holland village. He is assisted by Freda, his granddaughter and Karl. Freda shows symptoms of consumption. At this time, Dr. Von Holm comes all the way from Rotterdam and lectures to the city fathers on the dangerous spread of germs from the great white plague. The city fathers determine to stamp out the dread disease and one day they walk into the quaint old shop and make a bonfire of all the toys behind the house, telling Old Hans that Freda is in consumption and must not be allowed to spread infections by making any more toys.

Hans reads in a newspaper of how Dr. Von Holm, of Rotterdam, has cured consumption in cases that have been checked in time. Hans counts his small savings and, biding Freda and Karl a cheery good-bye, sets out on his walk to Rotterdam, thirty miles away. Admitted to the private office of Dr. Von Holm, he tells the object of his coming. The great doctor shakes his head dubiously and is not inclined to take the case. Thereupon, Old Hans kneels down on the floor, pours his pitiful savings at the doctor's feet, and pleads for the life of Freda.

Dr. Von Holm is touched by this pathetic appeal. He drives to the little village in a big car and takes Freda and Hans and Karl to his bungalow in the pine woods. Thus Freda is enabled to shake off the touch of the white plague and returns home, entirely cured. The doctor, who has fallen in love with his fascinating patient, comes back after a month to make her his wife and Old Hans is once more installed in his toy-shop with those he loves around him to make his declining days prosperous and happy.

FANCHON THE CRICKET (June 7).—Fanchion is a fascinating little girl, the grandchild of Mother Fadet, who is suspected of witchery by the people among whom she lives. At the opening of the story Mother Fadet is being attacked by a crowd, led by Father Barband, the father of Laundry and Didier, his twin sons, the former a handsome and bright lad, the latter, weak and foolish. The old woman is about to be beaten when Fanchon arrives, and she also is set upon by the men. Both are in danger until Laundry appears on the scene and upbraids the mob. He is attracted by the beauty of the little madcap, who thanks him as he leaves her.

The foolish Didier is in love with Madelon, the belle of the village, who scorns him, and who is in love with the handsome brother. Didier is heart-broken and tells him he is going to commit suicide. He rushes away, but is prevented from carrying out his intention by Fanchon, who follows him until he, tired, falls asleep in a clump of bushes. Laundry seeks everywhere for his brother, even asking aid of the witch. She refuses to assist him, but, meeting Fanchon, he asks for her help. This she promises if he will agree to dance whatever dance she may select at the fete to be held next day. Anxious to find his brother, he consents, and she leads him to the spot where Didier sleeps.

The next day while the festivities are in progress, Fanchon dressed in her grand-mother's old-fashioned clothes, appears and demands her dance with Laundry. He is dancing with Madelon, but, being a man of his word, he asks her to excuse him, and takes Fanchon as his partner. Madelon, angered at the manner in which Laundry has treated her, tells the others, that Fanchon has bewitched him, by the aid of the witch's claw she always wears around her neck in a bag. She incites the mob and they attack Fanchon, demanding to see the contents of the bag. This she hands to Laundry, who reads on the paper "The Prayer of the Pure Maiden to the Holy Mother of Grace." Ashamed, the mob leaves the unhappy girl who rushes home and tears off the clothes which she feels are the cause of her misery. To get away from Laundry, whom she now loves, she accepts an offer to go to the city, although he begs her to remain and marry him. Later the grandmother dies and appoints Laundry's father as her guardian. She returns to her home and going to Father Barband asks him if he will accept the charge. At first he refuses but realizing that the happiness of his son depends upon Fanchon, he consents and the formerly despised madcap has the pleasure of being begged by the old gentleman to marry his son. Needless to say she does.

THE SECOND BEGINNING (June 17).—Robert Granville and his bride return from their honeymoon and take up their residence at Granville's large town house. Before her marriage, Edna, the wife, was employed in a factory. Granville knows of this and Edna has promised him that she will try her best to learn the ways of the society in which they will move. Edna gives an afternoon tea to her husband's friends and among the guests is Marie, a former sweetheart of Granville's who is still in love with him. Edna also meets Herbert Conroy, a bachelor, who falls in love with her and begins paying her attentions. Shortly after this Edna attends a bridge party given by Marie and when the game is over finds that she has lost several hundred dollars. Not knowing that she was playing for money, Edna is greatly alarmed and is afraid to ask her husband for the money. Conroy asks that he be allowed to pay the amount and Edna accepts. She hides the score of the game which contains a notation of the amount she lost, in a locket that Granville has given her. She attempts to give the locket to Conroy for security for the money due him, but he refuses to accept it.

Granville sees the affair between Edna and Conroy and believes that his wife is losing her love for him. He begins paying attention to Marie, while Edna receives the visits of Conroy. Finally Edna saves enough out of her allowance to repay Conroy and sends a servant with it. Granville sees the address on the envelope and is further estranged from Edna. Later they have drifted apart and Edna agrees to leave with Conroy. Marie attempts to get Granville to give up his wife and he is on the point of doing so when he realizes that he loves only Edna. He leaves Marie and starts home. As he arrives he finds Conroy waiting for Edna to meet him. Granville watches. Edna comes out and in the act of getting in Conroy's car changes her mind and tells Conroy that she loves her husband and that she will not desert him. Conroy attempts to force her into the car. Granville runs into the scene and after a struggle knocks Conroy down. The latter rises and, drawing a gun, fires at Granville, but Edna throws herself in front of him and is struck by the bullet. Conroy flees. Granville finds that the bullet has struck the locket, forcing it open, disclosing the hidden paper—the bridge score. Edna is not injured and she and Granville return to the house determined to begin their lives anew.

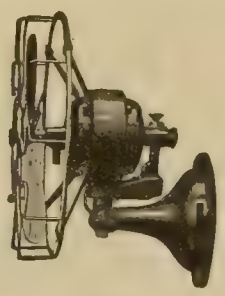
HER OWN BLOOD (June 20).—Jane and her brother live in the north woods. Jim, a ne'er do well, is in love with Jane and she reciprocates his affections. Jane's brother, Tom, is a member of the Northwestern Mounted Police, and, while on a furlough, notes the growing change in Jane. One day he surprises her while in Jim's arms.

Tom recognizes Jim as a card shark and drunkard and warns his sister of the man. Jane, lover like, refuses to believe any ill of her sweetheart. Tom goes back to his patrol and one day receives a summons to arrest a murderer. Jim has engaged in a card game; is caught cheating, and kills his accuser. He escapes and goes to the girl's home.

While he is trying to get her to help him get away, her brother Tom comes on the scene. He tells Jane of the man's record and she tells him she knows it and that he must help Jim escape. Tom thinks of his oath and refuses. He and Jim engage in a fight. Jane gets Tom's gun and is going to hold him while Jim escapes. The murderer gets a knife and is about to attack Tom when the call of her blood rises within Jane and she shoots her former lover, thus saving the life of her own blood brother.

JOKER.

A DUKE FOR A DAY (June 14).—Shultz stops at a sea-side hotel. His eyes are attracted by a widow who is also a guest. She reciprocates and welcomes his advances. Lillian and Tom are staying at the same hotel. They are engaged. This rollicking young couple make great sport of Shultz and the widow. These happy conditions are suddenly and rudely upset by the arrival of a royal Duke. He has come to America in search of a wife. His highness is accompanied by his faithful flunkey.



Keeping the Crowd in Summer

The crowd in your theater was not as large last month as it was last March. It was probably due to the fact that your theater was too warm.

You heat your theater in winter. You should make it cool in summer.

TWILIGHT SLEEP

"The latest really great discovery in the world of medicine"

A subject of vital importance, not only to every woman, but to every man in America, for it removes from the heart of woman all dread of the pangs of maternity.

There could be no clearer way of explaining this merciful gift to womankind than through the medium of motion pictures. Dr. Kurt E. Schloessingk of Freiburg, Germany, associate of Drs. Kroenig and Gauss, discoverers of the Twilight Sleep treatment, was sent here to conduct clinics in America's leading cities, and has prepared this lecture and motion pictures explaining the technique and details of this treatment.

Things are upset because Lillian and the widow immediately lose their hearts to the handsome Duke, and the Duke loses his heart to them. Shultz and Tom are mighty mad. At last Shultz and Tom take things into their own hands. Lillian receives a note informing her that the flunkey is the real Duke, incognito. Thinking she is putting one over on the widow, Lillian switches her attentions to the flunkey.

Tom and Shultz then capture the Duke and flunkey. Shultz disguises himself in the Duke's clothes and Tom follows his example, donning the flunkey's regalia. They then shave off the royal beards, which they glue on their faces. The unfortunate Duke and his flunkey are then crammed into a trunk. The trunk is shipped over a rough route to the wharf, where it is ordered sent back to England. Meanwhile, Shultz and Tom impersonating royalty undetected, carry things on with a high hand. Shultz, as the Duke, proposes to the widow and is accepted. Tom, as the flunkey whom Lillian thinks is the real Duke, incognito, is also accepted by Lillian. The trunk containing the two miserable men flops into the water from the wharf. Its occupants have a fearful time getting to shore. They arrive back at the hotel just in time to witness the wedding of Shultz and Tom. The imposters are unmasked. The brides are horrified and resentful until they see the dreadful sights presented by the Duke and his flunkey. They are then mighty glad they married real men after all.

AT THE BINGVILLE BARBECUE (June 19).—Bingville prepares to boost its expanding borders with a barbecue. The world-famous Spanish chef, Indigestio, accompanied by his wife and helper, arrives to officiate. Lillian, a member of the welcoming committee, is fascinated by the chef. He returns her admiration. Now Mrs. Indigestio is of fiery blood. She sees the actions of her hubby and determines to keep her eye on him. The barbecue is on. But the chef is so interested in Lillian that he does not notice how he is overseasoning the barbecued meat with heaps of the most violent Spanish pepper. His admiration for her is so great that at last he abandons his duties to join Lillian for a stroll. Wifie sees. Clutching an ugly butcher's knife, she starts out to carve her erring hubby.

Indigestio's busy helper is left alone to feed the hungry, clamoring crowd. He is in the midst of his activities when Indigestio arrives on the scene, exerting himself to the utmost to escape his blood-thirsty wife. Indigestio falls into the burning barbecue pit. He is nearly cremated, but manages to get out and dash away. Wifie follows, still in his pursuit. Now the helper's troubles begin. He has served the over-seasoned meat to the hungry crowd. They eat with relish. But their insides are not accustomed to pepper of this brand. Their ire is aroused. The poor helper is accused. In spite of his protestations of innocence the mayor starts to take out the feelings of the crowd on him. After a battle over the burning pit, the helper escapes closely pursued by the indignant mayor. Meanwhile, the chef is rounded up by wifie. They meet the helper and the mayor. After hostilities are settled the hot-blooded participants are eager to acknowledge that they are thoroughlly cooled.

HOW BILLY GOT HIS RAISE (June 7)—Billy, the office boy, is a deep student of hypnotism. His ambitions along this line keep the office force in an uproar. Billy decides he needs a raise. But when he tackles the boss on the proposition he finds that the latter has different ideas. A hot argument ensues in which Billy decidedly gets the worst of it. Filled with resentment, Billy determines to force "the old codger to come through." He sees his opportunity when the bosses' wife drops into the office to rest herself after a wearisome shopping trip. The scheming youngster calls all his hypnotic powers to his aid, practicing on the steno. This young lady succumbs to his influence and does his bidding. Guided by Billy, the steno makes love to the boss in the presence of the latter's wife. The girl hints at past escapades with her employer. The wife, outraged, demands explanations. The bewildered boss is up against it. Here, Billy steps in and promises to square matters in return for a raise. Boss is willing to do anything. When wifie comes out of her trance she finds everything apparently O. K. and imagines she has had a horrid nightmare. The boss is mightily peeved because of Billy's methods, but in admiration of the kid's nerve, comes through with a raise.

NESTOR.

ON HIS WEDDING DAY (June 15).—The boy is engaged to be married to the girl and the date is set for three in the afternoon. He is an automobile salesman and gets a call to take out a prospective customer for a demonstration. He takes the lady customer out and does not notify his girl as he thinks that he will be back in time for the wedding. The lady is delighted with the car and insists on going further and further. The boy gets excited and increases his speed to get back in time. Unfortunately he returns through Weedville, where the cops are laying for speeders, and is caught. The cop tries to halt him but the boy runs him by. But the Weedville cops are up-to-date, and he 'phones to the next station to stretch the rope as a speeder is heading that way. The rope is stretched and when the car comes on, the boy is forced to stop. He is only angry considering he is missing his wedding day and proceeds to "pan" the cops, which makes them the more anxious to lock him up and he is taken to the jail, being refused bail in any amount.

The girl, meanwhile, has started all arrangements for the wedding and there only remains the arrival of the groom. They can get no news of him, so the wedding has to be postponed. Next morning the girl reads in the paper where they have arrested the boy in company with a woman for joy riding and that he is being held in jail without bail. The chum, too, gets word from him to come and get him out, he moves everything in his path and sends the girl word that the boy is innocent and that he will have him at the house that day at noon and for her to have everything ready for the ceremony. After numerous legal technicalities, he gets the boy out and brings him to the house. The boy wants to change his clothes and brush up, but the girl says that postponed weddings are "tabooed" and that she will be married at the time or not at all. The chum finally brings the two together and at the close of the ceremony the boy and his bride are on a fair way to their goal of happiness.

THE DOWNFALL OF POTTS (June 18).—Detective Potts is the star detective on the force and as such is a welcome suitor for the hand of the commissioner's daughter. The young detective joins the force. He is made the butt of all jokes, and the star detective disdains to even look upon him. The daughter falls for the new man. But they have a road hard to travel with the opposition of both the commissioner and the star detective. Both realize that matters cannot go on as they are, so they decide on drastic measures. They arrange to have a fake kidnapping with Eddie to pull the hero stuff. The matter is all arranged. The girl goes to visit her father, after writing him a note telling him that unless he comes across with some money his daughter will be kidnapped. Her father shows her the note and makes it a joke. The girl pretends to be afraid but is reassured by her father, who tells her that such a thing cannot happen with Potts on the job. The girl then goes to her chum's, dad on the 'phone and tells him that she has been kidnapped. When dad hears a muffled scream come over the wire, which is caused by the chum holding her hand over Vic's mouth, he is frantic.

Potts is put on the job and combs the town but without avail. Eddie pleads to be put on the case, but gets nothing but sneers. He calls the girl up and tells her the plan is working smoothly but he can't seem to get on the case. They plan another coup. The girl writes another note to Potts telling him to go to a deserted house near the railroad and await developments. He has a clue at last and departs steathily. He finds the house all right and sits down at the door, gun in hand, to await developments. Meanwhile the girl has been taken to the house and put in an inside room, tied to a chair and left. The young detective at last gets on the case and, after making the rounds, comes back and tells the commissioner his daughter has been kidnapped by the star detective. They laugh at him when he tells them he will prove it. He takes the commissioner to the house and tells him to peer in at the window. They see the girl inside tied. At the front, as if on guard, sits Potts, "waiting developments." He is denounced and his star taken off. Meanwhile the young detective has released the girl and they are inwardly shaking with laughter at the success of the plan. As the picture fades, the young detective has risen to be the star and with the old man's backing things look bright for an early marriage.

THE SNOW GIRL (Three Parts—June 16).—Harry Drake, agent for the Romaine Pulpwood Co., of New York, while exploring the great North woods for a new pulpwood forest, runs across a high water falls in the midst of a valuable tract of pulpwood and, learning that it belongs to an invalid who lives alone on the place with his daughter, he plans to get the property away from them. Romaine conspires to rob Gregg and Nell, by means of a fake deed which they represent to Gregg as a lease for the water power rights. Nell's sweetheart, Ned Early, who runs an artistic camera shop in the village, sees Romaine and Drake looking over the falls and, suspicious of their actions, he calls on Nell to warn her. The conspirators are already there and Gregg is about to sign the deed when Ned discovers that it is a deed instead of a lease as represented. Nell upbraids

Ned for interfering with their plans as she and her father are in urgent need of cash, and as she does not understand the difference between a deed and a lease she is very bitter. Ned offers to loan her some money, but she disdains it. Returning to the hotel, Romaine and Drake try to think out a plan to achieve their ends. The next day Nell comes to town and Romaine sees her and tells Drake to follow her and get into her good graces.

Drake does so and he and Nell walk toward her home. Passing Ned's studio he comes out and meets them. Nell snubs him. Following them, he overhears them on the bridge and tries to explain to Nell that Drake was trying to rob her father. She refuses to listen. A quarrel takes place when Drake interferes and he and Ned grapple, Ned nearly throwing him from the bridge. Drake returns beaten to the hotel, while Ned and Nell go toward her home. Drake meets his halfbreed guide on the hotel steps. The guide has seen the quarrel and a sudden desire for revenge prompts him to offer the guide $50 to put Ned out of the way. The guide follows Ned and Nell and watches him leave Nell at the steps. When Ned returns he decoys him to the edge of the high falls with a cry of distress and as Ned looks into the gorge the guide shoots his staff from his hand and Ned plunges over the edge of the cliff. The carnival at Saranac begins and Nell is the "Lady of the Snows." Drake is very attentive and as Romaine sees that Drake is winning her confidence he proposes that Drake elope with her to Canada and desert her while he, Romaine, puts pressure on Gregg forcing him to sign away his property.

Nell allows Drake to attend her at the carnival events and when she finally learns that Ned has been missing several days she is sorry that she treated him so badly and broods over it until she is conscience stricken and loses all interest in the carnival sports. She asks Drake to take her home. They start. In the meantime Ned has been rescued and carried to shelter by an Indian trapper, Scarface. He slowly recovers from the shock of his terrible fall and finally feels well enough to return to the village. On the way he and Scarface visit the spot where he landed to recover his camera and there they find the broken staff which plainly shows the mark of the bullet. They climb to the top of the gorge and find the tracks of the guide and trail him toward his cabin. Nell and Drake have reached the forest near the guide's cabin on their way to her home and Drake proposes marriage to her and asks her to elope with him to Canada. She is on the point of consenting when she thinks of Ned. She repulses Drake and starts for home. In front of the cabin of the guide, Drake feigns a sprained ankle and lures her into the cabin and bribes the guide to decamp. Drake, once they are alone, throws off all restraint and attacks her. Ned and Scarface see the guide and as they approach he runs, followed by Scarface. Ned watches. Suddenly Ned hears Nell scream and, rushing to the cabin, grapples with Drake and in the struggle is knocked out. Drake escapes, leaving Nell behind. Ned and Nell make up and start back to town. Drake in escaping has joined the guide and together they arrive at the hotel in the dogsledge. Drake tells Romaine of the position he is in and, getting money from Romaine, Drake and the guide make a dash for Canada. Romaine, feeling that the jig is up, sneaks from the hotel to make his way to New York. Ned and Nell arrive in town and relate their adventures. Their friends go after Drake and Romaine. They roll Romaine in the snow. Drake and the guide are on their way. In the early hours of the next morning wolves follow Drake and the guide and they are lost. Ned calls on Nell for her answer and is blessed by the father, Gregg.

THE BOGUS EARL (Two Parts).—A film company advertises for a comedian. There are a number of ludicrous applicants at the studio for the job. Much fun is created as the different applicants are ushered before the camera and they are rejected and ejected by the director and judges. Finally, the successful applicant, with his funny walk, eccentricities and funny mannerisms, appears. He is accepted and is given the $100,000 per year job. Then the big show comes on—"The Bogus Earl," wherein Mr. Pincus Rainbow, the successful applicant, is given the leading role. The Earl of Algy, a land poor nobleman, is advised by his solicitor to seek the hand of an American heiress. He departs for America and upon arriving there, decides to give the millionaire sausage manufacturer's daughter the "once over" before presenting his credentials. While en route to their country estate he meets with an automobile accident, and is removed to the hospital.

In the meantime two tramps, Pincus and Bud, find his credentials on the roadside, also his suit case containing his clothes, which they don, and present themselves at Hans Hinkle's home. They find that a handsome youth is already a suitor for the daughter's hand, but Pincus meets with much encouragement from the mother, who is socially ambitious. Pincus and Bud's uncouth manners at the lawn party, their queer appearance and rough antics create many amusing scenes. Finally, there are a number of elopements planned which become sadly mixed up, resulting in a complication of troubles and a climax filled with side-splitting laughter. In the meantime the real earl recovers and presents himself at the home. The duplicity of Pincus and Bud is revealed. There is one grand scramble by all of those who want to wreak vengeance on them, and after a wild chase Pincus and Bud make their escape on a box car.

THE OYSTER DREDGER (Two Parts—June 14).—Vera, an heiress, while on a trip to the seaside, sees and admires Jack, an oyster dredger. She takes a fancy to his mode of living and through her lawyer proposes to change places and life with him for a time, placing all her property in trust with her lawyer.

Jack finally agrees to the proposition and is installed in the wealthy girl's home, while she takes up the work of an oyster dredger. Vera's lawyer plots to force the girl to marry him as he has absolute control of all her property and she cannot gain possession without his consent. Vera is indignant at the lawyer's presumption.

Jack tires of the life which is so different from that to which he is accustomed and decides to go back to his dredger. In a saloon, he overhears the lawyer make an insulting remark about the wealthy girl helping the oyster dredger and is about to attack him, when the crooked lawyer steps backward and falls into the sea. Jack and Vera are reunited as the story ends.

TRULY RURAL TYPES (June 4). Gerald Leigh, an eminent playwright, is discouraged in his search for just the right types to take the leading roles in his new rural romance, "The Plowman." At last, in complete despair, he goes to the country to take a much needed rest. There he meets Phoebe Newell and her swain, William Sewall. Leigh watches their courtship—and at last is convinced that here, at last, he has found two truly rural types. Though the young country people appear shy and unsophisticated, he is convinced that each of them possesses the making of a successful player. He induces them to return with him to the city, promising that he will make them famous. Phoebe and William make a tremendous hit. On the opening night, jaded New Yorkers wildly aplaud these wonderful "discoveries" of the playwright. But the next morning Leigh learns that his stars are a young married couple, already famous as heads of a stock company in one of the smaller cities, whom, in his early search for "types" he actually had turned down. Now Leigh is not so keen about "types' as he used to be. For he has learned that really clever actors can play almost anything.

HIS GUARDIAN AUTO (June 11).—Everybody agrees that Billy Budd should settle down. But no one has the nerve to tell him so. Billy Budd, says everybody, is fast. He travels in fast company, and he drives a fast automobile. It really is a pity! But who will undertake to reform him? It does not occur to anybody that Billy's auto has constituted itself his guardian spirit. Yet, the car, apart from Billy's influence, really is a remarkably good sort. One evening its owner leads it into evil ways. Stopping at a roadside inn to get some wine for himself and some gasoline for the auto, he finds the supply of gasoline has run out. Billy has had a lively day. So he reasons that if champagne be good for him it will do also for the auto. He loads up the machine with wine and starts off on a record run. Now it was Billy's guardian's first drunk—and Billy still is curdling the blood of his friends telling the stunts that reeling car went through. He describes the rest of the performance in this way: "When I woke up in the morning I was in bed and the auto was asleep on the floor. I sent for some ice water and gave myself and the car a nice, cool drink. Then I bound up my head with a cloth and fixed a bandage for the car's radiator. That car was grateful, just like a human. That afternoon when I went outside, it came running up to me exactly like a sheep dog. It did everything except wag its name plate. I was talking with Flossie Footlights at the time and I invited her to take a ride. But the auto whizzed off before she could set foot in the machine. It took me right out in the country and drew up before the prettiest farm girl you ever would hope to see. She smiled at me. And that was the beginning of the good citizen I've been ever since.

ROYAL.

AN UNLUCKY SUITOR (June 12).—The Smith's have living with them a niece who attracts many suitors. Among them are a young broker and an absent-minded Jap. The young broker and Smith, also a broker, take opposite sides of the market on a certain stock. They need money badly. Mrs. Smith loans her niece's sweetheart a diamond necklace of her's with which to fight the market, planning to cover the fact with a duplicate necklace. The husband is reminded of the valuable jewels and starts home to get them. Meanwhile, the Jap, who is calling on the niece, in looking at the paste necklace, drops it down his collar. The husband arrives and demands the jewels. The Jap at last manages to extricate it. But Smith recognizes it as a fake. Calamity all 'round is averted by the return of the young broker with the real necklace and the money which Smith had lost in the exchange.

THANHOUSER.

THE GIRL OF THE SEASONS (Two Parts—June1).—Emelyn Lewis, a reporter, while vacationing at a seashore village, for the first time in his life really falls in love. The girl, Lydia Starr, lives with widowed Martha Starr, whom she calls "mother," and Lewis, a frequent visitor at their cottage, is keenly studied by the older woman. At last she decides that he deserves to know the history of the girl he loves, and how she came to be reared in such humble circumstances. Sixteen years before, Martha relates, a ship was wrecked on the reefs off the island. The captain was washed ashore, and before he died he made it known that a woman and child were in the wreck. The woman was found dead. But the child, still breathing, was brought safely to land. Little Lydia, her parentage unknown, had been brought up as Martha's own daughter. The story in no degree dissuades Lewis from his desire to marry the girl. Some time later, in the city, Lydia's fiance has occasion to investigate a well-known millionaire. In the office "morgue" he finds clippings of sixteen years before which make him realize that Lydia is the orphaned niece of Goldsmith Tudor. He takes the proof to Martha Starr. Lewis tells her that Tudor is a scoundrel, and that his wife is a vain, overbearing society woman. They dread the thought of Lydia going to live with such a guardian as her uncle. Yet, it seems but fair that she should profit by wealth and social position. But the girl herself has overheard the discussion. Worldliness fails to enter into her decision. She chooses to remain Martha's daughter, and to marry the young reporter.

he was not to be moved. The pastor of his church sent him a letter urging him to help tide over a family of two with the necessities of life, until the struggling young woman could get on her feet and find a way to support herself and her young brother. The appeal lay neglected on the rich old man's desk where little Dorothy found it and signed it on her own responsibility. Then she started out on her errand of mercy, raiding the pantry and carrying away the good things in a taxicab. The grandfather chanced to see her disappearing into the cab. Thinking that Dorothy was being kidnapped, he traced the driver and had him arrested. The man offered to guide the frantic grandfather to the house to which he had taken Dorothy. There the rich old man found the child ministering to the wants of those to whose sufferings he had been wholly indifferent. After that, Dorothy and her grandfather made their philanthropic visits together.

A FREIGHT CAR HONEYMOON (June 6).—Dan Boynton, a telegraph operator employed in the offices of a big railroad company, falls in love with Alice Reed, a stenographer, who works for the same company. He makes application for a leave of absence, and he and Alice are married. On his return, Boynton learns from the crusty, old general manager, Jonathan Bushkirk, that he is fired. But the bride is very resourceful. An empty freight train, standing in the railway yards, suggests to her a bright plan. Since the railroad would not grant them a vacation, they will take their honeymoon at the road's expense, and in one of its own cars. Dan and Alice collect a few camping comforts and make themselves at home in one of the freight cars. When the train pulls out that night, the honeymooners are discovered. But the train crew, learning of the romance, decide to wink at the violation of rules. They become the firm friends of the young couple. There occurs to Dan a scheme which will enable them to keep indefinitely their improvised cottage. At one of the stops, he climbs a telegraph pole, and by means of a pocket kit, sends a message purporting to be from the general manager, ordering the station agent at the next stop to hold the car on the siding until further orders. The loss of the car causes Bushkirk no little worry. Learning why and where it has been held up, he arrives in person to investigate. To his amazement, he finds his discharged operator and former stenographer living in the car. Their "nerve" makes a great hit with him. He appoints Dan Boynton his chief assistant.

THE SIX CENT LOAF (Two Parts—June 8). Mary Quinn is a plucky factory girl, who supports herself and her little brother, Joel, and sister, Norah. John Rapley, head of the Associated Baking Companies, never has heard of Mary Quinn. However, she is vitally affected by a business coup which he executes, thereby raising the price of bread to six cents a loaf. The higher price of bread means that Mary cannot buy as many loaves as formerly. She stints herself, so that the children may not go hungry. She grows weaker and weaker and is discharged from the factory. Another girl with more energy is put in her place. Rapley lavishes gifts on his wife and children, little realizing that he is mainly responsible for the fact that Mary Quinn, mainstay of little Joel and Norah, is starving. One day, outside his bread shop, he finds a girl faint from hunger and ill. She tells him the tragedy of bread at six cents a loaf. Rapley has Mary and the children taken care of. Realizing now that her plight is but one instance of innumerable cases of suffering brought on by his taking advantage of war conditions to clear a big profit, he removes the extra cent on bread.

THROUGH EDITH'S LOOKING GLASS (June 13).—Edith Davis is elated to receive an invitation to a ball. She tells her mother that she must have a new gown for the affair. Mrs. Davis tries to persuade Edith that one of the dresses she has will do, and finally tells her that she must take up the matter with her father. Peevish and impatient at this, the young girl is unkind to Dick, her brother. Later, she wheedles her father into promising her the new dress. Going to her room, triumphant, she gazes at herself in the mirror. Suddenly she sees over her shoulder a little old woman. The stranger explains that she is Conscience and that she is troubled and unhappy. Then, in the glass, Edith sees the girl she really is—not at all beautiful, for her face is spoiled by selfishness. One scene after another passes—showing the many acts of self-sacrifice made for her by her father and mother, and her unfeeling acceptance of everything. Edith's behavior that evening is radically changed. She sends her mother out of the kitchen and gets the supper herself. She makes up her quarrel with Dick. She tells her father that her old pink dress is quite good enough for the ball. That night, when she goes to her room, in place of the wrinkled old woman, a fair little girl appears in the mirror. She also is called Conscience—only Edith has made her happy now and untroubled. And then, in the glass, the young girl sees her own face, smiling and beautiful.

RELIANCE.

A MOTHER'S JUSTICE (June 7).—Widow Morgan lives with her only child, Mary, 18 years old, who works in a store. She has formed the acquaintance of George Shields, a drummer, who visits the store to sell goods. He is infatuated with Mary and visits her at her home. The widow does not like Shields and so informs her daughter. The widow, unable to hold her dislike for Shields, tells him not to come to see Mary any more. The next day Shields meets Mary and, showing her a marriage license, persuades her to marry him. Under the pretense of having the minister come to his rooms at the hotel, Mary goes with him. He registers "George Shields and Wife."

The next morning a telegram comes from his wife in St. Louis, telling him she is joining him. Mary reads the telegram and charges Shields with his perfidy. He acknowledges the truth of the telegram and tries to square Mary with money. She returns home and her mother learns the truth. In her anger, the mother grabs a revolver and rushes off to the hotel, where she confronts Shields in his rooms and shoots him. Mary follows her mother to prevent murder. Meantime the real wife has arrived at the hotel. Shields is placed in bed and the doctor sent for while the mother is taken to jail. At the trial the mother refuses to tell why she shot Shields, wishing to protect her daughter's reputation. She is about to be ordered taken back for trial when a confession comes from Shields, telling his guilt. Shields dies. The mother is set free and returns home with Mary.

THE TEN O'CLOCK BOAT (June 11).—Howard, dying in prison for counterfeiting, begs his wife always to keep from the knowledge of their baby, Ruth, the fact that her father was a criminal. Twenty years later, Carey, an old pal of Howard's, having served out his term, comes to Mrs. Howard, and under threat to tell Ruth all about her father, persuades her to help him pass some counterfeit bills. Walton, of the U. S. Secret Service, who is engaged to Ruth, is assigned to track down the counterfeiters. On a certain morning, as she is about to leave the house, in answer to her daughter's question, Mrs. Howard says that she is visiting some friends on Staten Island and will take the ten o'clock boat. That day, after passing several counterfeit bills, she is followed by Walton to Carey's house, which is raided. As Mrs. Howard is disguised, the young detective does not discover her identity. She tells him of her efforts to shield Ruth from the knowledge that her father was a criminal. Meanwhile, the ten o'clock boat has been sunk and many lives lost. She persuades Walton to let Ruth believe that she has been drowned in the disaster. Walton and Ruth marry. Each year, on the anniversary of the sinking of the ten o'clock boat, Ruth honors her mother's memory. And in a prison cell the mother rejoices in her sole comforting thought—that her daughter shall never know.

HEARTS UNITED (Two Parts—June 12).—Mrs. Windom gives a farewell party before leaving to visit her mother. Her husband is very much devoted to their child. He is informed by Mrs. Hearns that Howard Jameson, a young clubman, is in love with his wife. Mr. Windom discovers the truth of what Mrs. Hearns has told him as he enters the conservatory. They quarrel. The next day she and Howard Jameson leave on the same train, and Mrs. Hearns notifies Mr. Windom of this, although Mrs. Windom doesn't know that Jameson is on the same train. Later, Jameson presents himself, and Mrs. Windom becomes very angry at him for following her. She gets off at the next station and decides to wait for the next train. While going through the tunnel the train Jameson is on meets with an accident and there is an explosion.

Mr. Windom reads of this and thinks his wife was on the same train and tells his little girl that her mother is dead. Mrs. Windom arrives at her mother's home and learns that her parent is at her country home in New Hampshire and goes there. Mr. Windom erects a tombstone with his wife's name on it, and he, with his child, visit it frequently. In the meantime, the widow, Mrs. Hearns sympathizes and shows increased interest in Mr. Windom, and they frequently meet, the child on several occasions passing them and showing slight jealousy. Mrs. Windom learns of her own death and decides to go home. She arrives and sees her child by the tombstone crying. The child then brings husband and wife together.

THE "OLD BATCH" (June 14).—Carter, an old bachelor, pretends to hate children, but while he chases them out of his country store, he slips them candy on the sly. Johnny and Sadie are the worst pests and bother the old man to death. The kids are orphans and brought up by an aunt who later dies. The kids are reared by Carter, who pretends great begrudgement at having to take them in, but when they are with him, he gives up his rooms to them and sleeps in the store.

They continue to pester the life out of him and one day beg him for some pennies, which he refuses. They are peeved and lie in hiding. They see the old man counting his money and also see where he hides it. After he has gone to bed, they sneak into the store and take the bag of coin, swipe a handful and hide the bag again, as a joke. The next night tramps break in and torture the old man in order to make him tell the hiding place of his treasure. He refuses and the kids hear the noise, see what is going on and run to the sheriff for aid. In the meantime the old man tells the hiding place for his money, but much to his surprise and the tramps' anger, it is not found. The old man is just about to be tortured when the sheriff arrives, and the tramps are captured. The kids show the old man where they hid the money, and are received with open arms.

THE OLD CLOTHES SHOP (Two Parts—June 19).—Summers and Roe, two crooks, learn that Bert Wells, a rich Westerner, is in town visiting his married sister, Alice Field, whom he has presented with a diamond tiara. They start out to get the lay of the land. Passing in old clothes shop, Summers is struck with the beauty of Mina, the granddaughter of Crichett, the owner of the shop. She, however, repulses him. She takes her new novel and goes to the park to forget the commonplaceness of everything in a world of her imagination, wherein she figures as "Lady Montmorency." Mina's reading is interrupted by a thrilling runaway. She sees Bert Wells rescue his sister, and instantly the Westerner becomes the hero of the little East Side girl. That night, Summers and Roe steal the tiara and a beautiful new gown of Alice Field's. The butler and maid, who are alone in the house, notify the police and describe both the stolen goods and the thieves. The next day, Summers takes the gown to Crichett's shop—merely as an excuse to see Mina. Later, left alone in charge of the shop, the girl yields to the temptation to put on the gown and walk in the park. In her hurry, however, to avoid her father, who just then returns, she runs off wearing one of Alice Field's slippers and one old shoe of her own. In the park, she wrenches her ankle, and Bert Wells, who happens to be strolling near, comes to her rescue. She tells him that her name is "Madeline Montmorency" and that she lives at the Plaza. He sees her home. As she is coming out of the hotel, she is confronted by detectives who recognize the stolen gown. In her flight, she drops Alice Field's slipper. Wells finds it and takes it home. Meanwhile, the detectives have traced Mina to the shop, where they arrest her and her grandfather. The butler and the maid are sumomned to identify the prisoners. They testify that these are not the thieves, and Wells goes bail for the Crichetts. He gives the old man his card, telling him that if he is in trouble, to call upon him. That evening, Summers and Roe go to the shop and take Mina away by force. Old Crichett phones the Westerner. They save Mina from the crooks and prevent the thieves from making their getaway. Summers and Roe go to prison. Old Crichett is killed in the gun fight with the crooks. Later, Mina marries her hero, and they go West to live on his ranch.

DOMINO.

THE STRIKE AT THE CENTIPEDE MINE (Two Parts—June 10).—John Daly, a desert miner, has struck it rich in the Centipede mine. In spite of the wealth taken from the mine, he is still "one of the boys," and refusing "to put on airs." Daly's greatest delight out of work hours is to slip down to his old friend Bill Foster's cabin and over a mug of beer play cards of an evening with Bill and court his charming daughter, Hope. Foster is foreman of Daly's mine and a loyal workman. He is also secretary of the miners' union of the district. Jim Foley, a miner rival of Daly's for the hand of Hope, is caught "highgrading" by Channing, Daly's superintendent, and fired. Foly is a trouble breeder with the "gift of gab," and in revenge against Daly, he stirs up the slumbering class hatred of the rougher element and urges them to strike and demand better wages. Foster opposed the voting of a strike but is hissed down when the miners return fro ma visit to Daly with a higher wage petition which Daly has declined to grant on the ground that the men are already getting higher wages than in any other mine of the district.

The strike is voted and in loyalty to his comrades, Foster is forced to quit his job and strike with them. Later, while the miners' wives and children are on the verge of starvation through the failure of the strike, Daly secretly provides Hope Foster with the means to keep them in food. Daly protects his mine with armed guards. On a night when most of the men are off duty, Foley plans to raid the mine. One of the miners' wives, grateful to Hope for her assistance, tips her off to the raid, and she in turn tips off Daly in time to enable him to block Foley's plan. Foley accuses Foster of turning traitor and in the fight that follows Foster licks Foley to a finish. The men, however, believe Foster guilty and hold him a prisoner in Foley's cabin. Unable to find her father and fearing further insult at the hands of Foley, Hope takes refuge at the mine. Learning that Foley and his men have forcibly taken possession of the town saloon (they having no money and unable to get booze on credit) Daly telegraphs to the sheriff in an adjoining town for help. The sheriff and his men board a special train and race for the scene to prevent bloodshed between the guards and miners. Learning of their approach, Foley resolves to hasten the attack on the mine and wreck the sheriff's special. He sends Bloom, a lieutenant, and several men to overpower the agent and tear up the track. They are frustrated by a tramp.

Meantime Foley and his men attack the mine. Channing, the superintendent, is killed while defending the mine with the guards. The sheriff and his men drive Foley away from the mine. Foley returns to his cabin and, seeing all lost, connects a fuse to a case of dynamite stolen from the mine magazine, lights it and leaves Foster to his fate. Bloom, dying from the wounds inflicted by the posse, tells Hope that her father is a captive in Foley's cabin. Hope races there just in time to save his life. The miner desperadoes are rounded up and Foley surrenders to the sheriff. Several days later the strike is broken and the men have returned to work. Daly proposes to Hope and is accepted.

KAY BEE.

THE PATHWAY FROM THE PAST (Two Parts—June 11).—Molly Kane works in a department store. She has a brother, Jim, who has gone wrong and joined a gang of toughs. Their mother dies, and on her deathbed she asks Molly to look out for Jim. Molly promises. Spider Lewis, the leader of the gang, and Jim's pal, becomes interested in Molly, but she refuses to have anything to do with him. Spider promises himself that he will some day get even with her. Spider plans a raid on a ship in the harbor. The plan is overheard by a policeman and the night of the raid the police trail the gang and they are all captured. Spider is offered his freedom if he will turn informer.

This he does, and seeing a chance to get even with Molly, he tells the police that she is one of the gang and that most of the plunder of the gang is concealed in her apartments. Her apartments are raided and the plunder found in Jim's room. Molly is arrested and sentenced to prison. She is released sooner than the rest of the gang because of her good behavior. Changing her name, she obtains employment in a general store in the country. Ames' the proprietor, falls in love with her and they become engaged. Later, Jim is released from prison and starts on a still hunt for Spider Lewis. Spider is now employed by a crooked firm of stock brokers and swindlers. He goes into the country to try to sell worthless stock to Ames. Molly sees him and starts to upbraid him, but he tells her that if she queers his game with Ames, he will tell Ames of her past. The next morning Molly confesses her past to Ames and tells him of Spider's crooked deal. Spider is kicked out by the indignant Ames and goes back to the city. Upon his arrival he is spied by Jim, who immediately fires upon him. Spider returns the fire and both are killed.

HIS SUPERFICIAL WIFE (Two Parts—June 16).—John Wallace, a middle-aged stock broker, is happily married to a butterfly sort of wife. Her jeweler shows her a diamond studded bracelet, valued at $2,500, and asks her permission to submit it to her husband for his personal inspection. Marion consents and tells the jeweler to bring the bracelet to her home that evening after the dinner hour. The jeweler does so, and meets with a cool reception from Wallace, who rebukes Marion for her extravagance. They have their first big serious quarrel. She locks herself in her bedroom and refuses to see or speak to her husband.

After a night of reflection, Wallace determines to make up the quarrel. His wife, not coming down to breakfast, he goes up to her room to see her. She refuses to either admit him or speak to him. Saddened, Wallace leaves for his office. Later in the day he is called out of town on business. Determined to please his wife, he is forced to mortgage his home for the $2,500 necessary to buy the bracelet. He keeps the fact a secret from her, however, and forwards the bracelet and a bouquet of flowers out to his home by messenger together with a note informing Marion that he is called out of town and won't be back until midnight.

That night, Marion attends a gambling card party at the home of a friend, and meets a Mr. Fulton, a social rounder, who pays her unwelcome attentions. She loses $135, and gives her hostess an I. O. U. for the debt. She returns home worried and half sick over the loss of the money. She falls asleep in front of the fireplace and has a weird dream in which her husband shoots a dream lover of hers. She is awakened by her returning husband and is overjoyed to find that it is only a dream. Sobered by the vividness of the dream, Marion gives her husband the bracelet and asks him to return it to the jeweler and forgive her, she promising to henceforth be a model wife.

AMERICAN.

THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS (Two Parts—June 7).—Joe Blaney's wife, and his employer, who is his father-in-law, believe him guilty of stealing money from the firm. The thief in reality was a firm member, but so cleverly did he cover his tracks, that circumstances point straight to young Blaney. Joe, in sheer despair because even his wife was against him, flees to a small western mining community. He secures a mail route and works so faithfully that he earns the deepest regard and respect of the citizens. Meanwhile Frances, his wife, sues for divorce, but objects to the condition set forth in the decree, so the divorce is not obtained and she and Joe remain husband and wife in the eyes of the law.

In the western mining town Joe is diligent. Elsa, the daughter of the hotel keeper, falls in love with him. She fancies that Joe returns her love, yet she wonders at his continued silence. Carlos, a Mexican, is in love with Elsa and attempts to force her to be his wife. To escape the unwelcome attentions of Carlos, Elsa goes to Joe and tells him of her deep love for him. Joe, like the true man that he is, reveals to Elsa the story of his past. Elsa seeks the solitude of the rugged forest that she may be alone in her deep disappointment. While Joe is in the depths of his sorrow, his eyes chance on a newspaper in which is an account of the divorce suit filed by his wife. He thinks the decree has been granted, and in all haste he seeks Elsa. They are married.

Months later the real thief confesses to the crime of which Joe was accused. Frances Blaney seeks Joe in his mining home and would return to him. In a vine-covered cabin in a mountain nook, Frances comes on Elsa playing with her baby. Joe is away in the mountains prospecting. Frances is on the point of revealing her identity, when word comes that Joe has been hurt and needs help. Oblivious of all but her husband's need, Elsa gives the baby to Frances to care for while she rushes to aid the injured Joe. She causes Joe to be carried into the cabin. Frances witnesses the deep affection between Joe and Elsa, and comes to a realization that Elsa, not herself, has earned the right to happiness with Joe. Frances leaves the lovers, returns to her eastern home, accepts the conditions of the divorce decree, and Joe is left forever with the little mountain girl who won his heart.

THE SOUL OF THE VASE (June 9).—Jason, the potter, is consumed by an inordinate desire to create a perfect vase. He subordinates everything—his life, his wife. Into Jason's home comes Clark, the connoisseur, and he at once is struck with love for Rene, the wife. He pleads with her to fly with him, and leave Jason alone with his clay and his kilns. The steadfast Rene, however, repulses the ardent wooer.

Meanwhile Jason's zeal grows. To add a desired luster to his vase he seizes Rene's jewels, grinds them and mixes them with his clay. Then the potter nods and dreams. Rene comes in a vision and offers him her soul if it can help him attain the perfect vase. The uncurbed ambition of the potter compels him to accept, and with his fevering craving for perfection, he places the soul of his wife within the red-hot kiln. Greater and greater the heat becomes. Nearer and nearer is Jason's vase approaching his ideal. Then comes the thought of Rene. He opens the kiln to release the soul of his wife. The air reaches the brilliant vase. It crumbles like dust in the wind. Jason awakens to find Rene, suffering, not from the heated kiln, but from absence of love from him. The potter comes to his senses. From his mind the mad desire for the perfect vase has vanished. In its place has come a love for Rene, whom he clasps lovingly to his breast.

HIS OBLIGATION (Two Parts—June 14).—Mary Lehner, the daughter of a village blacksmith, believes Ralph Moore an upright man. Instead, Moore is of a type that well might be termed the social reptile. Taking advantage of the blacksmith father's hospitality, Moore lives under the Lehner roof while his automobile is being repaired. He regards Mary as a plaything. The two spend happy days in each other's company. Then Moore returns to the city.

Time passes. Moore fails to keep his promise to return to claim Mary. The grief-stricken girl has a secret and rather than bear the humiliation of revealing it, she leaves her parents' home and seeks a living in the large city. All goes fairly well until the baby is born, then Mary finds herself unable to obtain employment, where the babe can be near her. At length in almost a wilderness she comes upon a deserted shack, shunned by all because of rumors of haunting spirits.

That same night Ralph Moore quarrels with his wealthy fiancee, and with some men companions, he goes to a drinking room. Moore becomes intoxicated, and while in this state essays to accompany two young women on an automobile ride. He becomes insulting to one of the girls, and she forces him to leave the car. He is left standing in the roadway while the girls drive off. He comes out of his drunken stupor, and wanders along the highway, seeking a place where he may stay until morning. In the distance he sees a deserted house and makes at once toward it. He enters. A voice startles him. It is a woman's voice asking him to start a fire. He complies, then falls back aghast when the flames illumine the sorrow-lined features of Mary. Tearfully Mary tells him of her shame, of her flight from home, of her struggles against great odds, for herself and her baby—their baby. A great light dawns on Ralph. For the first time in his gay life he awakens to his obligation. Folding the girl in his arms he begs forgiveness. Mary's tears are tears of joy, for she and her babe are lifted to their rightful social plane.

HER MUSICAL COOK (June 16).—Wallace is an ambitious young author, who has sought the quiet of an apartment hotel where he may write in undisturbed peace. Wallace is writing busily when he hears the rasping voice of a would-be prima donna, accompanied by an unbearable tinkling of off-key piano notes. The voice and the piano drive him wild. He buys a phonograph, hoping, by sheer mechanical noise, to shame the singer into silence, but to no avail. In desperation, he decides to take a short vacation. Before leaving, however, he yields to the impulse to place a sarcastic note under the door of the apartment whence comes the disturbance.

Nan, unknown to Wallace, lives in the adjoining apartment with her faithful cook. Coincidentally with Wallace's departure, Nan receives an urgent invitation to visit her uncle. She and Wallace encounter each other en route, in humorous fashion, and it is discovered that both are to visit the same summer resort. They become acquainted and their acquaintance ripens into love. They become engaged, neither discovering that they live in next door apartments. Wallace is called back to the city. Later Nan returns, and the faithful cook hands her the missive that Wallace had slipped under the door. Nan is insulted. Then she discovers the identity of the writer, and would cut him, her fiance from her acquaintance, but she becomes entangled in an awkward position, in which Wallace finds her. Repeated knockings at the door bring the cook into the hallway. She is singing at the top of her voice. Wallace discovers that it is the cook to whose musical performances he objected. A hasty explanation is made, with due apologies, and Nan and the young author, as man and wife, live happily.

BEAUTY.

THE REDEMPTION OF THE JASONS (June 8).—Alice James, an attractive young mother, is unable to support her little child. After a struggle with her emotions, she concludes to leave the babe at the door of Jerry and Jim Jason, two bachelors, who she knows will take the best of care of the infant. Tearfully the young mother takes this step, convincing herself that it is for the best, and sets out on her daily search for employment.

The Jasons are delighted with the baby, but how shall they take care of it. In their clumsy masculine way they try to minister to the little one's wants. Then the absurdity of their efforts overcomes them and they advertise for a nursemaid. Alice, the heartsick mother, sees the advertisement and applies for the position. She is employed and with a happy heart she sets about caring for her child. So kind and loving is she to the little one, and so cheerful about the home, that both the brother bachelors are smitten with affection for her.

Then gossip sets in. Alice has been seen by an old maid receiving kisses from a strange man. The brothers Jason investigate, then demand an explanation. Alice admits a young man kissed her. He is Tom, her husband! Tom, returned from a search for health, as hale and as hearty as before his sickness. The Jasons cannot part with the child. All ends happily when the two bachelors arrange to employ both Tom and Alice permanently, that the companionship of the little child may continue to brighten their two lonely and loveless lives.

THE MOLLYCODDLE (June 15).—John Pride insists that Betty, his daughter, marry Aleck Smart, rich pork packer. That Betty may meet Aleck, her father gives a party at the Meadows Club, in honor of Prof. Quack, who has won renown by the fact that he lived in woodland fastness for thirty days attired in nothing but a bathing suit. Betty can see no man but Jimmy Sterling, the pork packer's dollars notwithstanding. At the party, Prof. Quack and Jimmy get into an argument. Jimmy asserts that the professor's accomplishment was nothing wonderful, and declares that he himself can do as much. Quack calls Jimmy a mollycoddle. John Pride promises Jimmy the hand of Betty in marriage if Jimmy can duplicate the professor's feat.

Pride draws up these rules. Jimmy must enter the woods wearing only a bathing suit. At the end of thirty days, he must emerge, respectably clothed and in good physical condition. Jimmy leaves on his unique mission. Betty, imagining him starving in the woods, drives some chickens into the forest, hoping that Jimmy will find and kill some of them to keep from starving. Aleck Smart scents a rat, and goes to frustrate the scheme. But woe to him! Jimmy meets him, and interpreting John Pride's rules in his favor, he seizes the luckless packer and takes his clothing. At the end of the allotted time, Jimmy emerges from the forest. He is riding a shining steed, is fully dressed in expensive clothes and he has a valet. This last dignitary bears a startling resemblance to Aleck Smart, pork packer. John Pride laughingly admits defeat. Betty is given to Jimmy.

MAJESTIC.

PIRATES BOLD (June 15).—Waldo and the baby went on an outing to the beach with the nurse, but it mattered little to Waldo, who consumed much learning from his book, wherever he went or wandered. Nurse went off with the auto driver and left the studious one in charge of the baby. That gave Bob and Tilly a chance to make their innings. Bob was a pirate chief and his crew was Tilly and two black slaves, Rastus and Dave, thrown in. Waldo would not think of playing pirates, but he became part of the game all right. They bound him in their pirate cave and sailed away for the sea with the baby. But the pirate brig was a leaky motor boat that ran away out to sea. Bold pirates became frightened ones when the runaway boat also began to leak; but when the nurse returned and found what her neglect had led to, assistance was soon sent to the pirates.

DIRTY FACE DAN (June 8).—Pondering on the mysteries of this mysterious world, Olive went to Dick in his detective office. True to her fairy book she planted coin and it grew into bearing more. Now she finds it stolen, with boys, dogs and cats footsteps all over the place, where she left big Carlo to guard the coin. That made Dick wake up. Dirty Face Dan and his pals were suspects, but like all suspects were defiant. That did not please Dick. He called a trial, and between third degrees and guilty consciences the dirty work came out, and Dan got his faced washed.

THE PATRIOT AND THE SPY (Thanhouser—Four Parts—June 7).—Two young people marry in a Continental village and receive the congratulations of all save the rejected suitor. He bides his time while the couple live happily and are blessed twice with children. War is declared after the husband has suffered an injury for life and the rejected suitor enlists. At the front he distinguishes himself, becomes a sergeant and then is captured. In prison, his spirit languishes and he accepts an offer to become a spy. Returning to his native village, the spy tells a thrilling story about how he escaped and is applauded by all. The patriot takes him home, and never hears how the spy made love to his wife behind his back. The wife, however, turned him down as hard as she had done before she was married.

The spy now signals to the enemy that the village is free of troops, and when the foreign contingent arrives he tells the commander that an attempt will be made to blow up the bridge behind them. Then he goes back to the village, says help is on the way—the bridge must be destroyed. The patriot offers to do this, and is caught red-handed and sentenced to be hung. The spy now openly taunts him, telling him he is going to take his wife. As the spy is struggling with the wife, the patriot appears. He is wet and covered with blood, for the rope broke and he dropped into the river and swam ashore. Approaching troops shoot the spy by mistake and the patriot and his wife escape.

STEPPING WESTWARD (Ideal—Two Parts—June 7).—After the runaway marriage of Prudence and Elisha has been interrupted by Prudence's father, who wants his daughter to marry the young Justice who has money, Prudence leaves home. On finding her letter, her father dies in a fit of anger. In coming to a town where Lincoln's call to arms is being sounded, Prudence offers to sing for the cause. She is heard by a rich woman who realizes that the girl has a marvelous voice and adopts her, giving her a training which makes her later a world-renowned singer.

In the meantime, Elisha has responded to his country's call, and Prudence receives a letter telling her that he is killed. It is a false report, however, and Elisha returns from the war, and marries another girl. When years have passed, after Prudence's farewell to the stage, she returns to her native village, arriving just as Elisha is being sent by his son and daughter-in-law to the soldiers' home. Prudence makes herself known to Elisha and the couple, with youth renewed, go to finish the wedding ceremony at the same Justice's office where it had been rudely interrupted years before. Ignoring the attempts of his son to interfere Elisha forces the Justice to marry them and finds, when the ceremony is ended that he has married, not poor Prudence grown old, but a wealthy woman of power and influence.

ALMOST LUCKY (Superba—June 8).—A tramp steals a fur coat from an automobile. A policeman finds a purse dropped by a lady, and seeing the fine gentleman dressed in fur, thinks the pocketbook must belong to him. As the officer advances to offer the purse, the tramp thinks he is going to arrest him, and starts to run with the policeman following. In order to get rid of the coat, he throws it over a fence, where it lights on the head of a second tramp, who thanks his stars for his good fortune and goes on. The policeman arrives and gives him the purse. Asking no questions he proceeds to have a good time in a saloon, but when he goes out both purse and coat are rudely taken away from him by the owners, assisted by the police. The tramp escapes, meets the first wanderer, and they decide to be partners for life.

MIXING CARDS (Superba—June 8).—Harry decides to play a prank on his rival, Charlie, so he puts the latter's pipe in the place of the fan Charles has bought their sweetheart for her birthday, Charles discovers the joke. He goes to Geraldine's house. When Geraldine's presents arrive, little sister, being curious, opens the boxes and mixes cards. Geraldine comes in from an auto ride, and opening her gifts, finds Harry's card with Charlie's old pipe. Harry arrives just in time to receive a cold reception. Charles, having discovered Harry's little jokes, comes and receives thanks for a rope of pearls, and takes all the credit coming his way, thinking that they had been Harry's gift. Just as he is the hero of the hour, Geraldine's father comes in and lets it be known that he is the donor of the pearls. Charlie, overcome, faints in father's arms.

THE SPIDER (Grandin—June 9).—Reading in the same paper of a girl who got a great deal of fun out of playing pranks in boy's clothes and of society "Raffles," who left a card with the picture of a spider on it after every big haul, Ethel decides to play "Spider" herself, just to fool her friends. At a ball that night, she steals a rope of pearls from the neck of her friend, Miss Ames, and when the loss is discovered, a card with a spider on it is found in her hair. Ethel's sweetheart, a young budding detective, is given the commission to capture "The Spider." That night he finds his silver piled in the middle of the table with "The Spider's" card beside it, as if the thief would mock him. Ethel is invited to spend the week end at Miss Ames' house. Mr. Ames, the father, advertises a reward of $1,000 for the return of the necklace. He receives word that "The Spider" will come to claim his reward at 12 o'clock that night. Ethel waits till all are asleep but the three men, her lover, Miss Ames' sweetheart and Mr. Ames, who are sitting beside the safe in which the money has been deposited. Then she steals down, blows the fumes of a sleeping gas in through a keyhole, and captures the reward, leaving the pearls and spider card in the hand of every man. Waiting to see the consternation when the men awake, Ethel is caught in the hall. Though her little joke is rather bitter for her young detective, he is made happy when Ethel tells him she had told him she would marry him if he caught "The Spider."

HEINIE'S MILLIONS (Starlight—June 10).—Heinie receives an inheritance of $999,999,999.00, and having drawn it from the bank, proceeds to bless humanity with it, starting by throwing it to the passing throng from an automobile. A tango parlor, where the pretty teachers receive their pay in thousand dollar bills, and a party full of beauties later in the evening, puts an end to the career of the near millionaire, and he and his fellow-boob roll into the mouth of a sewer and hide.

THE NEAR CAPTURE OF JESSIE JAMES (Luna—June 10).—Jessie James is a peaceful scrubbing girl, but one night after reading a dime novel full of thrilling adventures she becomes a veritable daredevil, and in her dreams, goes forth with the cook, who has also become a bold bandit, in search of plunder. They hold up the stage coach, and steal the driver's daughter. The cook is captured, while Jessie James leads her followers a wild chase, which ends in a fall down a cliff and a bump at the bottom, which wakens her to the knowledge that she is only a foolish scrubbing girl and that she has fallen out of bed.

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK (Premier—Two Parts—June 11).—Fred receives an invitation from his uncle to visit him in the West and at the same time that a telegram comes stating that a moving picture concern wants a scenario from a melodrama at 12 o'clock the next day. Arriving in the West, Fred captures a gunman is persuaded to release him by the gunman's sister, Lillian, who takes Fred's eye. Fred loses his heart. Charlie, the gunman, later sees Fred talking to his sister, and, thinking that Fred is a government spy stationed in the West to capture a band of counterfeiters, of which he is a member, he tells the rest of the gang about him. They send him a letter warning him to get out of the country. Fred pays no attention to it. They capture him and lock him in a deserted cabin, bound before the muzzle of a gun which will explode as the clock strikes twelve. Lillian hears of it, and rushes to the cabin after phoning the sheriff. Fred manages to free himself, and falls to the floor just in time to miss the bullet, which goes through the wall into the body of Lillian, who has come to lend aid Fred hastens to her and realizes that she is dead, just as he wakens to find himself bent over his typewriter where he has fallen asleep. He proceeds to pound out his story, knowing that his dream will make a plot, which he can easily finish by 12 o'clock.

CANNED CURIOSITY (Pyramid—Two Parts—June 12).—John Ware, the author, to prove his contention that all women are curious leaves cans filled with the smoke from his own cigarette at the homes of the women of his acquaintance in the town where he and his pal have spent the summer, writing on the packages that they are not to be opened and that they will be called for that night. Every woman opens her package, but realizing that a joke has been played on her, each one refills it with smoke from any sort of tobacco she can find. Betty, John's sweetheart, recognizes the smell of the smoke in her can as belonging to the writer's own cigarettes, so she lights one she has been keeping as a souvenir of him. The author, on opening Betty's can, thinks that he has at last found a woman without curiosity, and asks her to marry him. She consents, but feeling that she has been deceiving him, interrupts the wedding to confess. The author forgives her and the ceremony proceeds.

LOVE'S STRATEGY (United—June 13).—In spite of their parent's objections, the girl and boy decide to get married. After the ceremony they think up a novel way of bringing the their parents to terms. The boy opens an office, and pretending he is a lawyer, writes to

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Exhibitor:

WHAT becomes of the money you pay us for Minusa Screens? First, we pay for our materials, or promise to, which is almost as good. Then we pay a few salaries and running expenses and split the rest between the fair-haired boy who writes these ads., and Anderson and Hetzel. The boy gets $2.00 a week—some weeks—and the rest those two day-and-night-workers spend on Minusa improvements! The idea!

Well, since it is your money, we have to do something about it. So we hereby agree to take back any Minusa, at any time, and give you full credit on any new or improved screen.

You see we protect your screen investment!

The wonderful Minusa of today is far ahead of the gold fibre of a year ago—but you won't ever have to throw a Minusa away. We redeem it.

Send us specifications. We "BUILD BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE, NO. 24, "Shadow's of War" (Two Parts—Released Week June 7).—Wu Fang is approached by secret agents who commission him to secure at any price the model torpedo invented by Craig Kennedy, and in the possession of the United States Government. Wu Fang sets his machinery in motion and awaits results. In the meantime Kennedy, apprised by his agents of Wufang's hiding place, goes there with Jameson and by a piece of remarkable strategy, succeeds in capturing him.

Wu Fang is wounded and taken to a hospital, where he manages to substitute another Oriental in his place and makes his escape. He meets his henchman coming in from Washington with the stolen torpedo model. The only other model in existence is one in Kennedy's possession. Kennedy is demonstrating its use in a fountain in the Dodge Conservatory. A momentary distraction gives Wu Fang's lieutenant opportunity to steal this model. He starts away with it, but is seen by the butler, who gives chase. Seeing he is likely to be apprehended, he quickly hides the torpedo model in a large flower-pot, and escapes, wounded to a waiting automobile. Kennedy commandeers another car, and follows. In the enthralling game of wits that follows Wu Fang is killed and the whereabouts of Kennedy becomes a matter of serious conjecture.

JEYPOOR, THE ROSE CITY (Hindustan—Released Week of June 7).—One of the most beautiful towns in India, Jeypoor furnishes an ideal for a travel picture. The streets of this town radiate like a fan from the large square, in which is situated the palace of the Rajah. This mass of beautifully colored masonry represents in its architecture the tail of a peacock. The arrival of a caravan, a Hindu procession, the elongated ibis in the public gardens, and other picturesque scenes all go to make up a most interesting film.

POLICE DOG (On Same Reel as Foregoing—Fifth Episode—A comedy Cartoon by C. T. Anderson of the Bray Studios—Released Week of June 7).—Pietro, a bank burglar, travels in the disguise of an organ grinder and uses his trained monkey as a means of getting the swag. Monk tries to hold out some, but is caught in the act. Officer Piffle and the Pinkerton Pup spot Pietro and the monk at work and start after them. The latter hotfoot it away, the monk, pursued by the Pinkerton Pup, takes to the automobile of the president of the bank, while his luckless master is chased by Officer Piffle and is compelled to use his feet as a means of escape. Finally, after a chase that leads over houses, down chimneys, and through other out-of-the-way places, both culprits land in a station house and are put under arrest.

WHO PAYS?—Series No.9—"For the Commonwealth" (Balboa—Three Parts—Released Week of June 7).—Ellis Mason, appointed assistant district attorney under Bell, is forced by Bell to overlook the fact that there are flagrant violations of the law in a certain dive. Mason takes advantage of Bell's temporary absence to raid the place; but the very man on whom Bell is dependent, a high church dignitary, a "pillar of society," owns the place and gets revenue from it.

Mason's fearlessness is noted and appreciated by the Commonwealth Club, who nominate him for the district attorneyship. But the coterie of vice purveyors get busy. They secure the services of Clarice Adair, dancing girl and bunco steerer of the raided cafe, to lure Mason to her room on a well-feigned pretense. The couple are apprehended and Mason's candidacy discredited. His sweetheart is turned against him, because of his "proven" guilt, and his future darkened by the connection this affair will always have with his name.

The dancing girl, conscience stricken and desirous of clearing Mason, attempts to exonerate him, but is threatened by Bell with a long term of imprisonment for perjury should she confess. Who Pays?

WHEN THE LION ROARED (Released Week of June 7).—Judge Spuff, seeking re-election, decides to get the support of the people by treating them to an animal show. On the night of the big show, the opera house is packed with people waiting for the curtain to go up.

Behind the scenes, the animal keeper falls asleep and Bruno the Cinaman Bear starts on a tour of inspection. Time comes for the curtain to rise. Judge Spuff is hard put to it to provide the promised show. Lazy Luke, spending his leisure time in a county cell, hears of the Judge's difficulty. He proclaims his willingness to make up as a bear and frolic with the lion, when he is assured of the lion's harmlessness. For his part of the job he will get his freedom plus a $10 bill. Luke gets into the bear skin, the curtain goes up, and the audience nerves itself for sensations. It gets them. This "decrepit" lion roars as Luke is about to enter its cage, and Luke's courage vanishes out the back door. Luke follows. The crowd becomes panicky, and Judge Spuff sees his political career vanishing down the street with the fleeting "bear." Stew Pidd, the police force starts in pursuit. Luke, as a bear, finds he has entree to the best homes in town. After frightening a spooning couple into hysterics, he ascends to an attic, where he hopes to get some rest. But it's no use. He climbs into a bed already half occupied by Dina, the housemaid, who doesn't run much to bears. Quite the contrary. She makes an astounding leap from her window, just as Stew Pidd arrives on his bear hunt. An awful battle ensues, until Stew Pidd sees a bottle of "courage" labelled Geneva Gin. They forsake hostilities for "the greater love," and are found later by the fearless hunters, locked in close embrace.

FOUR FEATHERS (May 24).—The story opens at General Feversham's residence at the annual dinner that he gives to the ones who are left of the Crimea officers. At this dinner, Harry Feversham, the General's only son, a boy of fourteen, is a guest. After the dinner is finished they tell stories of what happened in the Crimea, and Harry listens intently. The story is carried ahead about ten years when Harry is a captain in the army, showing him with his friend, Captain Durrance. They are both in love with the same, girl Ethne Eustace, and Harry and the girl after a time become engaged.

Harry gives a dinner to his brother officers, Captain French, Lt. Willoughby and Captain Castleton, to announce his engagement and during the dinner, Harry receives a telegram saying the regiment is ordered on regular service. Harry does not show his fellow officers the telegram as he should have done. They see him throw it into the fire. After they have gone, Harry determines to give up his commission, fearing that when put to the test he will be a coward. To preclude such a possibility he sends in his resignation.

His fellow officers have, in the meantime, found out that they are ordered on active service, and next day they see that Harry Feversham has resigned his commission. They decide to send him three white feathers. While a ball is going on at Ethne's home a small package comes addressed to Captain Harry Feversham. He opens it in front of the girl and she asks him what he has done and he tells her. When she brands him as a coward, and, taking a white feather from her fan, gives it to him.

After this Harry Feversham's father will have nothing to do with him, and he consults his mother's old friend, Lieutenant Sutch, and announces to him that he is going to try and retrieve himself. He sails for Egypt in the hope of being able to do something and make the senders take back their feathers. After a long wandering at last he gets his chance and after many trials and tortures by the Arabs and a thrilling rescue he makes his fellow officers take back their feathers.

In the meantime Durrance has been with his regiment in the Suydan and has been struck blind by the glare of the sun and Ethne, taking pity on him, has become engaged to him. Harry returns home to find that Ethne is engaged to another man. One day Durrance overhears them talking and decides for the sake of both of them to give up the girl, thus making Ethne and Harry both happy, and go back to the desert he loved so well.

HER OWN WAY (May 31).—Georgiana Carley, the woman, and Richard Coleman, the man, have been friends since childhood, and have grown to love each other without having become aware of the fact. Sam Coast, a wealthy young man, formerly a rough miner, has also fallen in love with Georgiana, and is determined to let nothing stand in his path to obtain her for his wife. Georgiana is of wealthy family, and her brother, through money left him by his parents, has a considerable fortune. This brother, Steven Carley, is of a lovable but weak disposition, given to speculation, and Georgiana has great trouble in preventing him from losing his money.

During the Philippine war many young men volunteer for service. Among them Dick Coleman, who obtains a lieutenant's commission, and he prepares to leave for the Philippines. Before leaving he realizes that he loves Georgiana, and decides to propose to her with the intention of marrying her on his return. Sam Coast is aware of the affection existing between Dick and Georgiana, and uses every effort to prevent them coming together. He has himself proposed to Georgiana and has been refused.

When Dick calls upon Georgiana shortly before leaving for the Philippines with the intention of proposing, Sam breaks into the conversation and keeps the two young people apart, and finally informs Dick that he has proposed to Georgiana himself and has been accepted. This naturally upsets Dick very much and causes him to leave Georgiana without making any declaration. He acts in such a strange way that Georgiana cannot understand what is wrong with him. He finally leaves for the Philippines followed by an agent of Coast's who has also enlisted, and whom Coast has employed to prevent any correspondence passing between Dick and Georgiana while he is in the Philippines.

Sam's next step is to accomplish the ruin of the Carley family, in order to force Georgiana into such a position that she must either accept him and his wealth, or suffer hardship and poverty. Georgiana, however, is obdurate and, in spite of the loss of her fortune and even her reputation, still keeps the family together. Through an ambush of Dick's regiment in the Philippines, Dick is believed to be dead, and Georgiana learns the news in the papers. She is again confronted by Coast, and the situation has become such that he has it in his power to dishonor her brother's name. To prevent this, she makes the final sacrifice of her own love for her family, and agrees to marry him. Dick Coleman, however, was not killed in the Philippines, but simply wounded and taken prisoner by the Filipinos. He escapes and unexpectedly arrives at the Carley home just in time to prevent the marriage.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 5—"For the Sake of a False Friend"—Two Parts, May 31.).—In the commotion following the theft of the diamond from the sky from the theft of Vivian Marston, Luke Lovell stole along the darkened piazza, and started across the lawn. Policemen were racing toward the Randolph home in response to the blasts of a police whistle. Lowell, reaching the street, found escape cut off and he dropped the diamond into the corner mail box. He was captured and dragged into the Randolph drawing room. Search of his person failed to reveal the precious gem, but Blake ordered him detained on suspicion. As the gypsy was being led from the room, Sheriff Swain entered the Randolph home, with the warrant for Arthur's arrest. Blair, fearful that his cousin, to avoid arrest, might proclaim him as the murderer, urged him to flee, before it was too late. As the sheriff grabbed his arm, Arthur broke away, ran to the railroad yard, and leaped aboard an outgoing freight train. Hidden in a corner of the car were four hoboes who attacked the fugitive. Arthur fought them as best he could, but they finally overcame him, and he found that his clothing had been exchanged for the one which had adorned the body of Strap McGee.

Hours later, Arthur, certain that he had succeeded in eluding pursuit, dropped from the car. Farmer Morton needed a man for the harvesting and Arthur's physique quickly won him the position. Hagar and Esther, their gypsy garments supplanted by modern clothes, were temporarily domiciled at the hotel. Hagar's efforts to comfort the melancholy girl were of no avail, for she persisted, despite Hagar's declaration to the contrary, in her belief of Arthur's innocence. "He is guilty, Esther, my dear," insisted the gypsy queen. "Otherwise why should he flee? Who gave the diamond to that woman, but Arthur? I am rich. Forget him, as I have done, and we will go away, far away from it all."

It had been a lean day for Quabba, and also Neuroco. By way of introduction, Quabba is an itinerant musician, who gleans a livelihood, or a near one, for himself and his monkey, Neuroco, by means of his antiquated hand-organ. Seated on a doorstep, Quabba was sharing his last piece of bread with his "collector," when a giant auto truck dashed around the corner, its jolting tossing one of the many empty mail bags into the roadway. Quabba shouted, but the driver did not hear him. Something he felt caused Quabba to turn the bag inside out. An exclamation of mingled surprise and thankfulness followed, as his hand closed over a glittering diamond, the clasp of the chain to which it was attached being fastened to the seam of the bag, one of a dozen or more, which had been condemned and was on the way to the repair shop.

Placing the gem in his pocket and thrusting the mail bag into a convenient ash can, Quabba, with Neuroco, unmindful of the fortune the good saint had placed in his master's hand, started down the alley headed for the next town. Noontime found Quabba tired but happy, fast asleep under a great tree. Neuroco, playing at his side, playfully put his hand in the master's pocket. A moment later the simian had climbed into the high tree and cunningly dropped the diamond from the sky into a nest.

MAKE'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

United States War Department Specifies Gundlach Projection Lenses

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co.,
Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—Your letter of May 12th, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stereo Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,
THE PRECISION MACHINE CO., INC.
J. E. Graef, Act. Gen. Mgr.

Every Gundlach Projection Lens is guaranteed perfect in optical quality. We maintain a uniform high standard of quality that insures as good a lens to one customer as to another and no better lenses can be made either to order or for higher prices.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co.

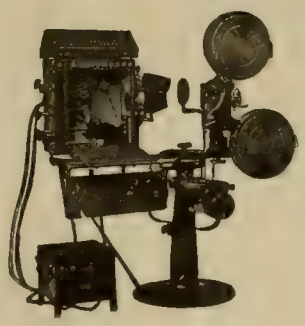
IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

The Motiograph Will Do for You What It Has Done for Others

Read the unsolicited letter.



Collinwood, Ohio, 5-24-15.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—Yours of May 19th at hand. In regards to placing my order for new machines, I wish to state that I have had Motiographs in my theatre for three years or more, and, if you remember, I just recently had them overhauled at your factory, and I want to thank you for being prompt and the good work you did. They are the same as new machines now. If you remember, I am the party that concluded to replace my Motiographs with ——— ——— — and had already installed two new ——— ——— —, to my sorrow, as I could not get the light. I had all the trouble I ever want to have. They were in just one week and I could not get my Motiographs back quick enough. Me for the Motiograph. They can all talk about their steady pictures and all of that, but I like to be able to see my pictures as well as have them steady, and with the Motiograph I have bright, clear, steady pictures.

I will again thank you for your speediness in repairing my two machines. I had them shipped out of here on Monday and they were back and in use on Saturday night the same week, and the ——— ——— — yanked out and returned to the dealer.

Yours for success,
(Signed) C. E. HUTSENPILLER, Prop.,
Virginia Theatre.

If you have a machine that is not giving a bright, clear picture it will pay you to install the MOTIOGRAPH. It is noted for its long life, with small up-keep, besides giving a rock-steady, clear picture.

Write for MOTIOGRAPH Literature.

New York City.

Dear Sir:-

Your letter of the 24th inst., to hand and contents carefully noted.

I am indeed very glad to say that after one year use of the Arc Controller, I cannot see how any progressive exhibitor can possibly do without one. They have done much to improve the general projection and the industry owes a great deal to your corporation for introducing this remarkable article.

Yours sincerely,
MARK STRAND THEATRE COMPANY

It pays to circularize motion picture theatres. The "leads" secured, however, depend largely on the composition and "get-up" of the circular. Including the name of the exhibitor with the name and address of the theatre helps, and you get this by using our mailing list service. Its cost is made up by saving in postage, etc.

Another Thanhouser Ten Strike!

REMEMBER how, in the good old days, the Thanhouser Studios would every once in a while surprise you with something beyond all your expectations? Here is and it will give you the most joyful jolt that ever ran through your box office. Florence LaBadie is the simple little maid who proves to be so very wise, and Harry Benham is the man who wins the coquette. David Garrick wrote this comedy—and it's charming—just charming; that describes it best!

Two Reels Released, Tuesday, June 15

"In the Valley"

You will like pretty Lorraine Huling as the maid from the hills whose lofty ideals bring her back from the valley of care. A picture of inspiring thought; the kind that makes film friends.

This is a most terrible tale involving real money—two cents! Helen Badgely and Leland Benham are all upset about it, but the little darlings finally solve it and two lolly-pops supply a sweet finish. One Reel. Released, Sunday, June 20

"Little Herman"

Here's a clever novelty: Herman is the only man on earth who can do everything—and he does. Nothing is too hard, heavy, big or light. On this reel is a short comedy, "Ebenezer Explains." We'll let him do his own explaining.

Announcing "Scandal"

Lois Weber

A Life Drama—announced for early release on the regular Universal Program.

An unusual story. Adjectives cannot do it justice. It is too real, too human, too big, for mere words.

It hits you! It hits me! It hits our neighbors! It touches the quick! It makes us remember (and regret) every word of idle gossip we have ever repeated.

Not scenically spectacular—but emotionally superb.

Written by

Lois Weber, Author of "Hypocrites"

And bigger than "Hypocrites," it is the biggest thing this wonderful woman has ever done!

She has taken common people—you and me—and the folks next door—and put us all into a play that simply keeps us, and all the rest of the movie fans, up to a high pitch of emotional tension for five full reels.

"Scandal" is beyond question one of the greatest features ever produced anywhere

There's not a break, nor a breathing space, for a full hour of solid moving picture enjoyment in the swift and unexpected plot development.

MOVING UNIVERSAL PICTURES

A DRAMA YOU'LL NEVER FORGET

Crystal clear photography; homey, every day realistic and intensely interesting settings give this superb production a finish that entitles it to first rank among the big special feature pictures of all time.

From plot to production this film satisfies.

It cannot be advertised too strongly. It will go big and pack any house to capacity.

Phillips Smalley

Direction of

Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley

No feature recently issued by the Universal has offered such opportunity for strong, high-pressure, business-getting publicity.

READY. We have wonderful posters, heralds, banners, postcards, throwaways, publicity stories, etc., in fact, everything that will get the real business for a special feature. Book now for the big Universal Program with its genuine special feature release EVERY WEEK IN THE YEAR.

"Scandal," beyond question, makes the most gripping appeal of any picture ever shown

REMEMBER—"Scandal" was written by LOIS WEBER, Author of "HYPOCRITES."

—"Scandal" is released on the regular Universal Program.

—"Scandal" on the regular program means so slight an advance on the cost of the regular program that it makes "feature" prices look like the rankest sort of extravagance.

The money makers use foresight and book and advertise such "velvet" as "Scandal" well in advance. The also-rans put off till too late because they depend on hind-sight. Be WISE. Book NOW. Your nearest Exchange, or

"The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe"

1600 Broadway, New York

BOOK NOW

The Universal's latest and greatest serial—a story of Adventure, Romance and Love—gripping, fascinating, thrilling, absorbing—the type of serial the public is clamoring for. Written by Emerson Hough, author of "The Mississippi Bubble," "50-40 or Fight," and other world famous stories. Featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard—with 15 weeks and 30 reels of alluring episodes.

THE BROKEN COIN

EVERY succeeding Universal Serial has outclassed the one before and THE BROKEN COIN will do likewise. "Lucille Love," "The Trey O' Hearts," "The Master Key," "The Black Box," have given to Exhibitors the mighty weapon with which to get the big money. The public does want serials—the right kind of serials—the kind and character that inspire, fascinate, grip, and that tell a real story in a real way, with punches in every episode, with heart throbs, serials that entertain week after week, that hold undivided attention from the very start to the finish.

THAT'S the kind of a serial THE BROKEN COIN is. It will throw its mystic spell around your audience—it will delight—absorb attention and highest interest. It will enthuse your audiences from the very first few feet of film in the first episode. It has cost the Universal untold sums to film this magnificent production, but every dollar spent will bring back to Exhibitors immense returns. You who failed to profit by the past Universal's Serials have the big opportunity before you NOW. Don't let the other Exhibitor up the street grab this serial away from you.

WHILE arranging for booking, write or wire your Exchange for a copy of the greatest advertising campaign book ever produced for a serial in the history of the film business. The Broken Coin advertising campaign book tells you everything. Gives you plans complete. Shows you the posters, tells the story, shows the complete advertising campaign for the newspapers—tells you how you can get the ad campaign cuts FREE—tells you EVERYTHING you want to know. SEND for a copy of this book. IT'S FREE for the asking.

The Greatest Help Ever Offered to Exhibitors

Here's the plan in a nutshell. First let us tell you that there is nothing for you to buy. We have nothing to sell you. The crowds that this remarkable plan will draw into your theatre will come without the spending of one single, solitary penny on your part.

R-K MOVIE TICKET CORPORATION

Robyn-Kander Movie Tickets will be packed in the packages of the world's greatest manufacturers. When a man or a woman in your town buys a package of crackers, or of oatmeal, or soap, or starch, or bluing, or coffee, or tea, or sugar; when he or she buys any food product in package form; or any drug, or other necessity, there will be packed in that package a portion of an admission ticket (usually one-twentieth of a five-cent admission), and when the buyer has saved enough to make up the price of an admission to your theatre, that is 20 for a five-cent admission, or 40 for a ten-cent admission, you are to accept these tickets the same as a cash admission, and the UNIVERSAL WILL REDEEM THEM FOR THEIR FULL FACE VALUE IN SPOT CASH—or accept them in payment for film service, or anything else.

That is all there is to the plan that needs to be explained—but the benefits and the way this wonderful scheme works out would fill a book.

READ ON. We want you to know the purpose of this advertisement, which is NOT TO INDUCE YOU TO BUY SOMETHING BUT TO GIVE YOU THE POSITIVE ASSURANCE OF PACKED HOUSES AT EVERY PERFORMANCE by accepting Robyn-Kander Movie Tickets for admissions to your theatre.

These tickets will be good for admission to any theatre in the United States or Canada, regardless of what film service they are using. These tickets will be redeemed at their full cash value by any Universal Exchange or by the Home Office of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York. You have your choice of credit with the Exchange for goods or supplies or for Film Service, if you are a Universal Exhibitor; OR YOU CAN HAVE THE AMOUNT IN CASH.

Think of it! People will pack your house day after day, and night after night, because it costs them nothing to see your show, still you are paid cash for every admission.

Naturally you will welcome them. The more the merrier. BECAUSE you are going to collect full admission in CASH for every ticket turned in at your door, AND THE WHOLE TRANSACTION WILL NOT COST YOU ONE RED CENT. Not even if you never sold a ticket at your box-office would you stand to lose anything. Your Universal Movie Tickets are as good as cash. C-A-S-H—NO discount. Full face value at no expense to you.

Now do you begin to grasp the wonderful power of this remarkable plan to pack your house at every performance?

Can you imagine anybody throwing away, or neglecting to save any portion of a FREE admission ticket good in any Movie Theatre in the United States or Canada?

Everybody in the Amusement business knows that people would rather have a free theatre ticket than the same amount in cash. It is that spirit that is going to pack your house—and more than that—it is actually giving your patrons "something for nothing."

Don't fail to write immediately for full particulars of this grand plan that will pack your house without one penny of expense for you.

Two Princesses Make Two Royal Photoplays

Is there anything more fascinating than the love romance of a princess? You spent hours pouring over these stories when you were a child. You are still thrilled by them in book or play, no matter how occupied your time with the more serious things of life. For everyone must relax and everyone has a basic love for romance.

"Graustark," that wonderful 6-act photoplay by George Barr McCutcheon, is a story of a princess who loves a man because he IS a man and marries him, too, in spite of all opposition and the traditions of royalty, that a princess cannot wed an American without rank.

"The Slim Princess," the beautiful 4-act comedy-drama by George Ade, contains a most human little princess who has acquired a taste for pickles, despite the fact that they make her thin, which is next to a crime in her country. Then she wakes up to find that there is a fairy country, America, where slim persons are most beautiful. And she finds her Prince Charming in a rich American also.

These two great Essanay photoplays need no introduction to you. They already are thrilling thousands of persons all over the country. It is no experiment to book them. They already have proved that they contain that quality of human interest that holds every audience, children and grown-ups, rich or poor.

They will make money for you. Book them now through any of the branch offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc.

And Still Another Famous Players' Triumph!

MARGUERITE CLARK

"THE PRETTY SISTER OF JOSE"

adds another overwhelming success to the long list of Famous Players' screen achievements.

Glance through these eulogistic excerpts from the trade paper reviews—they are stronger than any statements we could make:

"'The Pretty Sister of Jose,' with Marguerite Clark as Pepita, is a beautiful picture. Perhaps one would not go far wrong in saying the most beautiful picture in which Miss Clark has appeared. It gratifies the eye in every scene; it reaches the sympathies; it satisfies the desire for a logically balanced romantic story, and it offers some uncommonly fine acting."

—Moving Picture World.

"All the essentials of a delightful drama are present en masse in 'The Pretty Sister of Jose,' with the result that as a romance the picture attains practically the height of excellence."

—Motion Picture News.

"It succeeds in contributing novelty to every scene. The scenic effort was very successful. Marguerite Clark's expression changes purposes from darkest despair through coquette to woman in love. There is something essentially attractive about this very popular star aside from her clever acting, which may only be attributed to a decided magnetism."

—Dramatic Mirror.

"The exquisite art of Marguerite Clark, the wonderful Spanish atmosphere which has been so jealously guarded throughout the production, and the delightful story of the romance make 'The Pretty Sister of Jose' a very popular offering. Miss Clark is at her best in the portrayal of these tantalizing, will-o'-th'-wisp characters, but she is by no means lacking when she is called upon to enact more potent scenes."

—Morning Telegraph.

The ROMANCE of ELAINE

The Concluding Chapters of the Exploits

Now comes the final triumph of Elaine!

After her desperate dangers, her narrow escapes from the highly intelligent and malevolent enemies who for months have beset her, she becomes Elaine the victorious.

All the millions who have so breathlessly followed her in her vicissitudes wait to see her in this, the happy conclusion of her escapades and her exploits.

Elaine's trials and tribulations are drawing to a close.

Through her love she has suffered.

Now through her love she will triumph.

Does she marry? Does society claim her? Do art and literature make her life? Or do home and children? ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ?

The final reels of the ROMANCE OF ELAINE will tell everything—of how she gains her peace and happiness.

Elaine has transformed many poor days into big days for you—now let her make big days into biggest.

Elaine was given to the public with a blaze of attention-compelling publicity, but—

Publicity alone could not drive the crowds to see these great pictures week after week and month after month. The later interest, the later curiosity and the later desire were aroused by the quality of the pictures themselves. Elaine's success is due to Elaine's own greatness.

The ROMANCE OF ELAINE is written by Arthur B. Reeve, dramatized by Charles W. Goddard, and produced by T. W. & L. D. Wharton. It features Lionel Barrymore, the justly celebrated star, Miss Pearl White, whose popularity is nation-wide, and Creighton Hale.

Two parts every week, each installment the best that money, brains and artistic talent can produce, and—

THE STORY IS TO BE FOUND EACH SUNDAY IN THE BIG HEARST NEWSPAPERS. It is also appearing in hundreds of other newspapers all over the country.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel
By Roy L. McCardell

Intense emotional acting is difficult. The character of Hagar—the gypsy mother—in the American Film Mfg. Co.'s powerful continued photoplay "The Diamond from the Sky"—is one that requires exceptional emotional acting to interpret properly. Miss Eugenie Forde portrays this part with remarkable dramatic power. Exhibitors have pronounced the acting of Miss Forde in "The Diamond from the Sky" the greatest emotional motion picture work ever filmed. The entire cast in this production is composed of stars—Lottie Pickford, Irving Cummings, Charlotte Burton, William Russell, George Periolat, W. J. Tedmarsh and Orral Humphrey.

You exhibitors who have not yet booked "The Diamond from the Sky" are not taking advantage of a great profit-making opportunity. You need this continued photoplay for CONSTANT patronage through the summer months. Seven chapters are now appearing. A new two-reel chapter is released each week. THE 4-ACT FEATURE

"THROUGH TURBULENT WATERS"

This drama of straining tenseness is by the author of the feature, "On the Stroke of Twelve"—and again is shown a mastery of skilful suspense and dramatic power. Palpitating with the vital sympathy of an avenging father in pursuit of a society Svengali who sways and plays with the souls of women. Miss McCoy picturizes a hypnotized soul and conscience struggling against an overpowering will. Astonishingly vivid. Duncan McRae as the avenger and Frank Farrington as the soul wrecker. Released Friday, June 25th—4000 feet. Direction, Duncan McRae.

THE BONDWOMAN

With Billie Burke, in "The Mind-the-Paint Girl," at the Lyceum Theatre; with Louis Waller, in "Monsieur Beaucaire," at Daly's; in "The Blindness of Virtue," at the Manhattan Opera House—these are three of the Broadway productions in which Miss Mellish has appeared. As Amy Blanchard, the girl who sells herself to the man who has the power to send her father to jail, Miss Mellish enacts the most important role of her career.

Released Monday, June 28th. Special 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color Lithographs.

A "HAM" COMEDY

THE MERRY MOVING MEN

Featuring "HAM and BUD"

If there is one thing which Ham and his partner in fun, Bud, can do, it is to destroy furniture. They prove this when the Duponts foolishly employ them as moving men.

Released Tuesday, June 29th. 1 and 3-sheet, 4-color Lithographs for all "HAM" Comedies.

A BLACKWELL-JOYCE RE-ISSUE

THE SUFFRAGETTE SHERIFF

Mr. Blackwell, as Simple Sam, and Miss Joyce, as the Suffragette Sheriff, are at their best in this strong one-reel subject. The popularity of these stars makes this a decided attraction.

Released Friday, July 2nd. Strong 1 and 3-sheet, 4-color Lithographs.

THE ACCOMPLICE

A Modern Two-Act Drama

But for Evelyn Stanley's cleverness and courage, Ritchie's plot to pose as old Harris' son would have succeeded. Evelyn not only frustrates the crook, but also brings him to justice.

Released Wednesday, June 30th. Striking 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color Lithographs.

Facts and Comments

A MOST interesting communication was received recently in this office from a friend and reader in Canada. Canadian censorship, it is well known, is drastic to the point of being draconic. It is, therefore, particularly instructive to note that the Manitoba censors condemned but eight per cent. of the films submitted to them. Now there is a call in certain official circles for more censorship and for more severity. This is but a very normal development of the psychology of censorship. There is a strange instinct in primitive savage men to hurt and to destroy. This instinct is commercialized by the man who sells a chance to hit "the coon" at the county fair or on Surf avenue in Coney Island. You see a lot of people crowding about the booth where the woolly head is exposed as a public target. Men who are ordinarily kind and sensible will be affected by the sight of the brutal and vulgar sport. Presently they themselves buy five cents' worth of a chance to "hit the coon." Censorship is nothing more than an embodiment of this same spirit. It grows by what it feeds upon. To say that there may be a rule of reason in censorship is to enunciate the last word in absurdity.

THE recent decision of the courts forcing the owners of certain theaters and plays to admit a newspaper critic whether they like his reviews or not is but following a well-established precedent. The fear of the critic is natural in all producers who want to unload inferior or offensive films upon the public or upon exhibitors of motion pictures. An honest and fearless opinion is about as welcome to them as the bark of a faithful watchdog to the hard-working burglar. Just a little thought on the subject ought to make the whole situation clear. The producer offers his wares to the public. The public, of whom the critics are but a part, have the privilege of saying whether they like the offering or not, and if they have paid their money at the box office and do not like the show they have the right even in Russia of voicing their disappointment. The best friend of the exhibitor is the conscientious reviewer.

WE observe with regret that the war fever in Europe has affected even the film circles of that unhappy continent. That doughty French warrior, M. Georges Dureau, fighting with the territorials of La Belle France, has in interims of life in the trenches taken up his editorial pen and written an article intimating that Senor Sola Guardiola, the distinguished editor of the Spanish weekly, "El Mundo Cinematografico," is pro-German in his sentiments. M. Dureau, wielding the forceful pen of a clever "feuilletonist," has penetrated the ordinary philosophic calm of Senor Guardiola, and the latter comes back with a vigorous reply denying pro-German sympathies and dwelling with pleasure on the glorious times he had while a guest of the film men of Paris. The senor concludes his letter to M. Dureau with these flamboyant compliments: "In saluting you with every sympathetic affection I hope with all my heart that you will repeat in the trenches, where you are fighting so valiantly, the triumphs which you have achieved in the press." This ought to make the dove of peace resume its wonted perch above the French and the Spanish editorial sanctum. Amen.

AT a recent hearing before a legislative body, which proposed to enact a Sunday-closing ordinance, every minister who favored the ordinance at the same time hotly resented the suggestion that he was opposed to motion pictures or that he knew nothing about them. Every single clergyman present seemed most anxious to go on record as a friend of the motion picture. One said he considered the motion picture "as a wonderful agency for good"; another declared he was proud of being able to give first-class motion-picture entertainments," while a third scouted the idea that there might be any minister who was ignorant of the power of the screen. A few years ago such admissions on the part of clergymen would have been considered sensational; to-day they are taken as a matter of course. Does not this show the moral as well as the technical advance of the motion picture? What an argument against censorship.

Sexual Selection*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THAT province or department of natural selection in which sex is especially concerned, or in which the means by which one sex attracts the other comes prominently into play." So it is defined by Darwin. He further says: "For my own part, I conclude that of all the causes which have led to differences in external appearance between the races of men, and to a certain extent between man and the lower animals, sexual selection is by far the most efficient."

The favorite theme of all story-makers, love is regarded by many as the dominant passion of existence, now sensuality adorned by sentiment, again passion beautifully tempered by affection, at once a torture and a masterly fascination, a compelling force that leads in one case to race preservation and all the charm that is attached through it to home life, that drives in another to brutality and madness. Certain it is that the impulse of reproduction has but one rival, that of self and family maintenance. Love and money rule the world.

Students of the drama are led to find its essence in one word, "desire," or more truly in a conflict of desires. The word "desire" may well include ambition and determination to achieve a certain definite purpose through struggle of mind and body, but sexual selection almost invariably plays the leading role in stories, for all that there may be other currents of thought and feeling flowing along at the same time, intermingled with the love affair. Where natural longing runs counter to convention, the lapse of a husband furnishes comedy material and that of a wife, the race mother, an element more serious, often tragic. This may be due to an idealization of womanhood or to the fact that men write most of the plays.

Spirited ladies who advocate a double standard of morals are not actuated by any desire to stray from their own firesides, in spite of representations to the contrary in dramas triangular. The dear ladies merely wish to impose a penalty upon male vagrancy. Logic is with them, but man is not. An explorer by nature, his passion for roaming adventure is at times overpowering. He groups love and virtue as matters of choice for himself, for woman, the real creator of humankind, a rigid necessity. Partly because of her divince mission and partly because of his own wobbly ethics, man tolerates his own weaknesses and pities hers, blithely unaware that her sorrow, misery and humiliation as a social outcast are usually caused by a form of iniquity in which he revels.

Heaven and man's regeneration are beautiful and remote ideals, concerning which the stern admonitions of picture plays remind us of the sermons, both parental and pulpit, we used to fidget through, when the subject matter pertained to stray lambs. Why not shift the whole subject to portrayals of real women, those millions who constitute our mothers and sisters, who bend under severe character trials yet never break? Is there no dramatic material in their days of agony and self-denial? It may be argued that they are rightly brought up, that their moral cleanliness has been instilled by home life, by education, by religion, but that does not mean they have never been on the firing line. Where is the drama showing woman's heroic adaptation to circumstances, including husbands, imposed upon her without the exercise of natural selection?

If the story is to be remembered, if it is not a pastime, why not adorn the normal life of woman with compensating charm and beauty? Why not hold up the supposed gay life to the mirror of truth and expose its superficiality, its hideous concealments, its dark miseries, and hold it up to the scorn of ridicule? Men who are qualified by varied experience to write on the subject know that the alleged gaiety of fast life is one of alcoholic illusion, a shabby old mask for moral decadence, the fatuous leer of degeneracy.

When it comes to the cure for wrong methods of living, our hearts may well expand for erring humanity. Only a few victims of social depravity are perverts. Most of them are men and women of perfectly normal tendencies, whose ideals unattained have given rise to a form of revolt against existing laws and customs. They are brothers unfortunate and sisters unhappy in our common social household, widowed by failure of heart selection.

That life's dramas should invariably end with the embrace of a girl in her teens and a young man with fuzz on his upper lip is not entirely in accord with experiences. It is often just about to begin. Man and wife enter upon a long series of comedies and tragedies at the altar. Stories both amusing and enthralling are yet to be visualized of the trials of sexual selection, where it plays the dominant note, phases of the inevitable clash between strong personalities, and of reconciliation or of tragic end. Such stories may come with the advent of professional writers into this new art of expression—they are beyond the amateur as a rule—and then, at last, a large part of the audience will sit up and take notice.

There are men who enter marriage with a light sense of responsibility, very much as they take to automobiling, and there are wives who confuse love with domestic tyranny. There are husbands who give their entire attention to ambitious projects and none to hearts longing for affection, while there are wives who exact attention rather than deserve it. There are wives and husbands who build nothing on the foundation of sexual attraction which brought them together, and others whose sense of obligation is restricted to themselves, or to their immediate families. There are wives and husbands who struggle bravely with adversity from without and yet fail to meet the problems of home life, and there are others who hate each other because they are linked together only to be brought to better mutual appreciation during temporary freedom.

Perhaps some of life's greatest tragedies result from the unpreparedness of wife or from the unfitness of husband for the married state. The death of a first child may be the innocent means to a noble end. Finer understanding and greater happiness may grow out of what at first has the appearance of a calamity. The dominance of love over self-assertion furnishes rich material for comedy, especially when it conquers the lord-and-master type of old-fashioned benedict. Most fascinating is the play of feminine charm against brutal force of character. The field is so rich in themes that one only wonders why it lies fallow.

To sit through a long string of incidents leading to an objective and find it to be nothing more nor less than the pecking and billing of two young love birds gives rise to an impression that scenario writers are very much preoccupied with technique. They omit a chief point, one usually missed by critics also, whether it is in the love story or out. Interest hinges very much on material and spiritual differences in the love of man and that of woman. To all minds not primitive, the most fascinating thing in a presentation of human love is its psychology

The Exhibitor's Power

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE ARE passing through momentous times. The President himself has intimated that this country may in the near future play a great part in the world's history. In a free country like ours public opinion is the indispensable guide and support of the national administration. To-day the press is no longer the sole nor is it the most powerful and direct medium of expression. That honor and responsibility has in no small measure passed to the screen. The motion picture, it is well known, appeals to more people than the press, and its appeal is more direct and the easiest of comprehension.

We shall, therefore, offer no apology for these few remarks which are intended to advise the exhibitor of the important part he may be called upon to play at any moment. Indeed, there are duties resting upon him now in connection with the perilous times we are facing. When some time ago Mexicans fired upon the flag patriotic slides appeared in thousands of motion-picture theaters and the tremendous wave of enthusiasm which swept from coast to coast was due largely to these slides. The fact was impressive enough to call for comment in the daily press.

I think it safe to hold to this one fundamental idea: We in this country can have but one viewpoint and but one angle from which to look at the situation: The American viewpoint and the American angle. There is no other. Lincoln stated the most profound truth concerning our country when in his immortal speech at Gettysburg he said: "Our fathers have brought forth a NEW nation." Mark the words "brought forth." It had cost untold labor and sacrifice to give birth to the NEW nation. The conception of this country as a "melting pot" may be correct enough in its way, but the stress should be laid on the fact that we are a NEW NATION.

Any man who departs from this view and who would divide the citizenship of this country along the lines of European descent is engaged in treasonable work. We have so far maintained a wise neutrality in the European conflict. The quarrels of Europe can never be our quarrels. We have absolutely no interest in favoring one European nation at the expense of another. There are hyphenated —and withal some unhyphenated—citizens who seem anxious to take sides in the European conflict. There is nothing to prevent them from gratifying their desire. Their place is in the trenches, where any one of the belligerent nations will no doubt be glad to have them. The world's history, alas, is full of examples showing that national rancor and national dissensions are contagious. One has but to read the innumerable letters addressed to the editors of the daily press to realize the fact that not all the racial bitterness has been left in Europe.

For the present we are by the proclamation of the President committed to neutrality. A slide showing the flag in colors with the word "Neutrality" appearing beside or within the folds of the flag would be a most appropriate display in motion picture theaters at this time. Some of the bigger motion picture theaters have omitted the showing of war pictures entirely. They explain the reason for it on their programs. The main reason is simple enough. Such pictures might lead to serious disturbances.

It is possible that there are some war pictures that might be shown without causing any undue excitement in the audience. The more intelligent the audience the less the danger of such outbreaks. A slide such as I have suggested would in effect neutralize the disturbing effects of war pictures. All this is said with the idea and in the ardent hope that our country will not be drawn into the European vortex. If, however, for any reason whatever we must take a positive stand and vindicate certain inviolable American rights we will do well to be guided by the advice and the policy of the President.

There can be little doubt that the President is greatly concerned about the attitude of certain portions of the press. According to recent reports he has asked the Washington correspondents to refrain from trying to forecast his official notes and the attitude of the administration lest the foreign powers look upon such forecasts as authorized by the government. If the press were to give its faithful co-operation to the government in the common cause of preserving the peace as well as the dignity and the rights of our country, the lesson to the European powers would be invaluable.

It is happily within the power of the exhibitors of the country to give the President this co-operation. Nothing can possibly be gained by inflaming the public mind against any one nation. If we are to take sides let us take sides for the United States. Ex-President Taft is credited with saying that if we had a jingo in the White House we would now be at war.

The thing to remember in these days of tension and excitement is the fact that our nation, the NEW NATION, stands for ideals wholly different from those of any European origin. The declaration of independence severed all relations we ever had with Europe except the bonds of a common humanity. If the United States will act in this tremendous human struggle which is threatening to hurl the old world back into barbarism it will act in the name and in behalf of humanity.

It would be a most patriotic and timely thing for the National League of Exhibitors to send to the President of the United States expressions of their willingness to place the great power they have at the disposal of humanity and to let the President be the exponent of what constitutes humanity. The President knows the power of the screen. He has seen some great film classics and is known to be a friend of the motion picture. He may one of these days have something to say to the people of these United States and the slide will tell it better on the whole than even the Associated Press could tell it. To have the hearty support of the men who control this greatest medium of publicity must be a source of gratification to the chief magistrate of the nation especially in times of stress and possible trouble.

Here is a voice from the audience. A reader of Moving Picture World and an ardent patron of motion pictures sends us three strong and we think well-founded criticisms of recent releases. "I like the photoplays," says our friend. "I am but one in a million, but intelligent people seeking recreation like to be treated as reasonable thinking beings." We wish we had the space to print the "glaring incongruities" in full. Directors please take notice.

Pennsylvania Convention

Keystone Exhibitors Hold Enthusiatic Meeting at Reading—Large Attendance of Picture Men Recorded and Much Important Business Transacted—Big Time at the Ball—Trade Exhibit an Interesting Feature—Will Meet at Philadelphia Next Year.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE fourth annual convention and exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania was called to order by State President Zerr at the Rajah Temple at Reading on Monday, June 7, at 2 p. m. Mr. Zerr at once introduced the mayor of the city, Ira M. Stratton, who was greeted by a generous burst of applause.

Mr. Stratton, after briefly congratulating the delegates on their choice of Reading as the convention city, made a neat little speech of welcome and then spoke at some length on the power and influence of the motion picture and on the responsibility of the exhibitor of motion pictures.

"I have found the exhibitors of this city," he said, "always ready to aid me and other city officials in any movement for civic improvements, and I found their aid most valuable. No doubt the same spirit animates exhibitors all over the country. You are willing to do what you can for the uplifting and the upbuilding of humanity, and I know the commercial end is not always the foremost in your minds. As a molder of public opinion the motion picture today ranks well with the press."

Vice-President G. W. Sahner, of Pittsburgh, replied to the mayor's address in apt and forceful terms, saying that the motion picture needed no paternalistic supervision. He recounted the efforts of the exhibitors in their fight against censorship at Harrisburg.

"We have gained only a partial victory," he exclaimed. "We have gained the right to appeal from one censor to the full board and from the board to the courts. We have succeeded in reducing the fee of inspection to one dollar per reel from two dollars and a half. We will not rest satisfied with these achievements, however. The exhibitors of Pennsylvania are ready to fight censorship to a finish, and we will keep at it until the whole obnoxious legislation is wiped off the statute books for good."

This ended the public proceedings, and the convention went into its first business session, with Ben. Zerr in the chair and James Delves acting as secretary. Most of the business transacted was simple routine. There was a good deal of informal talk on business conditions as they had developed within the last six months.

The following exhibitors registered at the convention hall on the first day: Marcus A. Benn, Philadelphia; David R. Sablosky, Philadelphia; Charles Segall, Philadelphia; Abraham H. Nace, Quakertown; Charles L. Snyder, Reading; J. G. Hansen, Reading; Charles S. Graul, Reading; C. O. Baird, Portage; H. C. Simeral, Philadelphia; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh; Edwin Brown, Reading; John H. Spicer, Harrisburg; Peter Magaro, Harrisburg; L. B. Reinert, Reading; H. C. Kliehm, Pittsburgh; G. W. Sahner, Pittsburgh; Jerome Dawson, Gallitzen; O. J. Miller, St. Clair; Harry J. Schad, Reading; Jay Emanuel, Philadelphia; Walter C. Kantner, Reading; Eugene F. MacAtee, Mahanoy City; Frank A. Gould, Reading; James Delves, Pittsburgh; Harry Curry, Philadelphia; C. F. Edmondson, Danville; Clyde P. Klinger, Freeland; Charles E. Schofer, Reading; P. K. Adams, Reading; Chas. T. Miler, Reading; Geo. W. Herbst, Philadelphia; Mary K. Braemer, Lykens. Other names on the register were: Charles A. Calehuff, "Largest Supply House in Pennsylvania"; Samuel Lapin, representing the Drumona Musical Instruments Company of New York; Edwin A. Kaufman, representing the Kaufman Musical Company of Reading; Charles Miley, state factory inspector; George R. Meeker, Paramount Film Co., New York; Chas. A. Bleilevens, of the Drumona Co., New York; Miss Jean Koller, of the Drumona Co., New York; C. Borzner, of the "Luner-Lite" Co., Philadelphia; Robert J. Erlichman, of the General Film Co., Philadelphia; J. Frank Gibbons, Universal Film Mfg. Co., New York; Moving Picture World, C. Ragerman, Ben. Barr and B. H. Stearn, all of New York, representing the "Seeing Life Co."; G. H. Atwood, of Pathe's; Simon Pelsweig, of the U. B. O., of Philadelphia; S. E. Rose, American Photoplayers Co., New York; Chas. Greenbaum, of the Newman Mfg. Co., of New York; Jacob W. Binder, National Board of Censors.

Second Day's Sessions.

The second day of the convention began with a report of the committee which had been appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws. Mr. Sahner, the chairman of the committee, reported that it had been decided to adopt substantially the same constitution which governs the national body. The principal changes were in reference to the office of president and the fees for charters to local organizations. The president of the state organization is to serve without a salary and the fee for a charter to local organizations was fixed at ten dollars. A letter was received from M. E. Cory, national committeeman, inviting the Pennsylvania delegates to attend the national convention to be held in San Francisco July 13 to 17. The convention discussed the letter at some length, but no definite conclusion was reached.

Something of a sensation was created by the discovery that the instructions of the Harrisburg convention to apply for a charter to the national league had not been carried out. President Zerr and Treasurer Segall explained that the expense of applying for a charter and the prospective per capita tax would have depleted the treasury and that they felt justified in waiting for the present convention.

Mr. Herrington moved that the application for the charter from the national body be no longer delayed, but that the instructions of the Harrisburg convention be carried out immediately. The resolution was carried unanimously. The state of the treasury will allow the application to be made at once.

On motion of Mr. Benn, of Philadelphia, a rising vote of thanks was given to the Moving Picture World for its staunch championship of the exhibitor.

At this point the convention took a recess to arrange and participate in a grand parade through the city of Reading.

At least seventy-five autos were in line, some of them containing well-known screen artists, who came just in the nick of time to take part in the parade.

Among these artists were Virginia Davis, Joan Crane, Jessie Crane, of the Metro forces. Frank Bannon, the general publicity promoter of the Edison Company, was on hand chaperoning a party of Edison artists, consisting of Viola Dana, Mabel Trunnelle, Ed. Earle and Robert Conness. The parade was one of the features of the convention and was most enthusiastically received by the people of Reading.

Convention Register, Second Day.

On the second day the following names appeared on the register of the convention: Joseph Beihoff, World Film, Philadelphia; Jack Levy, Fox Film Corporation, Philadelphia; W. C. Schalles, Family theater, Hazleton; Wm. H. Rippard, Mutual Film Exchange, Wilkes-Barre; Anna E. Lessig, Orpheum theater, Orwigsburg; Earl M. Forth, Sherwood theater, Philadelphia; John D. Clock, Baltimore theater, Philadelphia; A. H. Dartt, Auditorium, Wellsboro; A. Greenberg, Grand theater, Chester; Charles F. Smith, Grand theater, Reading; Albert Pierson, Windsor theater, Philadelphia; Arthur Heyman, Calehoff Supply Co.; Jacob Silverman, Altoona; Isaac Silverman, Hippodrome, Harrisburg; I. M. Thomas, Pastime theater, Easton; L. Korson, United Service, Philadelphia; Philip Adler, V-L-S-E, Philadelphia; Miss Anna L. Schuber, Theatorium theater, Lebanon; Frank P. Gilligan, Park theater, Wilkes-Barre; Charles I. Read, Opera House, Minersville; D. P. McNeal and Wm. H. Snyder, Grand theater, Lancaster; C. R. Milliman, Grand theater, East Stroudsburg; Francis E. Devlin, Family theater, Wilkes-Barre; Chris. Peterson, Family theater, Tamaqua; W. W. Weber, Park theater, Philadelphia; Harold W. Heiberger, Orpheum theater, South Bethlehem; F. L. Heiberger, Lorenz theater, Bethlehem; Frank F. Seiberling, Franklin theater, Allentown; A. L. Einstein, Stanley Theater Company, Philadelphia; Herbert McGiven, Famous Players, Philadelphia; Earle W. Sweigert, 1235 Vine street, Philadelphia; W. T. Heenan, Stanley Booking Co., Philadelphia; J. J. McGurk, Cross Keys theater, Philadelphia; Clara Kimball Young and Jacob Wilk, World Film Corporation, New York; Harry Reichenbach, Metro, New York; Charles R. Perry, Philadelphia; Ray P. Antrim, Harrisburg; Harry Schwalbe, Electric Theater Supply Co., Philadelphia; Joseph Spero, Greater New York, Philadelphia; J. H. Buttner, Mutual, Philadelphia; C. S. Wertsner & Son, map and poster mounting, Philadelphia; Jos. S. Hebrew, V-L-S-E, Philadelphia; W. R. Binns, Tri-State Star Feature Co., Philadelphia; Geo. W. Bennetburn, Fairmount, Philadelphia; V. R. Carrick, Interstate Film, Philadelphia; M. Lessey, Philadelphia Film Exchange, Philadelphia.

The Exposition.

On the ground floor of the hall where the convention held its sessions was a "motion picture exposition" on a small scale. Charles A. Calehuff was one of the big patrons of this exposition, having hired considerable space. He was the busiest man on the floor, seeing old friends and explaining many of the new and useful supplies he had provided himself with. Among the latter was what he called an "operator's periscope," which enables the operator to know exactly what kind of a picture he has, whether it needs attention and whether the light is as good as it ought to be. Associated with Mr. Calehuff is Geo. W. Herbst, one of the pioneer exhibitors of central Pennsylvania.

The American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company was also represented with Mr. Morrison in charge. Pathe had an exhibit in one corner, while the Fox Film Corporation was prominent in another corner. The Universal Company has most of the space on the north side of the hall; Greater New York was likewise represented. The Newman Mfg. Co. had a pretty and interesting exhibit in frames and similar supplies.

The Grand Ball.

The greatest and most successful feature of the convention undoubtedly was the great ball which was held at the Auditorium. This event had been played up skilfully by the local papers and with the promise of the presence of "Pop" Lubin and a galaxy of screen stars. The interest and curiosity of the people of Reading had been wrought up to almost fever heat.

Long before 9 o'clock, the hour set for the grand march, the entrances to the Auditorium were thronged with eager crowds. The hall was completely filled when the grand march began. At least fifteen hundred persons attended. The music was excellent, being furnished by the far-famed Ringold Band of Reading.

After some preliminary dancing, a local exhibitor, acting as announcer, introduced "Pop" Lubin, who stepped upon the stage leading his grandson by the hand. The familiar figure of the grand old pioneer was not fully visible behind the "flies" when the audience broke into a prolonged salvo of applause, which continued for some minutes. Mr. Lubin made one of his brief, but characteristic, speeches and won his audience completely.

The following artists were introduced and greeted with great enthusiasm: Clara Kimball Young, World Film; Miss Pauline Frederick, of the Famous Players; Crane Wilbur, Ormi Hawley, Earl Metcalf, Rosetta Price, Mary Charleson, of Lubin; Virginia Davis, Jessie Crane and Joan Crane, of the Metro; Viola Dana, Mabel Trunnelle, Robert Conness, of Edison.

Great enthusiasm was created by the arrival of National President Marion S. Pearce, of Baltimore, who came in time to attend the ball and meet all the stars and exhibitors.

Third Day's Session.

The convention reassembled at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning and was addressed by National President Pearce, who received the check for the entrance fee of the National Organization.

After some discussion Philadelphia was selected as the place for the next convention and F. J. Herrington, National Vice-president, was elected to represent Pennsylvania Exhibitors at the National Convention in San Francisco.

The Metro cup for the best dancer among the exhibitors was awarded to W. J. Heenan of the Stanley Booking Company. Other cups were won by Viola Dana of the Edison Company, and by Miss Dorothy Hipple.

Convention Plans Interest Exhibitors

Cory Starts the Machinery and Reports Enthusiastic Returns from All Parts of the Country.

WITH the return of Mark E. Cory, member of the executive committee of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America and chairman of the convention committee from New York, work has been commenced in earnest on the plans for the national convention to be held in San Francisco in July. Mr. Cory returned home by way of Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago and Denver, and reports that active preparations are being made at all of these places for attending the meeting and that the attendance will be very heavy. Upon reaching home he immediately got into touch with the leading exhibitors here and told them of the tentative plans that had been made for the convention and what would be expected of them. An efficient office force was at once organized and a committee of San Francisco exhibitors, headed by State President H. L. Beach and Acting Secretary Ralph L. Marks, has been named to assist Chairman Cory.

Practically every booth in the exposition hall has been contracted for, and the local representatives of various firms are vieing with each other to arrange the finest features of entertainment. The success of the exhibit is absolutely assured, and it is doubtful if space can be provided for all who may desire to take part.

An extremely heavy attendance is expected from California, where arrangements are now being made for special trains, and the exhibitors from the Sacramento Valley will attend in a body. During the past two weeks the state organization has received a flood of applications for membership, and the outlook is that by the first of July almost every exhibitor in the state will be a member of the league.

The grand ball, with which the convention will be closed on July 16, will be held in the new Civic Auditorium, doubtless the most magnificent structure of its kind in America, with a dance floor two hundred feet square, unobstructed by pillars. A committee will be named shortly by Chairman Cory to go to Los Angeles and arrange for the attendance of a large number of screen favorites. The presence of such stars as Mary Pickford, Francis X. Bushman and Charles Chaplin is already assured.

One of the interesting features of the coming meeting will be "Motion Picture Day" at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The officials of the exposition have set aside Saturday, July 17, as a special day, and an elaborate program of appropriate events is being arranged, which will be concluded in the evening by a magnificent spectacle on the Marina and an illuminated aeroplane flight by Art Smith.

The local committee on arrangements wishes to give most emphatic assurances to all that hotel rates during the convention will be normal. The committee, which has headquarters at 306 Mechanics Building, will make hotel reservations and guarantee the rates. Accommodations can be had at any price desired, from $1 per room up, but those who plan to come should advise the committee at once in order that reservations can be made.

Edison Honorable Chairman

The Great Inventor Sends a Message of Hope and Congratulation to All Exhibitors.

MARION S. PEARCE, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, announces that Thomas A. Edison has consented to accept the honorary presidency of the Fifth National Convention and Exposition to be held at San Francisco from July 13 to 16, inclusive. The text of the letter of Mr. Edison to Mr. Pearce reads as follows:

Mr. Marion S. Pearce, Pres., National Exhibitors' League, Hippodrome Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Dear Sir:

Our Mr. McChesney has informed me that it is the desire of the National Exhibitors' League that I act as Honorary Chairman of the National Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors at San Francisco. I beg to say that I appreciate the compliment thus paid me, and accept with much pleasure.

Much as I would like to attend the Convention in person, it will not be possible for me to get away from my work at the time that event takes place, as I am just about to start up some new chemical plants and my presence here will be required during the next five or six weeks.

Will you, however, kindly say to the Convention for me that I think there is ample reason for mutual congratulation on the progress and growth that the motion picture business has made in a comparatively short period of time. From a mere side show, so to speak, it has grown in a few years to be a world-moving power and a compelling force for moral advancement. It is a source of great satisfaction and encouragement to me to notice the increasing sentiment towards keeping the business clean and wholesome; for it is a fundamental truth that success cannot be built upon any other than a sound and solid foundation.

Let me extend to you all my sincere congratulations upon the fact that you have arrived at the dignity of a Convention like the present one. I shall watch your future progress with great interest and trust the coming years will bring with them even more substantial development and success than we have seen in the past. Yours very truly, (Signed) THOS. A. EDISON.

BALSDON GOES TO BOSTON.

Announcement is made by the V-L-S-E of a change in the management of their Boston branch. George Balsdon, who will be remembered through his association with the General Film Company, the poster department of which he organized, has been appointed general manager for the New England territory, and will take up his new duties at once.

Before assuming charge of the Boston branch, Mr. Balsdon opened up the Pittsburgh office of the V-L-S-E and remained in temporary charge until the appointment of E. O. Child as permanent manager of that branch.

Neff Now a Producer

"The Battle of Ballots" Will Be the First Release of the Good Luck Film Company—Players Working at Edgewater Studio.

M. A. NEFF, former national president of the Exhibitors' League of America, has entered the ranks of producers as general manager of the Good Luck Film Company, now making its first picture at the Century studio in Edgewater, N. J. Mr. Neff wrote the scenario and copyrighted it under the name of "The Battle of Ballots," the idea being to show in a picture, of four or five reels, the dramatic and essentially human qualities of the struggle being waged at so many city and state elections between the "wet" and the "dry" factions. Mr. Neff is careful to avoid taking sides; his picture is in no sense to be a part of a propaganda; rather, it will portray with as much exactness as dramatic action permits the intense feeling that may be engendered among the normally peaceful citizens of a small city.

M. A. Neff.

In selecting his company for "The Battle of Ballots," the general manager did not follow the popular habit of engaging stage stars with a reputation of advertising value. Instead, he sought people whose records had proven their worth in pictures. Several weeks were spent in interviewing directors, actors and camera men before the cast was filled, and, judging from the sum total of the past achievements of those chosen, the final accomplishment in this instance should be more than ordinarily high.

The director, Frank B. Coigne, is an actor, director and playwright of many years' standing. His experience in pictures started with Mark Dintenfass as a producer of the old Champion brand. Among the productions to his credit are "The Tyranny of the Mad Czar," "The Vampire," "Hounds of the Underworld" and "Protectors." Besides directing pictures, Mr. Coigne has written more than one hundred and fifty scenarios.

For the leading feminine role in "The Battle of Ballots" Mr. Neff selected Mayre Hall, a strikingly beautiful young woman, who made a very favorable impression in Bison, Imp and Thanhouser pictures, notably in the Princess brand. Miss Hall, under the name of Dearest St. Clair, is well known on the vaudeville stage, having toured on the Keith and Proctor circuits for a number of years. More recently she originated the Fountain dance at Murray's restaurant.

William Wells, the leading man, was a prominent stock actor before his advent in pictures. He has played important roles with many companies, among them Universal and Lubin, in the latter under the direction of Romaine Fielding. Recently he did excellent work in "The Plunderer" and "The Woman's Resurrection."

Baroness Dorothy Van Raven—Dorothy Kingdon before her marriage—is another valuable asset to Mr. Neff's forces. On the stage she was credited with being able to play all types of character, and during the past three years she has borne out the reputation in pictures, first under the direction of Lawrence B. McGill, and later with Edgar Lewis, Oscar C. Apfel, Fred Wright, Frank Powell and many other producers.

Robert Web Lawrence has directed stage productions for Savage and is at the present time under contract with the Henry B. Harris Estate. He has produced for the Imp and I. S. P. companies, and scored a marked success in Edison talking pictures. Playing in "The Governor's Pardon" he suffered an accident that nearly cost him his life.

Laura Mackin, the character woman in the new aggregation, has acted in photoplays since the days when the Cinematograph Company used the roof of the building at Thirteenth street and Broadway for a studio. She followed a long stage experience with an equally successful career in photoplays. While in Mexico, Mrs. Mackin directed seventeen pictures for the Universal Company.

Mary Navorro also is thoroughly well qualified by past experience with the Vitagraph Company, Pathe and O. A. C. Lund of the World Film Corporation. One of her most effective parts was that of the Queen in "The Three Musketeers."

G. Charles Bryant started with Vitagraph, working under Wilfred North and George Baker, and then played juvenile leads in Ethel Grandin films. Wilfred Jessop has appeared in many photoplays both here and in England. He played leads at the Warwick studio in England and, coming to this country, was at different times associated with the Flying A, Beauty and Peerless films.

Frank Whitson is a comparatively new recruit in the picture field, but he has had ample experience in stock and vaudeville, where he directed his own sketches. Others in the company are John Ellis, Harry Harford and Creston Clark.

Mr. Neff chose an expert camera man in Eugene Cugnet, who is said to have photographed the first Pathe picture made in this country. Universal and Eclair were among his other affiliations.

Lou. Tellegen to Appear on Screen

LOU. TELLEGEN, the international romantic star, who made his first American appearance as leading man for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt during her last tour, has entered into a contract with the Lasky Feature Play Company by the terms of which he intends to bind himself to appear in a series of photodramatic offerings to be produced by this concern. Mr. Tellegen has never before appeared on the screen.

Lou. Tellegen.

The terms of the contract between Mr. Tellegen and the Lasky Company are of such a nature that the distinguished artist will be seen hereafter exclusively in Lasky productions, it being nevertheless understood that Mr. Tellegen's legitimate engagements are not to be interfered with unduly by the time devoted to photodramatic posing. Mr. Tellegen will make his first appearance before the Lasky camera in Hollywood, California, this summer.

Lou. Tellegen was born in Amsterdam, Holland, the son of a Greek general and a Dutch dancer. He first went on the stage in his native country at the age of 18, appearing as Romeo and in the production of Ibsen's "Ghosts." From Amsterdam, Mr. Tellegen finally removed to Paris and there the young artist studied under Paul Mouret for a couple of years, after which he made his debut at the Odeon. Later he became Bernhardt's leading man and remained with her until he produced "Dorian Gray" in London.

Somewhat more than a year ago Mr. Tellegen made a great individual hit in New York as the star of a remarkable Italian emotional tragedy entitled "Maria Rosa." He has just closed a highly successful engagement in a French farce adapted for the American stage under the title of "Taking Chances."

PICTURES AT OCEAN GROVE AUDITORIUM.

The Ocean Grove Auditorium, Ocean Grove, N. J., will be used as a motion picture theater beginning June 21. The managing director will be Tali Esen Morgan, who is at present managing director of the Paramount theater in Newark and the Broadway in New York City. The Auditorium has seating accommodations for 10,000 people, and is fitted with a Hope-Jones organ, which is said to be the largest in the world. The distance from the projection machine to the screen will be 221 feet, an unusually long throw. The Auditorium will be open six days a week.

Garden Opens With Pictures

"Silver Threads Among the Gold" Is the First Feature Attraction in Place of "The Sporting Duchess."

AFTER several postponements Madison Square Garden was opened to the public on Saturday evening, June 5, with a program of pictures headed by "Silver Threads Among the Gold," a six-reel K. & R. production made under the direction of Richard J. Jose. The audience at the first performance was not large and some disappointment was expressed at the last-minute change in the program after "The Sporting Duchess" had been widely advertised as the leading attraction.

Considering the difficulties to be met in showing pictures in the Garden, the projection was satisfactory. A Powers machine had been installed in a fireproof brick booth on the Madison avenue side of the first balcony. The throw to the screen, 34x26 feet, on the Fourth avenue end of the building measured 298 feet, said to be the longest throw in the world. The pictures were not always sharp, but at times the defect seemed to be in the photography rather than the projection.

A large orchestra, directed by Dr. Anelm Goetzel and composed of musicians from the Metropolitan and Chicago opera companies and the Philharmonic orchestra, was placed at the Fourth avenue end of the Garden against a scenic background representing the snow and ice of the polar regions. With the coming of hot weather it is planned to install ice and use two twelve-foot typhoon fans to circulate air through the building.

The musical part of the program, including vocal and orchestral numbers, was very good indeed, save that the leader appeared to be unfamiliar with the pictures and frequently the selections for an accompaniment were incongruous. Several short subjects, among them "The Sculptor's Dream," an odd picture produced by the Universal Company, preceded the showing of "Silver Threads Among the Gold."

Carleton Visits the Coast

Makes Combined Business and Pleasure Trip for Duplex Machine Company—Visits Many Studios.

G. W. CARLETON, who represents the Duplex Machine Company, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has just returned from a trip to the Pacific Coast, taken primarily for pleasure, but with which he combined business to the extent of calling at the various motion picture studios en route.

The American Lifeograph Company, of Portland, Oregon, was visited and, needless to say, their laboratory is the most up-to-date equipped plant of the greater west, due to the efficiency of L. W. Moomaw.

G. W. Carleton.

He was welcomed by every Film Company on the trip and the plant of the Duplex Machine Company has been doubled, to take care of the excessive business G. W. Carleton secured. Below are a few most worthy of mention.

E. M. Cox, of the Pike's Peak Film Co., Colorado Springs, Colorado, is producing exceptional good photography, specializing in feature films, and all through the west the census of opinion is—sacrifice quantity for quality.

Mr. Carleton spent an enjoyable two weeks in Chicago and with all due respect to all patrons of the Duplex Company, one most worthy of mention is Waterson R. Rothacker, of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, who is now fitting up the most expensive laboratory in the middle west, and is sure some live wire in the picture game.

He was most royally received by Mr. Berst, of the Selig Polyscope Company, and takes the medium of this paper to thank him for the many courtesies extended.

The Ford Motor Company, of Detroit, has applied picture advertising for the Fords, using Duplex equipment throughout. They are doubling their output of Ford films and Mr. Jewett is to be congratulated on his successful management.

Selig's New London Office

Big American Company Secures Office Building More in Keeping With Its Importance.

IN THE early days when "Flicker Alley" was the great centre of the motion picture trade of London one of the least pretentious offices was that of the Selig Polyscope Company. It was no better or no worse than the average, but the tendency of the motion picture trade to congregate in Peck Court and vicinity made pretentiousness impossible. Recently there has been a tendency among the film men to seek more comfortable quarters and following the general movement the Selig Company has gone the trade one better in the selection of a handsome building where its importance may be better emphasized.

The move was made in May when Selig's London office was installed at 93-95 Wardour Street, N. W.

The accompanying illustration gives one a very fair conception of the beautiful new building recently occupied and made necessary because of the rapidly increasing business of the Selig Company in the British Isles.

E. H. Montagu is sole agent in England for the Selig Polyscope Company's picture plays. When Mr. Montagu and his assistants moved into the new building "open house" was held and the many friends of the company were given a cordial reception.

From reports Mr. Montagu has been very successful in distributing "Diamond S" products. The best evidence is that his activities have warranted the taking of these handsome new offices.

George J. Schaefer is Promoted by World Film

GEORGE J. SCHAEFER, the big sprawling but perfectly good-hearted blond sales director of the World Film Corporation has been put a step up by Mr. Selznick. He has been made Eastern Division Manager of the World Film Corporation; a big job on a big piece of territory.

Mr. Schaefer has won his promotion by loyalty, ability and hard work. In September last he was given the position of private secretary to Mr. Selznick. He made good and made many friends for the company. Then he was appointed Sales Director and was sent on a long and trying trip south and southwest, getting as far as Texas and retuning to New York with a record of strenuous effort on behalf of World Film.

George J. Schaefer.

He has barely had time to get his breath again in New York, when he finds himself Eastern Division Manager. Mr. Schaefer is young, intelligent, ambitious, loyal and sincere. Everybody calls him "George"—a sure sign of popularity among film men. Mr. Schaefer's headquarters will be at the New York Exchange, World Film Corporation, 130 West 46th street.

Prize Beauties on Their Way

General Manager Joe Brandt Becomes Official Guardian of Winners in Universal Contest.

BESIDES being general manager of the Universal Company, Joe Brandt is now the general manager of a party of fifty-nine girls, the winners in the Universal Beauty Contest journeying to the coast. He assumed the new office on the afternoon of June fourth in a banquet hall of the Hotel Manhattan, fifteen minutes before the eastern contingent, twenty-one strong, boarded the two o'clock train for Chicago. The train to Chicago was on the ordinary schedule; after that the beauties were promised the protection of a Universal special where everyone aboard was to be stamped and guaranteed with a big U. Guardian Brandt said that they would be among friends then, but——

T. W. Eslow and New England Beauty Delegation.

Brandt in the Role of Guardian.

A respectful silence followed T. W. Eslow's introduction of Guardian Brandt to his gay flock, yet Mr. Eslow had rather ignored the grave responsibilities about to be shouldered on his co-worker. He even approached flippancy when he referred to Mr. Brandt as "some" entertainer and asked them to let him know if the reputation were not justified after the trip. With this cheerful forecast to live up to, Mr. Brandt stepped into the open space between the tables and spoke as becomes one having authority over the most beautiful of the beauties in the eastern states. There was no escaping the import of his words as he pronounced the Universal's commandments.

The speaker scanned the confiding eyes gazing at him so trustfully and was moved to speak of the dangers of travel. "Girls," he said, in his most impressive manner, "you must do nothing without first gaining the consent of your chaperone. You must not wander away from the party or seek entertainment other than that provided, without asking permission. I want to caution you against approaching strangers for information and everyone is a stranger to you except men wearing little yellow buttons, which will designate official members of the party. From here to Chicago we will be on a public train with only one chaperone, so be careful not to wander far from your allotted compartments. Keep together and be obedient." Stirred by the admonitions, the girls applauded their guardian and promised to be good.

Gulick Picks a Winner.

For many weeks Paul Gulick had been thinking of pleasant things to write about Universal's feminine attractions. He slipped away from his desk in the Mecca building to be convinced through the testimony of his own eyes that he had not overstated the case. His arrival at the Manhattan was late but timely. Just at the moment there chanced to be a vacant chair immediately next to a winsome blonde, who had the dash of Broadway in her attire and the freshness of a mountain morning in her cheeks. The general publicity man later explained the centralization of his attentions by a geographical fact. He said they came from the same town, only he came some time ago. Julius Stern flitted about impartially, John Clymer made frequent reference to three thousand pounds of beauty, Harry Ennis discovered a prize winner who remembered having seen him in vaudeville and Lloyd Robinson discussed New Jersey affairs with the Queen of Newark.

Beauty Much Adorned

The beauties plucked from the hills and valleys of New England had stopped off in Boston where their charms appealed to the appreciative nature of a susceptible merchant. With the true pride of a native son he determined that in all things they should stand comparison with their sisters from the West. He opened wide the doors of his store and in his Boston way said, "go to it," whereupon his guests helped themselves to the latest things in fox furs and feathers, crepe de chine waists and alluring voiles trimmed with lace. All this fine plumage cost nobody but the merchant a cent, and it made a festive showing at the Universal luncheon party.

Among the twenty-one girls who boarded the train at Grand Central station there were more brunettes than blondes; but the proportion may be equalized as the other winners are picked up along the route. Altogether, Guardian Brandt and his assistant, Nat Rothstein, need make no apologies for the flock.

The prize winners are:

Daisy Fulwiller, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Jean McNicol, Minneapolis, Minn.; Bessie Davis, Phoenix, Ariz; Mabel Nelson, Salt Lake City, Utah; May Oliver, Lillian Baltz, Philadelphia, Pa.; Ursula Sigrist, Indianapolis, Ind.; Grace Schaufele, Cleveland Ohio; Loretta Griffin, New York, Ruth M. Purcell, Washington, D. C.; Clara McAlbee, Maryland; Louise Weldon, Ohio; Alameda Holcombe, Atlanta, Ga.; Gertrude Fonda, Seattle, Wash.; Lina Hoepold, Rhode Island; Mollie Julian, Wilmington, Del.; Clara Hoopes, Carson City, Nev.; Cora Lee Bennett, Kentucky; Mabel Jackson, New Orleans, La.; Opal Crumbliss, Omaha, Neb.; Florence S. Craig, Memphis, Tenn.; Lucille Walker, Memphis, Miss.; Mayme Chapline, Memphis, Ark.; Ida F. Beardsley, New Haven, Conn.; Mary Kidwell, Wichita, Kan.; Edith Mass, Michigan; Marie Savage, Milwaukee, Wis.; Anita Lieberman, Idaho; Madge Henry, Iowa; Minnie Williamson, Columbia, S. C.; Marguerite Koch, Helena, Mont.; A. Pauline Westphalen, Springfield, Mass.; Margaret McDonough, Boston Mass.; Agnes Cheney, Concord, N. H.; Forestine Dennison, Portland, Me.; Frances Hamilton, Richford, Vt.; Florence Boring, Denver, Colo.; Margaret Hague, New York; Marie Forham, New York; Anna Schrader, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Alice Matthews, Kingston, N. Y.; Gertrude Regan, Krumville, N. Y.; Peggy Dolan Newark, N. J.; Esther Sutton, Newark, N. J.; Lois Wilson, Birmingham, Ala.; Irene O'Connor, Chicago, Ill.; Anna Nessel, Chicago, Ill.; Gwendolyn Morgan, Champaign, Ill.; Cecelia Banbenek, Aberdeen, S. D.; Nellie Bell Pittsburgh, Pa.; Florence Turner, Fargo, N. D.; Pauline Turner, Kansas City, Mo.; Madeline Skinner, Houston, Tex.; Dorothy Webb, Calgary, Alberta, Can.; Ruth Safford, Santa Fe, New Mexico.; Sallie Holliday, Jackson, Miss.; Sarah Wooten, Charlotte, N. C.; Paula Jorgensen, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Marguerite Rhodes, Cheyenne, Wyo. The chaperones are Mrs. Ann Cummins Frye, New York, N. Y.; Mrs. Pitzer, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. J. W. Hays, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. Francis Wayne, Denver, Colo.; Mrs. Pauline Smart, Cleveland, Ohio.; Dr. Edna Carver, Denver, Colo.

FRED DOBSON WITH MOROSCO-BOSWORTH.

Fred Dobson, one of the oldest and best known camera men in the business, has been engaged at the Morosco-Bosworth studios. "Dob," as he is popularly known, started with the motion picture industry in 1898 with the Biograph and put over some big things for this concern, notably the sensational filmization of the New York subway which was honored by a special article at the time in the Scientific American. He also produced single-handed that company's famous spectacle, "The San Francisco Fire," as well as the film extravaganza, "Humpty Dumpty."

This latter production was one of the first successful achievements in "trick photography." It presented a marionette menagerie of forty animals, each of whose moves had to be put upon the negative by hand. One picture contained 280 moves simultaneously, the entire picture containing 670,000 moves. So laborious was the work that on one part of the film it took "Dob" ten hours to complete six feet.

"Dob's" "Tired Tailor's Dream," in which an "animated" shears, yard stick and piece of chalk went through a series of sidesplitting antics, was another pioneer invention. He also invented the "Kalem pencil" whose pivotal whirl about a period at the end of every Kalem picture was a novelty well known to motion picture audiences throughout the world. The "Kalem spider web," is another one of his inventions.

Other phases of "Dob's" genius have been manifested in his writing and directing of scenarios, and his frequent excursions into the technical director's realm where he is an authority on aught pertaining to the scenic and carpenter end.

"Dob's" first picture for the Morosco-Bosworth is George Fawcett's starring vehicle, "The Majesty of the Law" and the brilliant, clear photography in this masterpiece will be instantly recognized by all who are familiar with the expert "Dobson touch."

V-L-S-E HOUSE ORGAN.

"The Big Four Family" is the title of the V-L-S-E house organ, the first issue of which appeared under date of June 5. It is a well printed four-page publication with a leading article on "The Policy of the V-L-S-E" by General Manager Walter W. Irwin. Assistant General Manager C. R. Seelye contributes "The Mission of the V-L-S-E" and on other pages are items from various sources indicating the popularity of the new program. Charles J. Giegerich is editor of "The Big Four Family."

Universal Promotes Coupon Scheme

Will Adapt the "Green Trading Stamp" Idea to Motion Pictures—Says Plan Will Increase Attendance.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in conjunction with the Robyn-Kander Movie Ticket Corporation, proposes to adapt a trading stamp proposition to the exhibition of pictures with the hope that the patronage of the picture theater will be stimulated thereby. The plan is worked in this manner:

Tickets are sold in quantities to manufacturers and packers of staples, and retail dealers of all sorts of necessities by the Robyn-Kander company. The manufacturers and retailers hand them out with sales to customers in whatever quantity they choose and the customer exchanges them for tickets of admission to the picture theater if the manager agrees to accept them.

The ticket consists of a heading and twenty little fractions, but when presented at the box office they come all as one piece. There is a gummed strip between the ticket fractions and the heading, so when a person has started the ticket with one set of fractions, they destroy the heading on the next set, and attach these fractions to the ticket already started, by using the gummed strip.

The exhibitor takes these tickets in, saves them until he gets ten, one hundred, or as few or as many as he wants, and then sends them into the nearest Universal exchange, where he receives their face value in cash, in supplies, in film, or in any way he wants, for these tickets are as good as five cents at any Universal exchange. The Universal will give the exhibitor, at sight, a nickel in money for each ticket he sends in or presents, and they are as good as gold on any purchase he makes from them, whether he takes the Universal service, or not. If yours is a ten cent house, the complete ticket can be turned in and applied for a nickel on admission, or your public will save two tickets for a ten cent admission.

Division Managers Confer

Harry C. Drum, Assistant General Manager of the World Film, Outlines Policies That Were Successful in the West.

THE five division managers of the World Film Corporation visited New York last week to confer with Vice-President and General Manager Lewis J. Selznick and Assistant General Manager Harry C. Drum, who is organizing the branch offices throughout the country on the lines that he found practical and effective in the West. The present arrangement provides five general divisions in the United States, these in turn being sub-divided into five subsidiary divisions, making twenty-five in all, the manager of each branch being under the direction of the manager of the division in which he is located. Mr. Drum receives comprehensive reports from the division managers each week, the reports being based on detailed accounts of the progress of business in the territory covered.

The managers and the divisions they represent are George J. Schaefer, Eastern; Denham Palmer, East Central; W. R. Scates, West Central; W. W. Drum, Western; and E. Auger, Southern. Mr. Drum spent a few days in Cleveland, O., last week, assisting Mr. Palmer in launching the office in that city.

William N. Selig Honored

Employees Present Him with a Loving Cup and a Great Bronze Elephant to Commemorate Coming Opening.

IN HONOR of the coming opening of the Selig Zoo in Los Angeles, four hundred employees and friends of William N. Selig held a dance at the amusement pavilion in the big grounds on the evening of Wednesday, June 2. The party gathered at 8 o'clock and did not break up until midnight. During the evening Frank L. Stobbs, a Los Angeles friend of Mr. Selig, on behalf of the Edendale forces, presented the president of the Selig Polyscope Company with a handsome silver loving cup and, on behalf of the staff at the Zoo, with a giant bronze elephant. Mr. Selig made no response—he was much affected by these striking evidences of the regard of his associates and made no attempt to tell the assemblage how he felt about it; he didn't have to.

The loving cup, which Mr. Selig carried back to his hotel with him and where it now occupies the place of honor in his apartment, is fourteen inches in height and rests on an elaborate ebony pedestal. From the two large handles depend ribbons in the Selig colors—gold and blue. The lining is of gold. The well-known sign of the house of Selig is engraved on the bowl—a letter S in a horizontal diamond. The border and the letter are in blue enamel and the field is in gold. There is an inscription, which reads: "Hoping that the opening of the gates today will symbolize future and greater successes—Edendale Studio." The elephant is four feet in length and approximately the same in height. The strength of four men is required to lift it. It is inscribed: "From the employees of the Zoo"—and that included every person connected with the twenty-two-acre establishment. Mr. Selig promptly made arrangements for the photographing of the handsome gifts.

The plans were made and carried out by J. L. McGee, for seven years one of Mr. Selig's executives. It is intended to make these social reunions a monthly occasion.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT WITH BALBOA.

After signing William Elliott as co-star with Ruth Roland in "Comrade John," a five-reel production to be produced by the Balboa Company for Pathe, H. M. Horkheimer, president of Balboa, left New York on June 9 for the coast, where he will supervise the production of the first installments of "Neal of the Navy," written by William Hamilton Osborne for release by Pathe. It is expected that the new serial will be a worthy successor of "Who Pays?"

Mr. Horkheimer told a representative of the Moving Picture World that an agreement had been reached whereby all future Balboa productions will be handled exclusively by Pathe and that he had instituted a new policy for feature pictures requiring the appearance of a stage star and a screen star in each one.

While in New York Mr. Horkheimer engaged fifteen additional players for the Balboa Company, among them Jack Adams, William Courtleigh, Jr., Ethel Fleming, Lillian West and William Conklin.

Meeting of the Central Division Branch Managers and Salesmen of the World Film Corporation.

Standing, left to right—R. H. Fox, Chicago; M. J. Burnside, Cleveland; R. L. White, St. Louis; E. D. Selden, Minneapolis; Ph. Goldstone, Omaha; E. M. Lane, Indianapolis; Dad Dickinson, Chicago; W. W. Kulp, Cleveland. Sitting, left to right—M. Levey, Kansas City; C. E. Brehn, Cincinnati; Harry Weiss, Chicago; Jos. Klein, Detroit.

Mme. Pavlowa with Universal

Famous Classic Dancer Will Appear in an Eight-Part Production.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Co. has engaged Mme. Anna Pavlowa, the incomparable classic dancer and her famous Ballet Russe to appear in an eight-reel film production. For months Carl Laemmle and George E. Kann have been laboring with Pavlowa to induce her to appear in a motion picture of the Universal making. Steadily, persistently she thrust aside offers of remuneration which ran into many thousands of dollars. She didn't want to appear in pictures at all.

Mme. Anna Pavlowa.

Keeping everlastingly at it won. That and the contracted agreement with the film production of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," Auber's grand opera which was put on at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York twenty-one years ago, should in every respect be up to the supreme ideals of art cherished by the dancer superb. Such a production will be made and as such will be played in the largest theaters in the world, with full orchestral accompaniment.

Lois Weber, famous as the author and co-producer with Phillips Smalley, of "Hypocrites" and lately of "Scandal," will write the scenario. Much opportunity for Pavlowa and her supporting company is provided. Miss. Weber will also direct the picture.

Laemmle's selection of a director was wise. Miss Weber as a woman of art will understand a woman of art. She will bring forth a product pleasing to Pavlowa and pleasing to the avid eyes of the world.

Pavlowa's full company of forty-seven will be used when the interior sets are begun July 3 in Chicago, simultaneous with Pavlowa's appearance in a theater in that city.

Following the taking of the Chicago scenes, a special train will take the troupe to Universal City, near Los Angeles, California. On the trip Mme. Pavlowa will have a special car for herself, her two maids and her secretary. At Universal City she will be provided with a bungalow with quarters for servants, automobiles, etc.

Special outdoor sets elaborate to an extreme will be built at Universal City at an expenditure running into many thousands of dollars.

WARNING.

Our readers in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York are hereby once more cautioned against paying any money to anyone whatever who claims to be an agent for this paper and who offers subscriptions at less than our regular rate of $3.00 per annum. We have just been advised by an exhibitor in Mamaroneck, N. Y., in regard to the operations of a swindler who is offering subscriptions to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and one or two other moving picture magazines and who is also claiming to represent the Kraus Manufacturing Company and some of our other advertisers. We understand he is a young man of rather short stature and fair complexion, well dressed, wears a diamond ring and is a good talker. In Mamaroneck he was using the letterhead of a business firm in Philadelphia and was offering the Kraus post cards at about half price and subscription to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD at $2.00, etc. It is needless to say that the man is an impostor and should be promptly arrested for swindling. We will be glad to appear against him if he is trapped by any of our readers. Later advices indicate that the same party is operating in Plymouth, Pa.

It is a good plan to pay no money to unknown parties for subscriptions to magazines at any time. Either send your check or postal money order direct to the publishers or subscribe through your local newsdealer or any of the well-known subscription agencies. The safest and most direct plan at all times is to send your subscription for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, 17 Madison avenue, N. Y. C.

Star and Producer of "The Broken Coin."

IT IS NOT so very long ago since Francis Ford created a sensation with the first really great serial ever shown. "Lucille Love" was the means of establishing a world-wide reputation for its already popular star and producer which has rapidly been augmented until today, Francis Ford stands as one of the foremost directors in the film game. His "Campbells are Coming," "The Doorway of Destruction," "Nabbed," "Smuggler's Island," are features which are a striking example of the masterful director's art. It was not surprising, therefore, that Carl Laemmle, president of the Big U company, should have selected the successful star and director to produce "The Broken Coin."

Francis Ford.

Before entering the film game Mr. Ford was with Amelia Bingham for some time and played in many stock companies thereby laying the foundation for screen success. He is a make-up artist of unsurpassed skill and delights in creating new characters. His first work in pictures was with the Centaur company and he was one of the first to be engaged by the old Nestor company six years ago. Then came his engagement with the Edison company and afterwards a long period with the Melies, where he acted, directed and produced with unprecedented success. However, it was with the original Bison company that he showed his genius for western, war and Indian pictures. Four years ago found him a full-fledged Universalite and the Big U company has been his home ever since.

Plaissetty with Blache

GENE PLAISSETTY, the well-known French-American film man, has left New Orleans and has accepted a position as one of the directors of the Popular Plays and Players Company, of which Mr. Blache is the head. Mr. Plaissetty, in spite of his youth, has had considerable experience as a director in France, where he was in great demand when the war broke out and for the time being disorganized the entire industry.

Rene Plaissetty.

He will devote himself exclusively to the production of films of great length, and it is expected that his first picture will have a particularly strong cast and scenario. The Blache features are being released through the Metro. Mr. Plaissetty started work on his first picture within a few hours of his engagement.

During his stay in New Orleans M. Plaissetty, who has been in this country before, familiarized himself still further with American ideas and American conditions, and the experience thus gained will, it is expected, make his work all the more acceptable. Mr. Plaissetty is the father of a very bright little girl who has shown unusual ability on the screen, having appeared in one of her father's best productions.

Spokes from the Hub

Boston's Bluest Blood Finds Joy and Relaxation in the Picture Show.

By Marion Howard.

EFFETE society has joined the procession and is "Movie Mad" owing in part to the fact the Back Bay has a theater all its own, in close proximity to the homes of thousands who hitherto have not bothered much with or been sufficiently interested in, the silent drama.

This theater, The Exeter, is run by a woman, a petite little body quiet in manner, always approachable and best of all she welcomes suggestions and criticisms. Mrs. Marcellus Ayer is not only the proprietor but is a self-appointed censor and tries everything out, music and all, so that her public is bound to be pleased. Not so very long ago this theater was a Temple for Spiritualists. It is across the way from the church of the late Edward Everett Hale and the parishioners not only like their neighbors, but are frequent patrons. The interior is rich in coloring, very large with lofty ceiling and spacious stage fitted up with flowering plants and palms. A notable feature is the music rendered by Jarvis Joslyn, one of the Hub's best musicians and extremely popular. Two soloists are especially selected.

Friday and Sunday are the fashionable nights, as the long line of limousines indicates, some coming in from Brookline, the so-called wealthiest city of its size in America. Hundreds walk bareheaded to this theater nightly so that quite a fad has developed.

Perhaps the films which first attracted the attention of society were those of "Julius Caesar," the Kleine production which had a run at the fashionable Opera House; then came "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith gem, here to stay, in spite of hysterical protests on the part of a small portion of our public and some officials who condemned without first seeing the magnificent production. It is running to big houses and thousands of our best and most intelligent citizens endorse it, go again and again to show their approval. All Hub denizens will have seen it before the recently-made law can have any effect. So much for a survival of the fittest!

Governor Walsh frequently goes round the corner from the Hotel Lenox, his temporary home and laughs heartily over such little skits as "The Bachelor's Dream" (he being one of the unattached).

No more enthusiastic fan than Lotta Crabtree exists round here, "I just love the movies for they give me pleasure and are so educational," she declared to me. She does not confine her loyalty to the Park theater (which she owns), but goes the rounds and takes in the best. She is honorary member of the Professional Women's Club, which has so many members in the films, like Lillian Russell, Florence Reed, Elsie Janis and others about to enter. This club makes up parties whenever their members appear, as they do for the speaking drama.

Mrs. Jack Gardner, the most discussed society woman, is a convert. She finds delight in such films as "The Lion of Venice," a city with which she is familiar and in honor of which she has erected a Venetian Palace in the Fenway and which has no duplicate in this country. All the material, decorations and works of art were imported for it. Mrs. Jack and many in her set make a point to go where the famous players appear and recently turned out in large numbers to greet Stewart Baird in "The Moth and the Flame," he being one of the few here to leave the set of amateurs for the professionals, making his debut under Winthrop Ames in New York.

I caught a very staid Bostonian and his stately wife, a Colonial Dame, at Mrs. Ayer's theater last week laughing and applauding the antics of Charles Abbe (one of the old-time Museum favorites), and "Niobe." The man was Captain William Humphrey and it was a treat to watch his face and see him relax. One man said to him, "Say, but this is great, for you don't have to strain your ears to hear lines, which is one reason why I prefer the movies to the spoken drama."

A very proper Back Bay deacon sat next to me the other night and I furtively glanced at him while the delicious little short film "Her Valentine" was on and he actually shed tears. Turning to me he said "What a human play that is, I had a similar experience when a kid."

Then there is another reason why so many go, as illustrated in the remark made to me last week by a recent widow, who said she had found consolation—at least diversion—from her sorrow. "What is his name," I innocently asked "Oh, my dear, it is not a man. Come with me and I'll show you why I am less despondent than when we last met." She straightway walked me into a picture show where Elsie Janis was doing her stunts in "In Search of a Thrill." She further declared that her physician had sent her to the picture as a sure cure for the blues. Other M. Ds. are giving the same advice. Try it!

Bud Duncan

HIS last name is Duncan. What his Christian name is, nobody knows—that is, nobody outside of his family. A long time ago, his diminutive size won for him the nickname "Bud." He has been known as "Bud" Duncan ever since.

Although he isn't a big chap—Bud doesn't quite reach the four-foot-eleven mark—he is a giant for laugh producing ability. Proof of this assertion can be found in any of Kalem's famous "Ham" comedies in which this comedian appears with his life-long chum, Loyd V. Hamilton.

Bud Duncan.

Duncan admits to having been born in Brooklyn, N. Y. He answered the call of the stage at the age of six and, for a time, appeared with his father, who was famous as a ventriloquist in his days. Later, Bud returned to school. Upon his graduation, Duncan secured a position in the Grand Opera House, where he became assistant treasurer.

Shortly afterwards, Bud was offered a position in "The "Postmaster's Daughter" company. This, with the possible exception of his early amateur efforts with Ham, was the beginning of his career as an actor. The next few years saw him with Lew Fields and other famous stars.

About two years ago, Duncan decided to try his luck in Mexico. A few months in that revolution ridden country, however, caused him to long for the comforts and pleasures of his native country. His departure, as well as that of many other citizens of the United States, was hastened by the Mexican revolutionists and Bud came home on the U. S. S. Justice.

Upon his arrival at California, Duncan found his pal Hamilton with the Kalem forces. A few days later, and Bud made his debut in motion pictures. He made good from the start. Some of the forthcoming "Ham" comedies, which contain specimens of his mirth-provoking qualities, are "Raskey's Road Show," "In High Society" and "The Merry Moving Men."

LUBIN COMPANY GOING TO NEWPORT.

A company of Lubin players will leave for Newport, R. I., shortly, to begin the filming of a number of special society and naval pictures. Last summer a Lubin company spent several weeks at the fashionable resort and secured some unusually interesting dramas, in which the United States Navy played a very important part.

The company will be headed by George W. Terwilliger, the writer and director, and will include Ormi Hawley, Hazel Hubbard, Earl Metcalfe, Herbert Fortier, William H. Turner, Arthur Matthews, Eleanor Barry, Mae DeMetz, Edward Luck, P. T. Volkman, William Cooper and others. A special studio will be constructed in Newport so that the company will be able to film the necessary interiors there.

Fitzmaurice Back with Pathe

GEORGE FITZMAURICE, formerly Pathe scenario editor, and later a director for that company, has returned to the scene of his first motion picture work. He will film one of the first of a long line of popular novels and plays which have been bought by Pathe for picturization—the famous play "Via Wireless," which had a remarkably successful run on the New York stage, and later for two years on the road. The original New York production will be remembered as a "thriller" from start to finish, and was played by Edwin Arden (now with Pathe), Muriel Starr and John Mintern. It was written by Winchell Smith and Paul Armstrong. Among the striking scenes are an iron foundry casting a gun, wireless rooms on battleships, and the blowing up of a steam yacht at sea.

George Fitzmaurice.

Mr. Fitzmaurice left Pathe at the outbreak of the European War, and since then has been a Kleine director, with such pictures as "Stop Thief," "The Commuters" and "The Battle" to his credit. He made two very successful pictures for Pathe, "The Quest of the Sacred Gem" and "The Bomb Boy."

It is understood that Pathe made him a very flattering proposition to turn out big features for them, and "Fitz" says he's mighty glad to get back at his old job again. With the splendid opportunities given him by such a vehicle as "Via Wireless," it is safe to predict a most noteworthy picture. The cast, which will be a first-class one, will be announced later.

IT WAS REEVA, NOT WINNIFRED.

Entirely unintentionally, we are sure, the name of Winnifred Greenwood was printed in the issue of the Moving Picture World of June 5 as being a member of the cast of a Lariat picture, released by the United Film Service. Miss Greenwood takes exception to this in the following telegram:

"* * * United Program has used my name illegitimately and without reason as I have not communicated in any way whatsoever with them, nor they with me; in fact, have never heard of the Lariat company. Knowing that you are not at fault in any way, but wishing to contradict the same and also to avoid useless inquiries, would greatly appreciate a conspicuous denial of the Lariat company's article in your next issue, either in your own words or this wire signed by me."

In justice to the writer of the erroneous item and to ourselves we wish to say that the error was quite inadvertent. The name of "Greenwood" in motion pictures, is almost always associated with "Winnifred," the charming leading woman of the American company and, however unfortunate, it is quite natural that such an error should escape the editorial eye. As a matter of fact "Reeva" should have been used as that is the name of the Lariat star; also a very charming picture player.

ROSKAM WITH ECLIPSE LABORATORIES.

Edward M. Roskam, whose withdrawal from the Life Photo Film Co., and the Commercial Motion Picture Company, was previously announced in these columns, has become manager of the Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., which has leased the former plant of the Commercial at Grantwood, N. J., and opened temporary offices at 220 West Forty-second street, New York. The Eclipse will handle a general laboratory business.

Mr. Roskam has been in the motion picture business for several years, beginning in the factory of the Vitagraph Company, where he spent two years, he joined the Imp Company when Carl Laemmle began to make pictures and afterward organized the Life Photo and the Commercial companies.

ED-AU CLUB MEETING.

A most gratifying and extremely instructive meeting of the New York Ed-Au Club was held at Brown's on June the 1st. After a splendid table d'hote dinner the club settled down to the business of the evening.

A paper was read by Mr. Hobart, of the Kalem Company, on "The Single View Point Mystery Story." This was a most able and interesting paper which brought out some instructive discussion from various members.

Edwin LaRoche, of the Motion Picture Magazine, spoke of the splendid future of the Ed-Au Club and of the necessity of its having a permanent home where the members might congregate as often as they desire, and some rather ambitious plans for the development of some were discussed.

It was decided by the Board of Governors, which consists of Mrs. Mary Louise Farley, Phil. Lang, Arthur Leeds, Howard Young and the President Ex-Officio, Geo. L. Sargent, that in the future a small initiation fee of five dollars be imposed on all new members, and yearly dues of six dollars be required from each one.

The requirements for membership are that the applicants shall have at least ten produced photoplays to their credit before applying for membership.

At the next meeting, to be held July 6, the election of new officers takes place, and a full attendance is desired as other business of importance will be considered.

Edward Montague, of the Vitagraph Company, will read a paper on "Adaptation of the Story to Novel, to Play."

After a most pleasant evening the club adjourned to meet the first Tuesday evening in July at Brown's Chop House, Broadway and 40th street. MARY LOUISE FARLEY, Secretary.

Alice Brady with Knickerbocker

ALICE BRADY, the popular and charming young Broadway star, is the next recruit from the field of legitimate players to join the ranks of Knickerbocker Star Features. Miss Brady is just closing a successful season in "Sinners" and is engaged next week with De Wolf Hopper in a revival of Gilbert & Sullivan Operas at the 48th Street theater in New York City, taking up her work the following Monday in a three-reel drama of Knickerbocker Star Features especially written for her and adapted to her well-known charming mannerisms.

Alice Brady.

Alice Brady is well known to legitimate theater-goers, scoring her first success some five or six years ago in the "Balkan Princess." Later she supported De Wolf Hopper in the Gilbert & Sullivan Operas and surprised her host of friends by demonstrating that she was an excellent singer as well as a successful actress. Her next several seasons were spent in the plays "Things Which Count," "Sylvia Ran Away" and "What Is Love," in which she starred. As to her screen work she has been featured with Holbrook Blinn in "The Boss," and much is expected of her in Knickerbocker Star Features. She will appear in an early release of that brand.

LINCOLN STUDIO AT GRANTWOOD.

Ed. Lincoln, the well-known star of "The Littlest Rebel" and many Vitagraph features, is planning to do some big things as an independent producer. A big force of men are working on his own studios and factory at Grantwood, N. J. The plant, which is costing $100,000 to build and equip, promises to be perfect for all-around efficiency and service.

Jack Pratt, as director, will continue the policy of adapting popular novels for the screen features. Mr. Lincoln will be starred in the stories. At present Director Pratt is busy on Robert Chambers' great success "The Fighting Chance," in which Mr. Lincoln has one of the greatest parts of his career.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Important Film Copyright Decision Just Rendered.

WHAT must be recognized as one of the most important decisions in the history of moving picture litigation has just been rendered by Judge Learned Hand, of the New York United States District Court, in the suit brought by George Kleine against Abraham Polacoff, doing business as the Quality Feature Film Co., for infringement of the plaintiff's copyright on the film called "The Golden Beetle." The decision upholds the claim of the plaintiff and directs the entry of a judgment for the costs and counsel fee against the defendant.

The interesting feature of the decision is found in the fact that it throws out the defense made on the basis that at least parts of the plaintiff's and defendant's prints of the film were made from different negatives. It states that, in spite of the fact that a number of scenes were printed from different negatives, "none the less there would be an infringement in the case, for the play is based on a scenario which is repeatedly acted, and it is part of the literary property, and the statutory copyright which is obtained under the statute, if the scenario is acted and if there are several negatives. Each one of those negatives, if obtained without the consent of the owner, would be an infringement of the dramatic rights in the motion play."

"The Golden Beetle," produced by the Cines Company, of Rome, was imported by George Kleine and copyrighted by him at Washington, April 20, 1914. In August, an unauthorized print of the film appeared in New York and was seized by the United States marshal upon complaint of Mr. Kleine as owner of the copyright. The question of the validity of this action, in regard to the copyright, was brought up before Judge Hand, and the defendant attempted to show that his film was different from the copyrighted picture.

According to his own witnesses, however, at least sixty per cent. of the scenes were identical, and the others, although evidently not printed from the same negative, nevertheless were so similar as to leave no doubt that they were different "takes" of the same story.

After Mr. Kleine's attorney, George F. Scull, had proved the facts upon which his case was based, and shown the exclusive rights of Mr. Kleine in regard to the film, Judge Hand made his decision.

During the course of the hearing the defendant testified that he had bought the unauthorized print from George Brodenburgh, of Philadelphia.

The films were purchased by the defendant from Bradenburgh in July, 1914. They were seized in August, 1914.

The suit was heard on or about Wednesday, May 26, 1915, and the decision was rendered May 28, 1915.

Following is the decision rendered by Judge Learned Hand of the United States Circuit Court, Southern District of New York, in May (1915) term:

This will be my disposition of the case: In this action it is substantially uncontroverted that there are large portions of the defendant's film which are identical with the plaintiff's film. Indeed the defendant's witnesses testify that so far as they can see, for great portions over a half or more, the films are probably produced from the identical negative. It is possible, however, and, indeed, I may say it is likely, that for very substantial portions the films of the defendant are not actually taken from the same negative. This arises from the fact that in securing these motion plays, the rehearsal is taken on the camera, and perhaps two or three performances, and each of these negatives is preserved, the final choice being the most desirable negative. Sometimes more than one negative is actually used. And, therefore, it is very easy to see that in this case what I may call this matrix negative may not have been the same as that from which the whole of the defendant's positive was produced. None the less, there would be infringement in the case, for the play is based on a scenario which is repeatedly acted, and it is part of the literary property, and the statutory copyright which is obtained under the statute, if the scenario is acted and if there are several negatives.

Each one of those negatives, if obtained without the consent of the owner, would be an infringement of the dramatic rights in the motion play. So I do not think it of very great consequence in this case, indeed I cannot see that it is of any consequence in the case, that portions of the reels may be from separate negatives.

However, that may be, and that is a question which I need not finally determine at this time, there is enough similarity between the films to justify an injunction against the whole of the defendant's film, and the first part of the disposition of this case will be so to enjoin the defendant from performing those films, as an entirely and as they stand.

The next question will be as to whether he can save any part of his own film. As I have said, there are portions which are probably from different negatives. I do not mean to say that on that account he can save those portions which are from different negatives. Without an inspection of the film I could not see whether the similarity between the two negatives was such as to make all of his negatives infringements, regardless of whether they were identical, although I must confess that the testimony seems to me to be that even in the scenes which differ there is a substantial copying of the scenario as it is written. But I am disposed to allow the defendant to try to make some proof on that portion of the case. He may, therefore, take a reference to a master on this question:

Are those portions of his film which are not taken from the same negative as the plantiff's film a substantial infringement of the plaintiff's copyright? By this I mean, are they substantially a copy from the motion play based upon the scenario which was the subject matter of the negatives themselves? If there is any part of his film which is not taken from the negative, which in turn does copy a motion play based upon that scenario, he may have that delivered back to him; no confiscation will go as to those portions. But if it appear that all of this is really an infringement of the motion play, defined as I have intended to define it, in that case he will recover no part of the film. The expenses of this reference in any event must be borne by the defendant, as he is the party who has by his own tort mingled the plaintiff's property with what may turn out to be his own property, and the expense of thus untangling the two is necessarily part of the costs of his wrong.

I will also reserve the question, if the case goes to a reference, as to what attorneys' fees are to be allowed to the attorney for the plaintiff under the statute for that reference, but I will fix now a fee for plaintiff's attorney up to date, and that fee I fix at $150.

There is no ground here for damages, because there has been no presentation, as I understand it.

Mr. Scull: We waive an accounting.

The Court: And the accounting is waived. The decree will be entered on notice to the defendant's attorney of one day.

Mr. Lane: But for the present, there will be no confiscation or seizure?

The Court: There will be no confiscation order until the defendant has had time to consider the question as to whether he will go to a reference. He must make that decision within ten days, and the parties will settle on the matter themselves. If you cannot settle I will fill it in, in the decree.

Mr. Scull: There is one point. If there is any portion of this film to be returned to the defendant, is it not proper that he should be enjoined from putting it out under the same title, or an analogous title as complainant's?

The Court: He will be enjoined from putting it out under the same title; and that will be included in the decree. I do not think myself that there is any possibility of his recovering any part, because that has all been on the assumption that he could recover what is not from the identical negative; and I think I have made it clear, I hope I have made it clear, in my opinion that I do not deem that the exclusive test of infringement, but there may be infringement by different rehearsals made of a motion play based upon the original scenario.

The Harper Theater, This City, Wins Its Case.

The trustees of the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, this city, who have long and successfully prevailed against the opening of the Harper theater nearby, have decided to withdraw their opposition. It came about this way:

On April 23 Judge Lockwood Honore, of the Circuit Court, overruled a demurrer filed by the city of Chicago to a petition for a writ of mandamus brought by Frank Nahser, who sought a permit to open the house. The city halted this victory for the Harper theater by taking an appeal to the Supreme Court, and a state order was entered by Judge Honore, delaying execution of the mandamus until the Supreme Court had decided.

The church trustees abandoned a proposition to appeal the case when the city insisted that they should give an indemnity bond to secure the city against possible damages in case the upper court sustained Judge Honore's ruling. Mayor Thompson told the trustees that he would withhold issuance of the license to the Harper theater if they would give a sufficiently large bond. This the trustees refused to do.

It is held that Judge Honore's ruling, while it means so much to theater owners, has nothing to do with the ordinance which prohibits saloons being opened within a certain distance from a church.

Directions to the corporation counsel to redraft the building code so that it will conform with the decision which allows theaters to be operated within 200 feet of a church have been issued by the committee on buildings.

"The Birth of a Nation" Wins Second Bout.

Petition was filed in the Superior Court, this city, Wednesday, June 2, by the manufacturers of "The Birth of a Nation" asking an injunction against the City of Chicago. Mayor Thompson and other city officials restraining them from interfering with the presentation of that photoplay.

Arguments were heard before Judge William Fenimore Cooper, Friday, June 4, the complainant contending that the city, inasmuch as it had previously issued permits for the presentation of the picture, had lost control of the matter and should be prevented from further interference.

J. G. Grossberg, of counsel for the complainant, quoted authorities to show that such action was warrantable only during the first three days after inspection, except on violation of the only provisory section in the ordinance, the admission of minors, when so conditioned.

In the ordinances he found no right of the mayor to revoke permits, and he regarded permits granted as binding the good faith of the city, making it safe for the licensee to go ahead in making contracts, as had been done in this case to an extent of a $30,000 consideration, in addition to the fortune spent in the original making of the picture.

He also insisted that when the permits were issued and the three days allowed to lapse the judiciary power was exhausted, and that the effect of the further action by the chief of police was confiscation of the $30,000 invested on the good faith of the permits.

Assistant Corporation Counsel George Reker was unable to see any element of damage in the situation to the owners of the film, declaring that none of the contracts engaged in held. He asserted that the permit was secured clandestinely by the "man who sneaked in and got it."

Judge Honore here inquired into the matter of the issue of the permits and Major Funkhouser was brought in. The second deputy said:

"The mayor's secretary, Charles Fitzmorris, called me on the 'phone and asked to look at the picture February 25. He said he didn't want the censors there, so I arranged they should not be. Three or four were there unofficially, altogether about twenty people, including Mrs. Carter H. Harrison. I did not go in until the ninth reel and I stayed only fifteen or twenty minutes—saw only about half of one reel.

"There was no one else there from the police department besides myself and I ordered the censor in charge to tell the censors not to view it officially.

"Mr. Fitzmorris gave instructions to issue the permit without any cuts, and the records so show."

Major Funkhouser asserted that Mr. Fitzmorris said he was the representative of the mayor to censor pictures, while he (Major Funkhouser) saw less than one reel and couldn't remember what that was about.

D. W. Griffith was then called and, after he had closed, Judge Cooper took the case under advisement.

His decision was rendered Saturday, June 5, and the initial presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Chicago was given at the Illinois theater the same evening.

It is understood that the city will seek to dissolve the injunction put in force by the decision.

Judge Cooper's Decision.

The city contends against the issuance of the injunction on three grounds: that the permit to exhibit the photoplay in question was not lawfully issued; that the permit issued was revoked and that the photoplay, if presented, will engender race animosity against the negro citizens of our community.

This last ground is based purely on assumption. To find that this is a good objection to the allowing of the injunction, this court will have to assume that our white citizens will not know or appreciate the fact that the days represented in the play were nearly in the first years of the last half century.

This court will have to assume that they who will witness the play will be so stupid that they will be unable to comprehend that the people represented on the canvas were of two or three generations ago, and that they do not and will not appreciate the fact that in the succeeding time the negro race has advanced almost immeasurably.

The court cannot assume that this will be so, when we know that there is universal recognition of the fact that no race has shown such great general advancement in from two to three generations as the negro race has done.

In our own great community the fact is recognized by all well informed citizens that we have in the various professions and higher lines of business members of that race who are ministers, dentists, lawyers, physicians, and business men of fine ability and business character, who enjoy the respect and confidence of our community.

This court is satisfied from the evidence that in this photoplay the good black man and the bad white man are equally prominent figures in the play. Every night in every fair sized community in this broad land where the stage instructs or entertains each and every play has its good characters and its bad characters portrayed, both of which are essential to a play in the rounding out of the moral of the play, and without which moral a play is of no educational value.

Every night in every theater there is produced the debased type of the white race of different nationalities, and if representative groups of the various nationalities so presented became acutely sensitive that such individual portrayal would cause them to suffer race hatred of their race, and all the plays in which a villain had played were stopped on that account, the theater as an educator and entertainer of the people would become a memory of the past, and there would be nothing to fill its place for the education and enjoyment of our people.

No one race or nationality has greater right under the law than any other has. Any race or nationality so offended can best give the lie to the bad characters so presented by continuing to conduct themselves as law-abiding citizens who do not expect greater rights from the law than it allows all other men or nationalities.

If white men appeal to the courts to restrain the production of a play because one of its characters portrayed that of a dissolute white man whose acting would bring race hatred against the nation which his stage character assumed, their plea would be denied for want of law to support the same, and the law should be and is the same for black and white alike.

It is the duty of the courts to protect the individual in the enjoyment of his right of property. The complainant in this case is the owner or lessee of the play called "The Birth of a Nation." Under the ordinances of our city, if one who desires to present a photoplay or moving picture complies with the law and obtains a license honestly and in good faith, and the play has been censored by the proper authorities of the city, and he has paid his money for a fee, from that time on the owner of the play is vested with an individual property right, which neither the city of Chicago, nor any official, be he mayor, general superintendent of police, or be he judge, can arbitrarily deprive him of, without giving him his hearing or day in court.

The evidence in this case satisfies the court that this play was censored by the mayor's private secretary and by Mrs. Harrison, the wife of the former mayor of Chicago. Major Funkhouser admits that he received orders from the mayor's office to issue a permit for the production of this photoplay, and gave directions to that effect. A permit was issued first by James Gleason, general superintendent of police, and later on the present general superintendent of police, Charles C. Healey, issued another permit.

I am obliged to find under the law and the evidence in this case that the complainant is entitled to the relief prayed for, and I will enter an injunction restraining the mayor, the chief of police, and the city of Chicago from interfering with the production of the play.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Dr. Frederick A. Cook was given a farewell dinner by the Sportsmen's Club of America, this city, Friday evening, June 4. The dinner was given in his honor by many friends and some of his big game hunter associates, as an expression of their confidence in him and as a token of their best wishes for the success of his latest scientific expedition, "The Ascent of Mt. Everest," in the Himalayas, India. Dr. Cook will leave Chicago June 6, by way of San Francisco, for Calcutta, whence he will proceed with his expedition to Khatmander, the capital of Nepal, where headquarters will be established. He will penetrate the tropical jungle of Nepal into Thibet. After completing this part of the trip, the expedition will continue a round-the-world tour, all of which will be recorded by special stories in moving pictures, such as have made the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial educational and entertaining.

"The White Sister," in which Viola Allen appears in the titular role, is at the time of writing receiving its finishing touches at Essanay's Chicago studios. It will be released by the V-L-S-E, Inc., on June 21.

Wm. H. Cadoret, of Kankakee, Ill., was in the city one day last week. Mr. Cadoret has quite recovered from the effects of a broken leg, and is busily supervising the finishing touches on his new theater, the La Petite, which will be opened about June 25. The old house of the same name will be closed when the new house opens. Mr. Cadoret was in the city specially to make arrangements with I. Van Ronkle, manager of the Chicago office of the V-L-S-E, Inc., for programs of that product, on special days. The General Film Company's regular programs will be used on other days. Ten and fifteen cents will be charged for special programs, and five and ten cents for the regular.

F. Rechenmacher, owner of the Cicero theater, 5610 West Twenty-second street, Cicero, Ill., called on us one day last week. The Cicero seats 341 people, and charges five cents for five reels of Licensed pictures. On Sunday ten cents is charged for a seven-reel program. Mr. Rechenmacher reported good business.

Fred S. Meyer, general manager of the Western Kriterion Film Service, Inc., Minneapolis, stepped in to see us Monday, June 7, when he paid this city a visit. The object of Mr. Meyer's visit was to arrange for big features, and to make arrangements for opening an office for the Fulton Supply House, of this city, in Minneapolis, in the office of the Western Kriterion Film Service, Inc.

Meredith Nicholson, the novelist, came all the way from Indianapolis, Ind., last week to see his novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles," produced in moving pictures by the Selig Polyscope Company. This feature will be released in the near future as a Selig Red Seal subject. Mr. Nicholson had never before been in a moving picture studio and he was greatly interested in the work of production. He personally congratulated the directors and players because of their convincing characterizations. "This is the first story of mine that was ever filmed," said Mr. Nicholson. "I am surprised to find how faithfully and convincingly the plot has been followed." Before he left for home, Mr. Nicholson expressed his pleasure over the careful visualization of his famous story by presenting Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond with autographed copies of his book.

Plays Company, left Thursday afternoon, June 3, for Washington, D. C., where he will make several exterior scenes for the six-reel feature, "The Victory of Virtue." This film will be released about the end of June. Gerda Holmes, Wilmuth Merkyl, Rapley Holmes, and about eight other players accompanied him.

Aaron J. Jones announces that the Colonial theater will change from vaudeville to feature moving pictures about June 14. A change of program will be made twice weekly, on Monday and Thursday. The very finest feature pictures are promised and a large symphony orchestra for accompaniment. Norman E. Field, who managed the theater during its vaudeville regime, will continue as manager.

Vitagraph's fine production, "The Island of Regeneration," based on the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's unique romance of that name, is occupying the screen at the Ziegfeld this week. Much praise has been given this pictured romance by all who have viewed it, notwithstanding that several artistic scenes have been mutilated by the Chicago censor board.

Edward Q. Cordner, the artistic manager of productions at Orchestra Hall, offers another well selected program to his numerous and high class patrons for the current week. "The Dawn of a To-morrow," adapted from Frances Hodgson Burnett's drama of that name, with Mary Pickford in the stellar role, is the feature attraction. Arthur Dunham, conductor of the fine twenty-five-piece symphony orchestra, has arranged a special orchestration for this production.

The first set of the United Photo-Play Company's China series of moving pictures received its initial presentation at the Studebaker theater Saturday, June 5. This is the second series of Dr. George A. Dorsey's Oriental expedition. The Imperial City of China, Peking, hitherto closed to the camera man, was photographed by the special permission of the city officials. Twelve of these men accompanied Dr. Dorsey and his camera man, so that they would not take pictures of anything that was prohibited. In this China travelogue, one takes a peep into the daily life of President Yuan Shi Kai, of the Chinese Empire. This is quite an unusual sight, and it is said that this is the very first time that this Chinese dignitary and his family have appeared before a moving picture camera. There are twelve reels in the China series, so that there are two sets in all. The second set will follow the first in about two weeks. Captain E. E. Barkclay, a well-known round-the-world traveller, who lectured for the Japan tour, will also give the lectures on China.

On Friday evening, June 4, another outrage was committed by means of a stench bomb, which was thrown in front of the Bismarck theater, 3553 Armitage avenue. The house was crowded with patrons at the time. The bomb was thrown by one of two men in an automobile, which drove swiftly away before the license number could be taken This outrage is also attributed to internal troubles between rival moving picture operators' unions.

The first release of "The Chicago Tribune Animated Weekly, with the Adventures of Old Doc Yak," was made Monday, June 7. The Tribune cartoonist, Sidney Smith, shows Old Doc Yak in a series of fishing exploits that will force laughter from anything human, except a corpse. The second half of the reel shows scenes of the Sinai social center, Chicago, the naval training station at Lake Bluff during a thrilling sham battle, crippled children being introduced to the jitney 'bus, views of Mayor Thompson and Governor Dunne, and also various battleships of the United States navy. The Tribune Weekly was booked at quite a number of prominent Chicago moving picture theaters on the opening date. The Central Film Co., this city, has charge of the bookings.

Edwin M. Steck and his son, H. Tipton Steck, have purchased the Parkway theater from F. O. Nielsen, who has made it one of the best reputed theaters in the city for fine projection, orderly management and excellent programs. "The high standard of excellence will not only be maintained but improved under our management," says H. Tipton Steck, whom I have known for over five years, in connection with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, as publicity manager and chief scenario editor. "Our programs will be made up of feature films of both Licensed and Independent service, and the best that can be obtained will be none too good for our Parkway patrons. The theater's excellent reputation is too well known to warrant my saying any more. The house seats 732 people, is thoroughly equipped with all modern improvements, and stands in one of the best locations in the city. My six years' experience with the Essanay Company guarantees my patrons excellent programs of pictures, as in that time I have become thoroughly familiar with the photoplay field and know a good subject when I see it. I have no intention of leaving the Essanay Company, and intend to keep a hand not only in the manufacturing end, but also to give the patrons of the Parkway the best that money can procure." And knowing my friend Steck as I do, his promise is as good as gold.

JAMES VINCENT.

JAMES VINCENT, whose production of "The Melting Pot" for the Cort Film Corporation, which was a recent attraction at the Hippodrome, New York, has been coming to the front rapidly the past few months as one of the younger generation of directors who has been found capable of handling big subjects which require attention to an intricacy of detail.

Mr. Vincent became identified with motion pictures after an engagement with Louis Mann in "The Man Who Stood Still." He was at liberty in New York at the time and became acquainted with Sidney Olcott, who was then directing pictures for the Kalem company. Mr. Olcott was organizing a stock company which was to be taken south, in fact the first stock company ever organized to work any distance from the home plant. Vincent was offered a position with the company, the engagement to last five weeks. He went and found himself acting in pictures in Florida and other Southern states for seventeen weeks.

James Vincent.

After that trip he returned to the stage for a vaudeville engagement, but his love for pictures had been so developed that he could not forget the pleasant out-door life, which work before the camera brought to him. The following autumn he returned to the Kalem forces and again went south with Mr. Olcott. When Mr. Olcott organized his own company, Mr. Vincent went with him and directed as much as he appeared in the pictures. Mr. Vincent has directed many pictures in the past few years, principally for Kalem, Sterling and others. When Mr. Cort began to look around for a director who could handle the spectacular scenes, which were planned for "The Melting Pot," Mr. Vincent was recommended to him and a short talk was all that was necessary before Mr. Vincent was engaged.

GETTING IT RIGHT.

Roy L. McCardell suggests that inasmuch as he was for twenty years off and on connected with the New York World as a special writer, there must be a mistake in the recent statement attributed to him that he "spent some twenty years as a member of the editorial staff of the New York Herald" in various capacities. Mr. McCardell says he was never editor on the Herald, although he has contributed many special signed articles for it, singly and in serials for its Sunday edition. He also was one of the original staff of the New York Morning Telegraph and served on it as special writer and at times as city and Sunday editor. Likewise back some time in the nineties he was editor of the Metropolitan Magazine.

Doings at Los Angeles

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD welcomes you to California! When you come to Los Angeles come to the World office and make yourself at home. Information is yours if you need it. Look at the film directory and use the telephone. The West Coast Office of the World has been opened by G. V. von Harleman, who arrived here last week, and is now running full blast. It is on the third floor of the Haas building, number 305, right near the elevator. The Haas building is centrally located at Seventh street and Broadway. The studios are around it like a spider web, and the film exchanges are right at our front door. If you fail to find the office, call up on the Sunset phone, the number is Broadway 4649.

S. S. Hutchinson of the American was in town this week en route to Chicago. He departed on the last day of the month for the eastern offices of his company but will return to the west early in July so as to be on hand for the big convention in San Francisco. He reported everything as progressing nicely at the Santa Barbara studios of the Flying A.

One of the biggest and best film exchanges on the coast is under course of construction at 825 South Olive street, which will be occupied by the Mutual Film Corporation. They are removing from 738, the same street, the old offices having been outgrown. The new location is only a block up the street. The building which is 50x150 is being entirely reconstructed with spacious offices, booking rooms, and working spaces. The front will hold the office of Manager T. W. Johns. Next will be the office of N. E. Levi, manager of the regular service; Edward Holmes, who handles the Master pictures, and A. E. Cochard, who has charge of the "Diamond from the Sky" serial.

Did you ever see a ship at sea when a typhoon or cyclone is about to race up and tear things topsy turvy? Everyone scuttles about and it seems as if the whole ship were going to be caught, but eventually the whole vessel is ready for the hardest sea? Well, that's the way it is out at the big Selig Zoo, and Colonel W. N. Selig is the captain of the big animal ship, getting ready for the cyclone opening of the wondrous place.

If a Japanese picture ever was good, the Mutual's production of "The Fox Woman" ought to be the one, for it is teeming with Nipponese atmosphere, and is a cracking good film, at least that is what everyone says who has seen or been in the production. Teddy Sampson, Signe Auen, Elmer Clifton, and Bert Hadley, are the featured stars under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. This week the players spent a few days in Marsh's tea gardens at Coronado getting some wonderful scenes for this picture. The place is decorated entirely with Japanese plants and bric a brac.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

THE PLAZA THEATER, WATERLOO, IOWA.

New Picture House Is Elegantly Finished and Fitted with All Up-to-Date Equipment—Has Kimball Organ and Seats 850.

ANOTHER moving picture theater was added to the list of those amusement places in Waterloo, Iowa, when on December 20, 1914, J. E. Bryant opened the beautiful Plaza theater. It is a well built structure of brick, steel and iron, artistic in its design and an asset to the growing motion picture industry. The art to which it is devoted—that of amusement—is plainly evident in its general appearance. There are some structures that are built as picture theaters which look more like a renovated dwelling house, or almost anything else except what they are intended to represent. Their very exteriors are repellant, and, notwithstanding the good bill that might be booked, the managers wonder why their receipts are so small. Not so with the Plaza as is quite apparent from the photograph of its exterior published herewith. Its exterior is a veritable "magnet." And that its "magnetism" is powerful and far-reaching is shown by the big business that the Plaza is constantly doing. But its "magnetism" is not limited only to the beautiful architecture of the structure; it includes the personnel of the Plaza Theater Company, the systematic method of advertising and the fine show that is always given at the house. The unified strength of these elements make a powerful "magnet" for business.

Plaza Theater, Waterloo, Iowa.

The Plaza is owned and managed by J. E. Bryant. He realized that a handsome moving picture theater well managed would be a good money maker, consequently he spared no expense in giving the public of Waterloo a theater of which to be proud. Throughout the entire structure there is not a jarring note in its architecture, and the lack of gaudy and flashy decorations make the place all the more inviting. As one approaches the Plaza he is immediately impressed with its conservatism. Soft tones of ivory and brown and red greet his eye in the lobby. The ceiling is beamed and embellished with an Egyptian design, and pretty electroliers add to the effectiveness. The walls are of pressed brick and the floor is of tile. The box office is to the right and this is railed off so that the incoming and outgoing patrons will not rub shoulders with one another. The walls are adorned with framed pictures of leading actors and actresses and scenes from current and forthcoming productions. The posters are also framed and placed in convenient places on the walls. The doors leading into the auditorium proper are draped with shirred curtains of cream colored silk.

To one side of the foyer are rest rooms while to the other is the manager's office. A broad stairway on each side of the foyer leads to the loges which the Plaza Company has installed in place of boxes. The interior view of the Plaza further attests to the fact that the hand of a competent architect was employed. To fully appreciate the beauty of the interior one must visit the Plaza for a photograph cannot show the harmonious blending of the different colors, and space can be given for only a brief description. For a distance of about two-thirds their height, the walls have been decorated to represent garden walls. Surmounting this is a series of panels each with a different landscape. There are eleven of these panels. Near the ceiling on both sides of the screen are the organ lofts finished in lattice work. Below are exit doors ornamented with draperies of dark green. The drop curtain and the draperies about the proscenium are also done in green. Vases and flower boxes on each side of the auditorium add to the green in the color scheme. There is a band of orange around the proscenium arch which intensifies the distinctiveness of the interior. The aisles and foyer have been carpeted in green, and the seats are upholstered in dark brown leather with plenty of space beween each row.

The lighting system is of the indirect type, and the method of arrangement is unique. Electric bulbs are set in the cornice which is at the base of the panels, and which runs around the entire interior. This method is proving quite effective and does not detract from the brilliancy of the picture. The place is provided with six large exits situated at equal intervals between one another, and these are sufficient to empty a capacity house in less than two minutes. The seating capacity is 850. There is a good ventilation system, and the operating room, which contains all up-to-date equipment, is separated from the auditorium proper by a stout brick wall. Music is supplied by a big Kimball organ and a Knabe piano. Ralph Mason Hix is the organist and Miss Rose Blatt presides over the piano. The admission prices to the Plaza are 10 and 15 cents.

SURPRISE C. H. PIERCE.

On Friday evening, June 4, several intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Pierce tendered this couple a pleasant surprise in honor of their fifteenth wedding anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce were lured to Reisenweber's, where a party of friends greeted them with congratulations. After dinner a flowery speech by Julian M. Solomon, Jr., disclosed another surprise in the presentation of a pair of handsome silver candlesticks, appropriately engraved.

Dancing and merry-making lasted well into the wee sma' hours of the next day, and a most pleasant evening was enjoyed by all. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Tom Wiley, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lakin, Jeanette Ehrenberg, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Leah Beluck, George K. Henken, Margaret Ganss and Pete J. Schmid.

Big Picture House for Wilmington

Howard & Wells Building Beautiful Theater—Will Seat 1,000—Represents Investment of $75,000.

MESSRS. HOWARD & WELLS of Wilmington, N. C., are building a 1,000-seat picture house in that city. It is expected to be ready for opening in the middle of next September, and it will be one of the finest in that city. The structure when completed will represent an investment of about $25,000, and the plot of ground upon which the building stands was purchased for a price approximating $50,000, making a total expenditure of something like $75,000. The men who are building the new theater are men of long experience in the picture business. They trade under the name of the Bijou Amusement Company, Inc., of Wilmington, of which James Howard is president, and P. W. Wells is secretary and treasurer. They opened the Bijou theater in 1906, which was the first motion picture show to be started at Wilmington. It is still owned and operated by the same men, and has been a good money maker since its opening day. The new house is being erected at 113 North Front street, just one block from the Bijou. A line drawing of the new structure is published herewith which will give the reader an idea of what the theater will look like when finished.

Architect's Line Drawing of Picture Theater Being Built by Howard & Wells.

The front will be artistic. There will be an ornate coping and a broad canopy, which is to be of plate glass with copper trimmings, will extend for the entire width of the sidewalk. The windows will be rounded at the top, and will be fitted with small squares of stained glass. The facade will be made of terra cotta and pressed brick, and the impression created by the handsome exterior will be that the theater has a most carefully planned and harmonious constructed front. There will be a balcony containing 350 seats, while the balance of the 1,000 seats will be on the orchestra floor. Each row of chairs will be 36 inches apart. The vacuum process of ventilation will be installed, and a capacity house can be emptied in three minutes by the large number of exits that have been planned.

Of the many features that the new structure will contain is a rest room for women and children in which will be found all modern comforts and conveniences. This will be located on the main floor at the front of the building, and will be in charge of a maid at all times. This convenience will not only be at the disposal of the women patrons of the theater, but also to the public in general for their use at any time. It will also be supplied with checking room facilities. Pictures will be projected upon a Mirror Screen. The public of Wilmington will undoubtedly show their appreciation of the enterprise of the men who are at the back of the new institution by becoming regular patrons of the theater. The prices of admission have not been decided upon.

Evart Emerson Overton

EVART EMERSON OVERTON, a prominent Vitagraph player, is a direct lineal descendant of the late Lord Overton and next in line for the title on account of the recent death of the peer. Although Mr. Overton's ancestors were English, he is thoroughly American, having been born in Osborne, Ohio, August 5, 1889; his father, John French Overton, was born in Christianburg, Ohio, and his mother, who, before her marriage was Charlotte Light, near Dayton, Ohio.

Evart Emerson Overton.

Mr. Overton received his early education in the public schools of Osborne, graduating from the high school to enter the Ohio State University at Columbus. During his college career, he was a prominent member of the Glee Club. The possession of a singing voice of unusual timbre and glimpses of stage life while on short tours with the glee club, shaped the course of his future life. The stage beckoned and on his nineteenth birthday. he decided to adopt a professional career. Immediate success attended Mr. Overton's efforts in the musical comedy field and succeeding engagements included parts in "The Skylark," "Fifty Miles From Boston" and the distinction of being featured in some of the best known musical acts in vaudeville.

During the time Mr. Overton was appearing in the two-a-day houses he became interested in the writing of motion picture scenarios and it was the acceptance of one of his manuscripts and the suggestion he play the lead in his own story that gave him his first introduction to the mysteries of posing before the camera for the silent drama. In February 1915, Mr. Overton joined the Vitagraph Company and has not been idle a day since, playing opposite Lillian Walker in nearly all of her most recent successes. A few of the most prominent Vitagraph Life Portrayals in which he has appeared include "Playing the Game," "The Silent W," "To Save Him For His Wife," "Crooky Scruggs," "The Little Doll's Dress-Maker" and others.

NEW MEN WITH UNITED.

A. F. Beck, formerly manager of the St. Louis and Kansas City Exchanges of the Universal, and well known throughout the United States in film circles as a motion picture expert of exceptional ability, has left St. Louis to take up the duties of Orrin S. Goan, in the central offices of the United Film Service, New York City.

Mr. Beck is a practical motion picture man, having had valuable experience in all departments of the business. He is one of the pioneer film men of the country and his wide acquaintance with exchange and theater conditions throughout the world is a valuable asset to the United Service.

The management of the Buffalo office of the United has been placed in the capable hands of G. H. Christoffers, formerly with the Hite enterprises in Buffalo and more recently a field worker for the World Film Corporation. Mr. Christoffers is a film man of long standing in his territory, where he is widely known to theater managers, and brings to the United Film Service a store of business ability which promises well for the Buffalo office of that company.

W. R. SCATES IN NEW YORK.

W. R. Scates, central division manager of the World Film Corporation, is in New York, from Chicago, where he makes his headquarters. Mr. Scates reports that World Film features in his territory are enlisting increasing patronage at the hands of exhibitors and the public. He is one of those men who have a practical grip of the film business and knows its needs. Scates has an engaging personality which inspires confidence among those with whom he comes in contact.

British Notes.

A COUPLE of interesting cases affecting the legal status of moving pictures have passed through the courts during the past two weeks. Last year I drew attention in these notes to a peculiar outburst by a London evening newspaper advising the public not to attend certain moving picture theaters on account of an hostile foreign element being represented in their ownership. This had its sequel yesterday (May 17) in the King's Bench division when the newspaper in question "The Evening News" was ordered to pay nominal damages of one farthing to the London and Provincial Electric Theaters Limited. In the Court of Appeal last week a former judgment against a film-producing firm was reversed. Some time ago Sir Charles Wyndham purchased the performing rights of a Continental comedy called "The Blue Mouse" which was subsequently staged in London. When the kinematographic firm of Hubsch & Co. contemplated reproducing the play for the screen Sir Charles took the matter to Court and was successful in obtaining an injunction prohibiting reproduction, his claim being that the performing rights included rights of usual representation. This prohibition was removed, the contention of the judges being that the rights to produce a play on the spoken stage is distinct and separate from the rights to produce a play on the screen.

The Hepworth Company have recently inaugurated a special publicity department to advertise the products of the Walton studio and at the present moment it is fulfilling quite a patriotic purpose. The Hepworth Company are still at work upon "The Man Who Stayed At Home," a naval drama from the Royalty theater, London, and which, by the way, promises to make an unusually good screen story. Apart from the publicity accorded to the subject by virtue of its stage production and through its topicality the producers are running a literary version as a serial in a daily newspaper along with extensive newspaper and poster advertising. And all this before the release date has been announcd.

The name of William Friese-Greene does not appear to be as widely known as it deserves in the moving picture industry. Indeed there are not a few magnates of the film trade on this side who with a puzzled air would ask who Mr. Friese-Greene was. The rapid advance of a cult or a science often obscures its beginnings and the exacting demands of present day business, when the commercial world concentrates only upon the present and the future, do not stimulate deep retrospection. But something occurred last week that may bring again the name of Friese-Greene into photographic prominence. It was the initial presentation by Friese-Greene, Jr., of a new process of natural color photography, given at the Shaftesbury Pavilion. Those Americans—and there must be thousands—who remember Thos. A. Edison's early experiments with the kinetoscope may best remember Wm. Friese-Greene as his British contemporary, who demonstrated a projector of a similar type at a photographic convention held at Chester in the eighties. Mr. Claud Friese-Greene, his son, has now entered the arena with a new color process which achieved much upon its first exhibition, but which promises infinitely more. The great commending feature is the absence of screens, that is to say color screens, for the lens of the projector or lantern. No special apparatus or filament of any kind is required for the ordinary projector, nor is any special illuminating installation necessary. The colors are embodied upon the film so that their projection does not differ in the slightest particular from the ordinary monochrome subject. The specimen demonstration given on Thursday attracted a number of people interested in color photography apart from a good trade attendance, and although most of the pictures shown were restricted to simple sketches of still life and set tableaux containing no rapid movements, they were quite sufficient to prove the latitude and scope of the process. If one should criticise, it may be pointed out that the indistinct flash of color, also associated with rapid movements in other color processes, was distinctly noticeable in some of the images projected, but compared with one much-heralded process it is comparatively free from flicker. With a little more attention to the question of color definition we may reasonably expect Mr. Friese-Greene's process to prove an acceptable solution to the color-picture problem.

The numerous and varied applications of the motion picture to the abnormal situations created this country consequent upon the war would make a volume of interesting records. Every day sees some new development either in the commercial pursuit of the exhibiting profession or upon the part of public-minded individuals engaged in recruiting new troops and speeding up the manufacture of war munitions. Idlers in government workshops are severely dealt with today, and to mitigate time-wasting one of the largest industrial concerns on the Admiralty list adopted the effective expedient of timing the activities of their many departments by means of the motion picture camera. The task of recording the motions of the work people kept six camera men busy for three weeks. The war has again been the means of bringing back temporary prosperity to that much maligned institution, the "penny gaff" of the fair ground. The concentration of large numbers of troops in training in different centers has proved a golden opportunity to the itinerant exhibitor—that pioneer of motography who travels from town to town with his portable tent. Somewhere near to each of the three dozen military camps in England are to be found one or two of these, prospering in their new-found sphere. Before the war the "legitimate" picture theater had practically ousted its traveling countertype with stentorian organ and an exuberance of white and gilt, but to-day the traveling showman is holding his own with the best stationary exhibition.

Reeva Greenwood Joins "Lariat"

IT was "The Road of Happiness," in which Reeva Greenwood, the new leading lady for the Lariat pictures on the United Program, played with William T. Hodge that pointed her way to a successful and recognized career in motion pictures. She had already had a position such as comes only to those whose talents have attracted widespread notice on the legitimate stage, having been the hit of numerous Broadway productions, including "Excuse Me," Savage's well-remembered play; in fact, it had been the unusual quality of her work in that success which had drawn the attention of Mr. Hodge to her.

Reeva Greenwood.

After her season with Mr. Hodge, Miss Greenwood joined the silent drama, entering into a contract with the Vitagraph Company, which was relinquished some time later when she joined Kalem.

In her new position at the picturesque Garden of the Gods Studio at Colorado Springs, she will appear in a series of high-class western pictures, for which her early athletic training especially fits her. William V. Mong, scenario editor for the United, is writing a group of romantic dramas in which Miss Greenwood will play opposite Walter Fishter, the new leading juvenile at the western studio.

SEGAL IN EQUITABLE.

H. G. Segal, who has been manager of the New York office of the World Film Corporation, and Henry Randel, who was affiliated with the Shuberts for the past few years, have organized the Equitable Film Co., with offices in the Fitzgerald Building, 1482 Broadway, New York.

The company has some very prominent men interested in it, and further announcements of their policy will be made in the near future.

CHARLES WEST WITH MAJESTIC.

Charles West makes his initial appearance with the Griffith forces in a two-reel Majestic melodrama, "The Woman from Warren." Mr. West, who has played more villains on the screen than any other actor on the legitimate stage, was associated with Mr. Griffith in the days when both were making a start in the film world.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

A NUMBER of photoplay actors, congregated in social intercourse at a rendezvous frequented only by people engaged in their line of work, drifted into a discussion of the pleasant and unpleasant features of studio life. With few exceptions they were men who had the experience of professional stage work and the discussion naturally led to a comparison of life upon the stage with that of the studio. Strong was the feeling manifested by all of them in loyalty to the "true art," as some of them termed the work upon the stage, yet almost to a man they were equally decisive in commendation of the studios. This may be a surprise to a great many, particularly those who are not connected with either theatrical sphere, as it is generally supposed that the people who began their careers on the professional stage look upon motion pictures as a bane to their professional existence.

From the sentiments expressed at the gathering referred to it is a certainty that the repulsion so strongly manifested toward motion pictures by the professionals is almost dispelled. Actors and actresses of but meagre standing in the profession only a few years ago looked upon overtures to get them to play parts in film productions with haughty disdain. Many of the actors looked upon the offers as gross insults and threatened those making them with bodily harm. The late William V. Ranous, one of the pioneer directors in the American motion picture producing field, often told of his first experience. He was not satisfied with the limited professional and the amateur talent he had at hand for a certain production. There were at least two parts he wanted to place in the hands of professionals more suited to his tastes from the standpoint of ability and type. Knowing the feeling of professionals against the moving pictures at that time he hesitated about calling at any of the regular agencies or any of the places frequented by them. He surmised, and correctly too, that the nature of his business might lead to an unpleasant reception. Advertising he considered too slow. It would not bring replies quick enough to let him get the work under way on schedule time. The start was to be made on the day following the night on which the occurrence he told of took place. Moreover, he felt that the particular people he had in mind would not pay attention to the advertisement. Finally Mr. Ranous concluded to become a scout, and along the Rialto and White Way he started.

"It was a period when most of the regular theatrical companies had been filled," Mr. Ranous said in speaking of one of his experiences, "but I was convinced that there was, as there has always been, and over-supply of talent, and I went out with the hope that I would find not only the people I wanted, but those of whose ability I had personal knowledge through my associations with them upon the stage. I was also convinced that by personal approach I could see people who would be adverse to having others of the profession know that they would even entertain the thought of posing in the mute plays. You know even adversities to the point of starvation will make hardly a dent in the pride of the real professional actor. During my stroll that evening I met many players with whom I had been associated for years and we greeted each other most cordially, but the instant I made known my errand they made me feel like an apostate. But up to this time the effect upon me had been produced only by severe, cold stares, or haughty rejection. Some of them advised me to not be a fool and to give up the moving picture work. 'Bill,' said one of them, 'you have made an enviable reputation on the stage and it grieves me to see a man of your calibre and standing commit suicide by associating himself with troupes of manikins.' The sincerity of these good friends of mine almost brought me to a state of repentance, but I fought off the influence and continued my quest for 'leads.' At last I found one of my ideals, a trouper of the old school who had played upon the same stages with me season after season."

"My ideal was resting against an electric light post at a street corner. His appearance indicated that he had not recently been navigating in the channels of prosperity. As I approached him I imagined I could hear his heartfelt expression of gratitude for my generous offer. With undisguised exultation I almost rushed to him with extended hand for greeting and he responded likewise. 'Hello, Jack, old chap!' 'God bless you Bill, how are you? An angel must have sent you. I need you badly,' responded my old roadmate. He then told me he was 'up against it.' Through no fault of his own he had not been able to connect with a company and attributed the failure to an excess of talent at the disposal of the managers. I was prompt in sympathizing with him and lost no time in divulging the plan I had for presenting a new field for him."

"Jack was one of the best pals I ever had on the stage. We were loyal friends professionally and socially—up to the time I made the offer, and never after—so far as he was concerned. With a roar he sprang towards me and would have knocked me down had I not been alert enough to dodge the blow. 'What!' he shouted. 'You, Bill Ranous, my companion for years, come to me with such a monstrous proposition! Have you become bereft of reason? Away from my sight, you traitor to your profession.' I withdrew as gracefully as possible and declared the search off. One of the leads in the picture I played myself. The other I filled the best I could. In later years I had occasion to congratulate myself that I should have seen better into the future of the moving picture business than those who had so misguidedly ostracized me."

One of the professionals who had listened to the story credited to Mr. Ranous said he knew of many similar occurrences, but he said conditions at that time justified the sentiments of the professionals. They did not see the possibilities of the moving pictures in any but a professional light. They never dreamed that the industry and its environments would advance and raise in standard to what it is today. They had no fear that the pictures might supplant the legitimate to the extent that it has. They had, first, an abhorrence against giving up the histrionic art that had been the pride of the players and playgoers for so many generations and, secondly, they feared the detrimental effect it might have upon their standing with managers if they took part in moving picture productions. It is most excusable that they did not foresee that many leading picture players are receiving today far better salaries than they did when on the legitimate stage and did not foresee that the leading managers would themselves become owners of or prominent stock members in motion picture producing studios and rental agencies.

Considering the gigantic strides the photoplay business has made, others taking part in the discussion contended, the change of front shown by the professional stage people toward the pictures should not occasion surprise. It is not a wiping out of a venomous spirit, but a clarifying of the vision. Scores of professionals regret today that they did not cast their lot with the motion pictures long ago. The class distinction that was once made by the professionals against the picture players has disappeared. Recognition is now mutual. Associations are on the same plane. Professionals who have been fortunate enough to acquire positions in "stock" now unhesitatingly tell their friends of it. Those who are what is called "jobbing," or doing extra work, are more reluctant with their frankness, but as soon as they get upon the regular pay roll the glad rag is flung to the breeze with the greatest pride.

"Yes," said another of the gathering, "and I have yet to meet the professional connected with a job of the average scale who would swap it for a return to stage, and I can name headliners who have told me that. Stage life has many of the favorable features that studio life has, but it has many more of the unsatisfactory features."

* * *

One point that was not touched upon at the gathering is that since the manifestation of a change of heart by the professionals toward the motion pictures there has been a perceptible diminishment in the strength of forces arrayed against the industry. The censorship agitations in many prominent sections of the country indicate this, although some may claim it is a mere coincidence.

MOTION PICTURE FILM THE ONLY WORLD STANDARD.

In an address delivered before the University Club, Washington, D. C., C. Francis Jenkins stated: "The motion picture ribbon is the only unit that is standard in every country. Railway gauges, for example, vary in different countries, units of value, volume, weight, and of length differ, but the motion picture film is the same the world over."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Steve Has an Idea.

NOTHING in the above line is to be taken as an indication that this is the first idea Steve ever had. To the contrary. This is Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., and he has contributed a lot of ideas, but this one comes rather late. He writes that he likes to keep a file of Advertising for Exhibitors and the Projection department (F. H. R. please note that we are not sore on him for recent remarks). Steve files the entire paper, but he likes these two departments where he can get at them in a hurry without having to turn so many pages, and so he cuts the pages out and puts them into a loose leaf binder. The paper is apt to tear so he uses the little cloth washers made for the purpose. It makes a very handy volume. We have been using loose leaf scrap books for longer than this department has been running, but we paste the department onto the regular sheets and at the end of each year have the sheets bound up. The binding costs about what a new loose leaf binder will and has the advantage of permanency of form. Steve says the local druggist has these binders in stock and that he will forward a binder and a box of the washers for one dollar. Most exhibitors will find it easy to either buy or order a binder from their local stationer or druggist. For the washers order Denison's Cloth Patches, gummed, number six. It is almost impossible to tear out a loose leaf so reinforced.

Steve sends in a booklet of heralds similar to the one invented by Burr Swann. His is in gold on a greenish grey for cover. Hold it in some lights and it is almost impossible to read or even see the lettering. If you want to use bronze powder, do not use gold unless you are certain that the metal will show up well. Better use red or green than gold or silver. Better still, try getting an ink that will work on just that stock. Try the "label gloss," "cover" or "poster" inks and see what you get. For that matter there is a cover gold that will print on the cover and stick up. It is not as bright as pounced gold, but it will work better and print direct. But when you get right down to it, a good gloss ink is better, ninety nine times out of a hundred, than even a good job of gold work, and Steve paid a right price for a right job, too. It is not that the work is cheap, but it is ineffective. He speaks of repeating the stunt presently. If he will work a cover red in place of the gold, people will be able to see that there is printing on the cover. The issue costs him two and a half cents apiece, with five heralds, the issues being tied in with a gay yellow ribbon.

And perhaps this will interest some now-and-then readers—also that envious Brother Richardson:

> I was talking to a man the other day who was wanting a job as manager of a picture house. He claimed to be an old hand at the business. I asked him if he ever sent in any stuff for your department, and he said no, that he had never even read it—Nuff Said—I would not want him to manage a house for me. Well go over the book and let me hear how you like it as soon as you can get it in the World.

From this you can gather, perhaps, that Steve is looking for a manager. But he wants a man who really can manage and who can point to past performances.

Finds Programs Best.

J. F. Parks, of the Morris Grand Theater, Hot Springs, S. D., writes that he finds programs best. His letter follows:

> I am enclosing herewith, a little program that I get out each week which I mail to about 250 of my patrons, besides distributing a bunch of them the first night.
> At the same time I am mailing these programs, I also enclose one of the Heralds for my Friday night feature.
> I find by putting one of these little programs in the houses of my patrons, is more effective as an advertising medium, than the old way of distributing them at each performance.
> I am a new man at the picture business and have it all to learn and I will appreciate very much your expert opinion on the makeup of the program, and any ideas you may do me the favor to give me in the way of improvement.
> I enjoy reading your comments on matters of this character in each issue of your interesting publication and think you are doing a great work in elevating and improving the picture show business.

It stands to reason that a program actually in the home does greater good than one that merely may be taken there. Some patrons will pick up a program, read it and drop it on the floor or on the street. If it comes to the home it is more apt to be put in some place for future consultation. To this end many exhibitors offer some inducement to the patron to hold the program, making it good for a free admission to the Saturday matinee or some such thing. This is one reason why the door knob is useful. They are provided with a loop by which they may be hung up inside the house as well as on the door knob.

Mr. Parks' issue is a four page three by six inches. The front carries the program in brief, this being amplified on the inside pages. The back page carries three advertisements. Beyond dating the days, few changes can be suggested for the inside. It might be well to use a type of the same face but two points larger for the features, but the program looks well as it is. On the front, if the printer has the proper type, the titles in the condensed program should be printed in full face upper and lower case instead of roman. In the heading the word program should not be repeated. It now reads:

PROGRAM

Program for Week of April 26th, 1915.

The program should be run but once and the second line should read "Monday, April 26 to Saturday, May 1." or merely "April 26th to May 1st."

But the excellence of the setting is nullified by the choice of stock, a deep brown card that seems to swallow up the black ink. The program may be read only with an effort, and it should never be a labor to read an advertisement. Change should be made to white or light tinted stock, a light green printed in a silk green or a light blue, a very light blue, printed in royal blue.

The program, in particular, should be eye-pleasing. It works for a whole week. If your day bill is ineffective, you lose only for the day, but in getting out the weekly program, particularly one where there is no general reading, every effort should be made to attract the eye, rather than to repel it as it stands for a week.

If we had the program we would order the printer to box in the days for the front page with two point rule. Here dating each day is not so important, and so boxing can be done once and kept standing. Then we would put the date line just above this and above that a catchline, getting, say,

The Extra Specials FOR
April 26th to May 1st.

MONDAY—Francis X. Bushman and Edna Mayo in "Stars in Their Courses Change."
IN TWO PARTS—ESSANAY.

This would improve the appearance of the front and very slightly increase the cost. Then we would get a really pretty face for the headline. At present a condensed letter has to be used to get "The Morris Grand" in one two and a quarter inch line, twenty-four point. By using a ten-point "The" above, the other two words can be gotten into a line in an extended letter that will stand out better. The cut-off rule below this should be taken out to let the management and town appear in the same box, a second cut-off being retained, but this to go just above the line "The Extra Specials." This, we think, will give a better display and improve the appearance fully a hundred per cent. If Mr. Parks tries it we will appreciate a copy. We hope he sends in anyhow. Save in the matter of stock his first issue is a good one. And the text shows that he keeps posted on the pictures he is going to run, instance this copy:

> WEDNESDAY
> The Vitagraph presents another of its Broadway Star Features in three parts,
> "The Silent Plea"
> This picture was exhibited before the New York Legislators in the Assembly Chambers at Albany, as a dramatic appeal for the widowed Mother's allowance bill, in co-operation with Sophie Irene Loeb, Member of the New York State Commission for Relief of Widowed Mothers, Featuring Edith Storey, Harry Morey and Donald Hall.

This will make business where "Another Great Vitagraph" would not pull an extra ten cent piece.

A Full Form Letter.

The manager of the Kansas City branch of the Pathe Freres exchanges sends in a form letter sent out from the De Luxe theater, Hutchinson, Kansas, with the suggestion that a form letter that is addressed to each recipient and signed in ink is somewhat novel. It is, particularly when it would seem that each letter was an original and not a printed form, although it is print, as the figures on the fill-in do not match those in the body of the letter. It is about the only thing that shows the letter to be printed, for the letter has light and heavy strokes and all the other marks of hand work. It's one of the most deceptive form letters that has come in in a very long time. Mr. Jameyson suggests that it was not Fred Savage, but Mrs. Savage, who had charge of the job, since she even signs the letter for him. We'll bet he's jealous to say a thing like that, and it's worth being jealous about.

Almost too Much.

Constantly we preach the use of reading matter to pay the recipient for reading a program. Now we must take the other tack for a moment in discussing the Plaza Theater Magazine, of Troy, N. Y. E. O. Weinberg has gotten out a miniature magazine of sixteen 5 by 6¾ pages. The front is a cut and the back page gives the program for the week. Most of the rest is pure reading matter. Some of it is not well chosen, for instance, a write up of "A Jitney Elopement" when the program announces "By the Sea," concerning which nothing whatever is said. Something more than four pages are taken up with a reprint from a picture magazine. It is good stuff, but rather too long for program use. The Chaplin page story is cut at the end of the page without bringing the story to a conclusion.

Mr. Weinberg shows the right spirit, but he needs to work over his format. He wants to figure out that he is entitled to some advertising, say four pages out of the sixteen. At that he can cheat a little. The back page should be a display advertisement for one or two coming features. These are best framed with the day and date, the title in about eighteen point and four to eight ten point lines telling of the film, not the story of the release, but a story about the release. Then he can take either page three or pages eight and nine for his program. If the former, he should date all the days and run the title in ten point bold and the rest of that line and one more in roman with names in italic. The line should go across the page instead of being set in a rather stingy twelve em line. The regular thirteen em line is good for the general text, but the program should be set to wide measure. If the two pages are used, the two should be connected by being boxed in with three point straight across and down the outside margins, with a one point rule between the two pages on the centre line. This should divide the space given to film announcement but general lines can run in heavy type clear across the two pages at the top and bottom, either balanced lines or a little heavier display at the top. In the reading text there should be a house paragraph to every three or four general items and a page should be used for an editorial chat about the house, its coming features and past successes.

Were we the managing editor of the publication, we think we would use pages fourteen and twelve for trade advertisements and make the sheet self supporting Get the issue into the factories and foundries and get the class of advertising that will appeal to such readers and the sheet might show a profit and still be valuable to the reader and the management alike.

Care should be taken in selecting the items. The idea is not to fill pages with type but to fill with interesting items. If film stories are used have them stories of current subjects and state that they will be shown in the theater on a specified day.

The house runs licensed service, but of twenty-eight items only eleven relate to those companies and its players. The proportion should be two items about the house service people to one of the other services.

If Mr. Weinberg will work along these lines he'll have a pulling publication. He asks brother exhibitors to exchange. Will some of you please him help out? We wish Mr. Rhodes would send one of his novel folders.

Could Be Better.

The Queen theater, Tyler, Texas, sends in a program for comment. It is a vest pocket 3 by 3¾. It has six advertisements on that small front page with the house card choking to death and not able to cry for help. There are six advertisements and three house cards on the back page. Inside there are two line advertisements top and bottom with the program three days to a page. The printer has quite a lot of type faces and he used them all on this one job, showing six or seven kinds and sizes of type in 29 lines. To help along he seems to have used the wrong ink for the paper and then he got a bad impression and the top is heavy and the bottom so light it can scarcely be read. The printer has done his durndest in about every way he knew how. In a four line box he uses three different kinds of rule, one, two and three point, and because he is printing on two pages he does not carry the rule work across to make a complete box but has a gap of three picas.

The stock is good quality paper where even a cheap card would have been better. It is a blueish tint that might have been intended to be a gray, about as negative as the type setting.

The theater should either throw out most of the trade advertisements or frame the front page in three point rule that meets at the corners. Then the manager should hunt up some printer who will get the program proper in type that matches, one size for titles, one for text and an Italic for names. Copy should be made uniform. Here the Monday program merely anounces an Ade fable and then a Kalem Feature, "The Tragedy of Bear Mountain." In this the Kalem Feature is set in Italic and the title in Roman. On Tuesday the name of the player is set in Italic, the title in Roman and no maker is given, though it is another Kalem. On Friday Biograph is set in twelve point but Selig and Vitagraph in an eight and without titles.

Copy should be written to give uniform appearance to the announcement. The best form is to give the title in Bold upper and lower case, preferably bold italic, the text in Roman and the names of players in lightline italic. The days should be dated. It should never be necessary to search the microscopic front page card for the date.

It would be well did the Queen find another printer, if there is one in town, or else buy this man a book on typesetting and makeup. Surely even a small shop should have seventeen inches of brass rule of one size and be able to get it to meet at the corners.

Simple.

An exhibitor complains that many of the companies now send out press sheets so large that they cannot be handled well, it being necessary to open out perhaps a dozen sheets, each folded several times, before the desired material is located. It is a simple matter to get some of the old-fashioned newspaper files such as were used in hotel reading rooms in times gone by. If these are not to be had take two pieces of flat stick, say one inch by one-half, and a little longer than the matter to be filed. Drive two-inch nails in one part six inches apart and drill holes in the other stick to correspond. The holes should be about twice the diameter of the nails. Set a screw eye in each end of both sticks. Stab the nails through the sheets, tie one stick on top of the other by string through the screw eyes and hang up on the wall.

Tells It All.

J. G. Hodgson, Jr., of the Oak Park theater, Oak Park, Ill., gets out a sixteen pages and cover program, three by five inches, for two weeks at a time. The cover is an orange shade that might be ugly if it were not printed in just the proper shade of brown, almost a black, the design being embossed, evidently in quantities, the date and serial number being added as printed up. The inside cover page carries this information:

OAK PARK THEATRE
INFORMATION COLUMN
J. G. Hodgson, Jr., Manager

ADDRESS—Wisconsin Ave., one block south of C. & N. W. Ry., and Oak Park "L," Oak Park, Ill.

Evening Prices—10, 15 and 20 cents. Children 10 cents if accompanied by parents.

Matinees—Every day except Sunday at 2:30. All seats 10 cents.

Reservations—Seats reserved only for 7:30 show. On sale one week in advance, or regular daily and weekly reservations may be made. Phone numbers: Oak Park 161 Maywood 89. No toll from Maywood.

Four New Shows each week, changing Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday, except for special features.

Evening—Continuous beginning at 7:30. Two complete shows. Second show begins at 9:00 o'clock.

Come anytime and stay as long as you please.

Children may attend the Oak Park Theater with perfect safety, as there are no stairs and all exits are on ground level on three sides.

The program runs a page to the change. Where space permits there is a small and unobtrusive advertisement. Linear rule is used instead of the solid face, permitting the use of a full six point without the blackness of a two point solid face. The days are dated, but are printed in Old English, which is the one thing we do not like about the job. This is one of the places where clearness is most desirable. Apart from this it is one of the best program examples we have seen in a long time. Using the Paramount program they can print two weeks at a time and divide the cost by two.

They also send a two page advertisement from the local "society" paper with this advertisement:

WEDNESDAY,
April 28
NOTICE!

Rejected by Oak Park Censors, the masterpiece as advertised in Photogram for this day.
The local censors also objected to "THE OUTCAST" shown last Wednesday. If you wish to voice your opinion for or against, address letter to OAK PARK THEATER, 120 Wisconsin Avenue, Oak Park, Ill.

SIGN YOUR NAME.

That is one way to waken people to a realization of the censorship. The patrons saw a protested film. What did they think of it? Let them do the kicking and they probably will if they are anything like a Chicago writer who now and then goes to Milwaukee to see what the shreds he has seen in Chicago really look like when presented in full.

Are you doing anything about the censorship? There are two things you can and should do. You can refuse to book the stuff that frankly caters to morbid tastes and you can conduct a campaign of education. Do it and do it now before it is too late.

Catchlines.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

From the Prize Winner.

FIRST and foremost Roy L. McCardell is a humorist. Note the picture of himself and his family in front of their Santa Barbara bungalow where the creator of Mr. and Mrs. Jarr is working on the script of the new American Serial and the fiction form of the story that will be syndicated at the same time. And what do you suppose is the name of the cottage that houses the man with two grown up daughters It's Honeymoon Lodge. We suppose that if Roy, like Homer Croy, had led a blushing bride to the western coast he would have picked out Bachelor's Hall or Spinster's Delight or something like that, but having been married and lived long and happily ever since, he picks out a place with a name like that, and the Lodge is just the sort of bower that would tickle honeymooners to death. But this is not to show where he lives, but what he thinks, and he writes that there is to be a sequel to The Diamond from the Sky for which another prize will be offered. He says:

> By the time you receive this the announcements will be out that I was the fortunate contestant among over 19,000 in The Chicago Tribune, New York Globe, North American Film Corporation $19,000 scenario contest. It is all the more gratifying that this contest, like the Sunday Telegraph-Flamingo Film comedy scenario contest, which I also won, was an anonymous competition. That is, the names of the authors were not known to the judges. When the envelopes containing the authors' names were opened and it was found that I was the winner, I was asked to write the full working scenario for the thirty chapters of two-reels each, which my serial will run. The allied producers of "The Diamond From the Sky" are offering an aditional prize of $10,000 to any man, woman or child, who will suggest a sequel to it. I hope all your readers and pupils will get busy on this.
> As one of your post graduate pupils I wish to attest the benefit I have received from taking a course of mental treatment for some four or five years past from old Dr. Sargent, the eminent moving picture practitioner and screen specialist.
> I was in The Sun-Vitagraph contest with a five-reel drama, "The Money Mill." It did not win first, second or third money, but was accepted for purchase by The Vitagraph. I withdrew it however, rewrote and turned it in again. It pleased Commodore Blackton very much in its revised shape, and he paid me a very good price for it and I hope to see "The Money Mill" as a Broadway Star Feature at The Vitagraph Theater when I get back to New York in August or September.
> I think winning two big contests out of three, and getting an acceptance at good money for my entry in the third contest, from the company concerned in this third contest, entitles me to make a few remarks on scenario writing and moving picture companies:
>
> First, I say again that there are not ten moving picture companies that are wholly on the level in the mater of buying moving picture scenarios. They falter, palter and four-flush for the most part.
> Second, the Selig-Polyscope Co., The Vitagraph Co., The American and The Majestic-Reliance companies are the companies who have done and are doing the most to encourage writers who can write, to devote their attention to moving picture play writing.
> Third, I have been glad to note a great change of heart among moving picture manufacturers in the past six months. They are beginning to realize that even the best directors working with the best actors, must have a good plot carefully worked out in action and characterization, or else they cannot get good pictures with sincere stories.

In saying that there are but four companies interested in the advancement of stories. Mr. McCardell speaks from his personal experience. The number is larger, but there are still comparatively few makers of motion picture fiction who realize the value of the play itself and the importance of having the very best stories as a foundation on which their directors are to build. A director can and often does make an acceptable production of an unworthy story, but it is as foolish to expect a director to be also an author as it would be to demand that the carpenter who built a house should install the plumbing and then paint and plaster the structure. The motion picture should be the joint product of specialists, not the work of a jack of all trades. Some day the manufacturers generally will realize that they need to give more attention to their stuff, that a fifteen hundred dollar star in a home-made script is a wasteful extravagance, and then we shall have better pictures.

It is not so much a matter of paying more money; though as a matter of course the better workmen will demand better pay. If it were merely a question of paying one hundred dollars or more for manuscript, the proposition would be a simple one. But there is a graver aspect to the case than that. The very men who can write the best picture plays are not being encouraged. The underpaid beginner and the overpaid advertised star are alternately employed, but nothing is being done to build up the ranks of trained writers for the film; men and women who are neither famous authors nor beginners, but who can write sound plots and develop them into proper action. These have been jumped over in the rapid passage from the $25 script to that for which ten times as much is paid. Yet these are they who will some day supply the bulk of the manuscript for the better plays, men who are competent to plot intelligently and plot for pictures intelligently.

Emmett Campbell Hall, for instance, never enjoyed a great reputation as a magazine or novel author, though his name was becoming known. He never took a personal interest in the six best sellers. And yet we'll be willing to wager that Mr. Hall can write a better film play than G. Bernard Shaw. Louis Reeves Harrison enjoyed a literary reputation, but it was not until he came over to the pictures that he proved his worth as a fiction writer. Today no novelist can write a film story such as he can. It is not profitable to pay an exorbitant price to a literary star. It is far better to encourage good workmen in the magazine field to study the screen. At the present time only Bannister Merwin seems to be engaged in this task.

It might be argued that Mr. McCardell is a widely known humorist and is a prize winner, but we do not know of a single instance, save in the production of the Jarr Family, that his sales have been out of the ordinary in the matter of payment. He does not get several thousand dollars and a black eye for a single script. He studies his market, produces a good product and takes a reasonable sum for his wares. Even now, six years after the demand for real stories as replacing the studio stuff, the real photoplay author has not been developed except sporadically, and he will not be until manufacturers come to realize what fools they are in literary matters and are willing to concede that their editors, even though they are merely employees, are men in whose judgment greater reliance should be placed than in the manufacturer's untrained judgment.

When manufacturers not only pay good money for editors, but pick the right sort of men and defer to their judgment, then we shall see the commencement of the establishment of a school of photoplay fiction, but not until then.

There's a Moral.

A recent letter starts off:

> Two years ago, when I first discovered your department in the Moving Picture World, the first article that struck my eye read in part as follows: "I am a minster. I sold the first four scripts I wrote." That's all I read. He may have gone on to say he never sold another—but I had made a discovery. A fortune awaited the picking. * * * Later I learned that scenario writing demands hard work and earnest study and that the reward is frequently heart breaking disappointments, always a bitter pill to the novice. I quit several times, but something about it lures me back.

And in the meantime the minister who started this writer on his career didn't quit. He, too, had his disappointments and his heartbreaks, and he got discouraged and ALMOST ready to quit, but he never did quit; he kept on plugging and studying and only the other day we announced his appointment as script editor for the Gaumont company.

Another Angle.

The newest kink in the prize stuff is turned up in connection with a magazine contest. The contest is over and the prize play has been produced and released and yet the editor still writes one entrant that he is trying to sell the play for her. That is to say it is what he wrote before he stopped replying to letters.

Found Himself.

Here is another pair of contributions to the human document docket. Some readers have said they don't like documents, but the experiences of those who have found themselves are helpful to those who are still struggling. One is from a southerner who was damned by a too early success but who did not let it spoil his chances. He writes:

> My experience was a little different from the many others in this way; I sold the first photoplay I ever wrote. This was a one reel story of the North Carolina Mountains, first written under the title, "Love, Law and A Girl." The company it was first sent to returned it, and I sat down and wrote it over again, changing the title to "Two Girls of the Hills;" under this title it went to about six companies and then stayed with the seventh. I received $25.00 for it and had a taste of happiness that is almost "Heavenly." Naturally I was somewhat intoxicated with my seeming success, and immediately dashed off everything that came into my head, divided it into sections, numbered these and called them "scenes;" they all came back!!! Discouraged I rested up and vowed I'd never write again, but it was no use, I started in again, beginning with a two reeler, which sold to the first company it went to. More intoxication, more dashed off "stuff" and more returned manuscripts. Funny how we poor mortals have to be knocked down so many times before we take the "hint." I started in all over again; I wrote only after I had worked out a story from beginning to end, almost had every scene fixed in my head before I took up pen or pencil. The result; well, I have sold one play a month since December, and have some out now that I think are not returning. However, since December I have written about fifteen and feel greatly encouraged, much delighted, and exceedingly thankful that I have averaged one a month, for I have done better than many, even if much worse than lots.
> However, I haven't escaped the "School of Photoplay Writing," but I looked into their offers long enough to learn this lesson much better than any lesson they could send me on a little yellow pamphlet. That, by watching the screen, getting a "form," finding a good plot, and using concentration one can learn more about writing scenarios, than they could learn in one million years, at a million a year from all the photoplay writing schools on the face of the earth.

The other letter is from an old showman, who has reached the point where he realizes what he is up against. He says:

> I asked myself if I had any right in the game. After thinking the matter over I got a typewriter and started in. I did not know any better than to send my first effort to one of the studios. They did not steal it (no Sir, honest to goodness they did not), just sent it back to me—the best thing that could happen to a beginner.
> While I think of it, I want to pass this idea along to the beginner, it is this:—I have a complete file of the Moving Picture World, commencing April 4-1914 up to May 1-1915 and strange as it may sound to some, I by digging find an answer to all the questions that are likely to come to the beginner (at least them that came to me).
> I have got my shoebox nearly full. One part is the morgue (in need of formaldehyde), the second part is the mothball, in the third part I have twelve that I hope some day to get in proper shape to send out.
> All points considered I feel that I have been treated nicely by the editors, and at present writing have four under consideration, hope to be able some day to send them some good stuff.
> One more say and then I quit for this time, every time you apply the mustard draft to me I think of the pictures on pages 199-200 and 201 in the Moving Picture World under date of July 11, 1914, then go to work and dig the harder.

We Pass.

Walter W. Baker asks:

> Why is it that the average author of photoplay can think out astonishingly good plots by the simple expedient of allowing a character to fall asleep and dream, and yet fails dismally when he tries to harness his story in the traces of wideawake plot.
> How many good dream dramas have you not seen that, clipped of the "It was only a dream" fore and aft scenes, would yet have left a solid that would stand the test of probability. And by the same token, why is it that these dream plays knuckle right down to business and have practically no water to be squeezed out—no comings and goings?
> It is, as you say, painful and harrowing to learn that it was "only a dream" except, perhaps, in such a rare case as the Pathe's "The Warning." Yet, there is a lesson here somewhere.

Echo why; also is it? We have never noticed that "it was a dream" stuff was more compact than other types. We have noticed that the expedient is resorted to to cover anything that could not possibly be passed in any other way. If it is the case in the dream dramas that Mr. Baker has seen and we have not that there is more solid meat, it is probably because the author, not having to make his story probable, is not unduly careful to write in a lot of useless matter to gain the semblance of probability.

In other words, some authors who are not able to keep their stuff both logical and compact, waste their time over the logic to the detriment of the movement of their story. Relieved of the necessity for logic by the license of the dream, they can give their entire attention to getting out the closely knit story. They cannot do two things at once and do both well. They can do one nicely.

Lacking Leaders.

Not one author in a thousand seems to pay more attention to the story than to the details. And yet the best authors do not count their leaders or the words in their leaders, they do not count the number of scenes, they simly write a story as a whole knowing that the details will care for themselves if the art of writing has been properly mastered. Technique is a splendid thing, but it is a help only when properly used. If made a fetich it becomes a positive hindrance.

Often in looking over a story one can almost see the writer struggling to hold back the leaders that would give clarity to the story. They even put them into the action thinking that these speeches will make the scene clear. They realize that the words should be spoken, but they are aiming for the leaderless script or one nearly so, and therefore they choke down the tendency to insert needful leaders and seem to take a pride in what really is a crime.

If you need a leader use one. Do not use them to excess; do not employ them to cover a paucity of action, but if there is need for a leader; if a leader of five words will make a scene clear the absence of such inserted matter will hurt rather than help a sale.

The rules of technique are matters of advice, not inflexible laws. They are helpful hints, not rigid restrictions. They are not lightly to be broken, for they are a general guide, but the author should be willing to let creation rise superior to mechanical form. Just as a matter of actual fact, a complete knowledge of the rules of technique is essential to the breaking of those rules. The more familiar you are with technique the more able you are to write with what might be called the unconscious technique. Probably you have seen the beginner at the piano practicing the scales and laboriously counting the beats. Such a pupil is not yet ready to play concertos. The finger exercises give the necessary flexibility in fingering. They must be mastered as must the simpler compositions before dashing overtures and difficult sonatas may be essayed, but the concert pianist does not count. He has passed the point. The counting he has done in the past has given him his present accuracy of beat and freedom from counting, but it is because he has passed the counting stage that he can present himself as an artiste.

If you can only realize it, that is precisely the way it is with photoplay technique. The best technique is unconscious; instinctive, because thoroughly mastered, but it is mastered only through laborious practice prefatory to the real work. The average beginner in photoplay wants to memorize the rules and sell the product of that memorization. That is not the way. First master the rules and then gain the instinctive technique that enables you to write with technical correctness. Then, not having to worry about leaders, you will employ the leaders you use, letting them fall naturally, and you will not have to count the number of leaders for it is seldom that there will be a sufficiently large number to cause any worry.

Ha Ha Stuff.

A western correspondent courteously contributes an unnamed lesson course for which she paid a dollar to our museum. One of the gems of wisdom runs:

> The clergyman can easily be distinguished by his garb and the physician by his van Dyke beard or medicine case.

And in the same mail came a lesson script with a scene in a doctor's office and the doctor had no van Dyke beard, at all, for the doctor's name was Helen. There must be something wrong with the instructions. The whole series of lessons are amusing because they are so wretchedly incompetent. But there is a serious side, as well, for this misinformation must be unlearned.

Still They Come.

The very latest scheme is an alleged producing company with an office in a third rate hotel that advertises for scripts. Those who send are told to desposit them with a dollar. If a sale is made the "company" takes forty per cent. There seems to be provision made for acquiring another dollar for "copyright" but just how this is worked we have not been able to ascertain as the promoters of the scheme seem to be getting suspicious. No producing company engages in the sale of scripts to others. No producing company demands a reading fee. No one but a liar says that manuscript plays may be copyrighted.

Plots.

Your sore toe hurts you more than another man's broken leg. Your plot interests you more than it will any one else. Before you decide it is good, try to figure out what its general appeal is.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Operators' Notice.

ALL OPERATORS having an ammeter are requested to kindly forward following data as soon as possible:

(a) Amperage at arc.

(b) Exact measurement from back surface of back lens of objective to film when picture is in exact focus on the screen.

(c) Exact distance from film to apex of curved surface of front condensing lens.

(d) Exact distance from center of crater to rear (plano) surface of rear lens and exact thickness of lens.

(e) Distance between condenser lenses at closest point.

(f) If meniscus-bi-convex lenses are used send same measurements.

(g) Focal length of condenser lenses.

This information is desired from all operators, but especially from those using heavy amperage. It will be of slight value, however, unless exact amperage is known. Would also like to know voltage across arc, if convenient.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 89.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What faults are most likely to be found in projection carbons, and what do longitudinal (lengthwise) cracks in carbons indicate? Why are cored carbons preferable to solid carbons for projection purposes, and what combinations and sizes of carbons do you recommend for 25, 35 and 45 amperes, D. C., and 40, 50, 60, 70 and 80 amperes A. C.? What, in your judgment, would be the indication that your carbons were working above capacity?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 83.

Question No. 83 seems to have caused a good many of the boys to take to the tall timber in search of their goats—at least the replies were comparatively few, and the Roll of Honor is as short as any we have ever had. It consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; A. C. Stewart, Pendleton, Oregon; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas, and William Lee, Fort Worth, Texas.

Reply to Question No. 83.

BY A. C. STEWART, PENDLETON, OREGON.

The Question:

What effect, or effects, has a ground in a rheostat? Suppose your rheostat is in the neutral (Edison three-wire system) and a ground developed at the opposite carbon arm, what would be the effect?

The Answer:

Question 83 is properly divided into two parts. (1) What effect, or effects, has a ground in a rheostat? This question has many angles. If the coils or grids are properly insulated from the frame, and the frame itself becomes grounded, there would be no effect at all, or if the frame was properly insulated from the earth, and the coils or grids became grounded to it at one point only, there would be no effect. But under either condition named, if the coils or grids became grounded to the frame at two points, the resistance between these two points of contact would be entirely or partially cut out according to the effectiveness of the contact at the grounded points, the frame of the rheostat acting as a shunt circuit. The effect of this would be to allow more current to flow, and if enough of the resistance be thus eliminated the fuses would blow. Supposing the current to be A. C., and the rheostat on that side of the circuit permanently grounded at the pole transformer; if the rheostat frame is itself grounded, and one of the coils become grounded to the frame, all that part of the rheostat between the grounded coil and the source of supply would be eliminated, and the current would flow around the circuit, across the arc gap and through the rheostat until it came to the grounded coil, where it would follow the path of least resistance, which would be through the earth back to the permanent ground. This would result in an increased flow of current, and, probably the blowing of a fuse. If the rheostat be on the insulated side of the circuit and one of the coils become grounded to the grounded rheostat frame, the case as above described would be reversed. The current would flow through that part of the rheostat between the grounded coil and the source of supply and, passing into the earth, return via it to the opposite polarity via the permanent ground. The effect would be to shunt the lamp, and if the ground be heavy enough the arc would go out, or a fuse blow. In any event, a ground means either blown fuses or a waste of current, except where it is such that a portion of the coils are shunted through the frame, in which event the brilliancy of the light, or, in other words, the amperage at the arc would be increased. If the contacts at the grounds in coils or frame are only partial (as is practically always the case) there will be local demonstrations, such as arcing and sputtering, or a spot on the iron will get red hot. If the rheostat is on the permanent grounded side the light at the arc would increase; if it is on the insulated side of the circuit the light would diminish.

(2) The second half of question 83 reads: "Suppose your rheostat is in the neutral wire of an Edison three-wire system, and a ground developed at the opposite carbon arm, what would be the effect"? The result would be a dead short, except for what resistance the ground itself might offer. Both the rheostat and the arc would be shunted The arc would go out, and a fuse on the side of the circuit not carrying the rheostat would blow.

This covers the case fairly well. One could cite almost numberless different conditions, but Brother Stewart has covered the proposition as a whole very well. I might add, however, that the possibility of a ground, as such, should be entirely eliminated by setting the rheostat on a slab of insulating material.

Only Woman Operator.

T. J. Boyle, Miami, Arizona, renews his subscription and says:

> It may be of interest to know that Mrs. Boyle has operated the machine in "The Garryowen" since May 17, 1914, the day we opened. She is the only woman operator in Arizona.

All right, Brother Boyle, kindly contribute the lady's photograph. We need it in our business. The editor is a gay young squirt, only forty-eight, but, nevertheless, Mrs. Boyle can feel perfectly safe in entrusting me with her pictured countenance. If the picture is taken with Mrs. B—— at the machine, so much the better.

How They Did It.

M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas, says:

> Regarding your article, "A New Lighting System," April 17th issue, here is a little sketch to show you how we solved our lighting troubles. It is something like the system you mention, and it works fine. The house is very light during the show, but practically no rays reach the screen. The back wall is done in brown, so there is no reflection from it. Yes, as you see, I have a two-story operating room. The top story contains the rectifier, motor generator, rheostats and supplies. It has a 36-inch vent flue, with a fan in it. The lower flat contains two SixA motor driven machines, Powers inductor, motor rewind, reel storage case and racked tools, also switch cabinets and switches. There are three 40 watt mazdas on extension cords, two chairs, and there is room enough left for a cot which, however, won't be put in. The distance of projection is 71 feet, and is not as steep as it appears in the sketch. Waco theaters are 100% organized.

Meaning the operators, I suppose. That is the first two-story operating room we have record of. Your lighting system is very similar to that evolved by the editor and illustrated on page 401 of the Handbook. I am sure it is effective.

An Honorary Member.

As is indicated by the accompanying card Miss Rose Stahl is not only a most charming lady, and an accomplished actress, but she is also a moving picture operator, in so far as honorary membership in the Portland, Oregon, M. P. & P. M. O. Local Union No. 159, I. A. T. S. E. can make her one.

It seems that Miss Stahl, who plays the star role in "A Perfect Lady," operates a small moving picture machine in the third act of the play. She has been doing this for quite some time, and has literally operated a moving picture machine "from coast to coast." Now, I don't know, but presume the Portland boys, realizing the fact that union stage hands are not supposed to work with non-union moving picture operators, and being more or less hypnotized by the charming personality of Miss Stahl, concluded they would head off any possibility of a strike on the part of the stage employes by making the young lady a union operator. The card was presented to Miss Stahl by Jack Lawrence, business agent of the union. It is now up to the young lady to get busy and perfect herself in the art of shooting pictures at the screen, to the end that she do honor to the local of which she is a member. Votes for loidies!

Lens Quality.

C. E. Castell, Murray, Ohio, writes:

> I am not an operator but a "picture fan," but nevertheless read the projection department every week, and often discuss equipment with operators. I see much discussion in the department concerning condensers, screen and projection machines, but not much about lenses. Please tell me what price you think would be a reasonable limit in the matter of securing a good lens outfit. A comment on the lens listed would be appreciated.

This, Neighbor Castell, brings up a mighty big question, and one which I was just beginning to look into myself—that is look into it extensively. I have myself rather doubted the advisability of purchasing high grade lenses for the projection of pictures, but it is nevertheless a fact that over in England and Germany they are paying big prices for projection lenses, and, presumably they must see an improvement as against the cheap lens, or they would not do it.

Recently I communicated with Mr. Colin N. Bennett, Escot, Penzance, Cornwall, England, who conducts a department in the Kinematograph & Lantern Weekly, London, England, which to some extent corresponds, though on a smaller scale, to the projection department of the Moving Picture World. I cited the fact that high grade anastigmatic lenses were used in England and asked what, if any, improvement was accomplished by their use. He replied:

> It is true that very high class lenses are now being used, regardless of cost, on the projectors in many better and medium class shows in this country. For instance: one firm of British opticians makes a series of different foci lenses which sell freely at £8.10.0 (roughly $40.00 in United States' money) or, about one-fourth the cost of the average projector. (It may be one-fourth the cost of the average projector in England, but not here. The average American projector may now be said to cost about $300.00, or nearly eight times forty dollars, while some of the later machines are now selling for more than $400.00—Ed.) This particular lens is not an anastigmatic, but is a special portrait combination which gives critical definition over the whole field on medium to long throws. Two or three firms supply true anastigmats. The cheapest of these run from fifteen to twenty dollars. I hope and believe the movement towards high class projection lenses in this country is largely and wholly due to myself, since I have been pegging away with this object in view, visiting the better lens makers and writing up their goods in the Kinematograph Weekly uninterruptedly for the past five years. Curiously enough, even up to the present time I find it difficult, or even impossible to get some opticians to view the matter seriously. They know so little of the possibilities of the market that they will not go the risk of putting their standard photographic combinations into barrel mounts and introducing them for projection work, although nearly all such wide aperture photographic lenses are suitable when used with properly designed and proportioned condensers.

It will be observed that Mr. Bennett says these lenses give a critical definition over the whole field on medium and long throws. Well, after we get the present highly important light and lens matter we are working on out of the way, which I think will be very soon, I propose to look into the possibilities of improvement along these lines and possibly may be able to give you some valuable data later on, but I am not going to tell you I know anything about the matter now, for I do not, and until I do have definite information I could not advise the purchase of any other than the ordinary stock lenses, except the purchaser is willing to take his own risk. It is, however, a fact that the ordinary projection lens is, I believe, poorly designed, and in nine cases out of ten very little regard is paid to the matter of its diameter. In a letter just received from Brother Griffiths he says: "If objectives were all made with their aperture between f 2 and f 3 it would be a distinct improvement."

For the benefit of the uninitiated f/2 means the aperture should be one-half the focal length of the lens and f/3 means that it should be one-third of the focal length of the lens. I am not prepared as yet to back up Brother Griffiths in this matter, but I do believe he is at least on the right track, and that practically all the long focal length lenses we have been using have entirely too small an aperture. I would not question Griffiths' statement in the least, but for the fact that I am not sure how this matter is going to work out with relation to the revolving shutter.

Hippodrome Installation.

My criticism of the Hippodrome stirred up a "tempest in a teapot," although up to date nobody has had the nerve to dispute my statements as regards the utter inadequacy of the installation, or the lack of good results during the first week or two of the Hippodrome moving picture performance.

However, it transpires that Brother Earl Rossman and Fred Nordstrom should have had at least a portion of the credit accorded to Friend Keily. In that article I stated I did not know Rossman, but presumed he was a good man. That was an exact statement of fact. However, Brother Rossman believes this has conveyed a wrong impression. Rossman is now chief operator at the Hippodrome, and, as a matter of fact, as I understand it, has been placed in entire charge of projection. And certainly projection has been very largely improved. As a matter of fact in the former article I had not so much in mind the matter of giving individual credit to the operators as I had the voicing of my absolutely unqualified disapproval of the installation itself. However, it is far from my desire to do anyone an injustice, and, in the light of later knowledge, I am prepared to say that Earl Rossman is a thoroughly competent man, and that he, together with Fred Nordstrom, his assistant, is doing excellent work at the Hippodrome, though it is hardly to be expected that they can produce the best results with the present installation. It is to be hoped that if the Hippodrome continues in moving pictures, it will tear that operating room out, put in one of sufficient size, with the conduits properly placed, ample ventilation, duplicate fuses and other needed things.

By-the-way, the editor of this department suggested to Mr. Sam Tauber, house manager of the Hippodrome, that one man ought to be selected, made chief operator and placed in absolute charge of all matters pertaining to projection; that his name should be placed on the program. Mr. Tauber said he thought the suggestion a good one and that it would be acted on. It has been acted on, and Brother Rossman's name now appears on the program in the roster of officials as chief operator, also, as I have said, he has been placed in sole charge of projection.

A Correction.

H. J. Smith, who signs himself "A practical operator and member of the city examining board," of Rochester, New York, calls my attention to an error in the article entitled "Rochester, N. Y., Examination," page 552, April 24th issue, which had as its basis an article in a Rochester daily paper. Brother Smith says:

> This is the third time I have found it necessary to correct you, and therefore I take pleasure in informing you that the board which conducts the moving picture operators' license examination is composed of seven members, two of whom are employed as operators, a third is an ex-operator and is at present manager of one of the large theaters, and four city officials: the city electrician, the superintendent of Police and Fire Alarm Telegraph, the Fire Marshall and the Commissioner of Public Safety. Now, Mr. Richardson, may I be permitted to ask if you would consider this board competent to examine applicants for a moving picture operator's license? I would further ask if you know of any municipal examining board which is more liberally supplied with practical men than this one? If so, you are better informed than I am, and it has been my good fortune to know conditions as they exist in this line throughout the country. May I also suggest that hereafter when you have news of this character you take the matter up with me or other persons conversant with the facts, and have the article edited before you publish it, thus assuring yourself of its truthfulness before the public gets it.

And now I am supposed to be properly squelched, sat down on, and ground into a grease spot. Strange to say, however, I am not. No, Brother Smith, I have got all I can attend to without inviting individuals in hundreds of cities to edit things written in the department. The correspondence of this department extends even to far-off China, South Africa and Australia, and I imagine if you had to answer one day's mail you would sit up and take decided notice. It is not up to me to consult you, or your union. If neither you or the Rochester union sees fit to keep this department informed on conditions in your city, I cannot see where you have any possible kick coming if such information as we are able to get is not correct. We do not publish matters unless the source of information seems to be reliable, and in this instance the supposed-to-be facts were taken from an article in one of your Rochester daily papers.

Information Wanted.

Levi Na Varre, Flint, Michigan, writes:

> We are going to build on the back end of our theater and would like to know the following: The new distance of projection will be 130 feet, to an aluminum screen; the size of the picture will be 14 feet. What size carbons and what amperage (D. C.) would you recommend? Both machines will be Powers Six A.

I would recommend that you use a three-wing shutter, and adjust that shutter very carefully to local conditions, so that you will not cut any more light than is necessary, and at the same time will get a minimum of flicker, and no travel ghost. In this connection, I would recommend the installation of an adjustment on your shutter so that as the gears wear you can gradually widen the blade slightly to avoid travel ghost, or, in lieu of that, I would recommend that as the gears wear you add a retard break, the latter being a better scheme than widening the shutter blade. The term "aluminum" screen may mean almost anything. If you are going to use a good type of metal surface screen, such, for instance, as the Mirroroide, or Day and Night screen, or Minusa Gold Fiber, I would recommend 35 to 40 amperes D. C. However, the amperage will depend very greatly upon the individual idea of the manager as to the degree of brilliancy desired. Here in New York City 40 amperes would not be considered too much in the better houses. As to carbons, I would recommend 5/8 inch cored above up to 35 or 40 amperes, and beyond that 3/4 cored, with solid carbons of a little less diameter below, or if you don't like solid below, then cored of a little less diameter, say 5/8-11 inch, 3/4-5/8, or 7/16 inch.

From Honolulu.

R. K. Bonine, Honolulu, Hawaii, writes in part as follows:

> Referring to article "A Relic," March 13th issue, in which was reproduced two exposures from a Cine. negative film of very large size, perhaps the largest ever attempted, the illustration attracted my most interested attention, as I alone am able to tell the story of this wonderful camera, and the very unusual trip it made through the Alaska gold mining country during the summer of 1899, to prepare an exhibit for the Paris Exposition of 1900. The scene contained in the article in question was made early in the morning of July 10, 1899, and is at the end of a strip which showed a big scow shooting through the famous White Horse Rapids; the great test of a trip down the river from Bennet to Dawson. The passing of this very dangerous point was the one great anxiety of every adventurer who started down the river route for the mining center. A rather strange coincidence is the fact that only a few months ago I received a letter of inquiry from the captain who went through the rapids on this particular scow when this picture was made. The letter was addressed care Thomas A. Edison, Orange, and had many adventures before it finally reached me at Honolulu, where I have been engaged in the photographic specialty business for the past seven years. He is now president of a large California mining company, and wrote to inquire if, after fifteen years, it was still possible to secure a copy of that particular film. The result of the trip from a photographic point of view was very satisfactory, as the cut in your department proves. The entire lot was developed at the Orange factory, and with the exception of the views taken on a side trip through the Yellowstone Park on our way back east, where some excellent geyser scenes were secured, I doubt if the camera ever made another film. There was a reason.

I have printed this letter because historical data, particularly where it has to do with matters of this kind, is of more than passing interest. Unfortunately in the two pictures published the scow itself does not seem to show. I shall be glad to have a brief history of this camera, setting forth the reasons for the adoption of this particular size and the discontinuation of its use.

Wants to Be of Service.

F. S. Howe, of Howe's Slide Service, Los Angeles, California, writes:

> I note in May 8th issue a request from I. Chaple for information on the making of lantern slides. Am writing Mr. Chaple personally, but would also like to say that if at any time anyone else would like information on this subject, I will be very glad to give assistance. Possibly an article regarding the making of advertising and announcement slides will be of interest to operators and managers who like to fool with photography. Once a fellow "gets the hang" of making black background slides by photography process it is easy, and results are immeasurably more pleasing on the screen than some of the so-called slides written with ink.

Yes, a concise, condensed article of that kind would be welcome, Brother Howe, and the editor himself would like a little information about making lantern slides, as he has a raft of negatives which he would like to make into slides if he could make a good job of it just simply for his own use.

A Film Defect Detector.

Robert T. St. James, Great Barrington, Massachusetts, is the inventor and patentee of a device designed to automatically detect defects in films during the process of rewinding. The upper is a side view of the device, and the lower a top view and a diagram of the electric wiring.

The inventor describes the device as follows:

> The device consists of two movable members B-B mounted on detector rolls A-A. The ratio of movement between the contact points on the end of members B-B and shaft E is approximately eight times that at the rolls where the film passes through. The adjustment of the machine is such that when a piece of normal, perfect film is between the rolls no electrical contact is made between points P and I, but should a heavy splice or other irregularity pass through the rolls it would be evidenced by points P and I making contact which would either ring the bell or stop the motor used for rewinding. I have had the original model in use for more than three months and with the exception of a slight change to be made in the guide rolls (making the flanges a little larger) it has worked perfectly. In practice the electrical mechanism is entirely enclosed, thus making it safe. It is really astonishing how positively it responds to all imperfections and is yet steady.

The foregoing is the way the author describes the machine and its construction. The thing looks reasonable on the face of it. It is difficult, however, to form an opinion from looking at a drawing. Friend St. James has agreed to forward a model in the near future and when I have seen the device in actual operation I hope to be able to say "good." The only things that occur to me as against it would be that fact that it would not, I think, detect a patch that was partly loose, but still together, and it seems to me it might operate when a notched sprocket hole goes through. The device is, however, worthy of serious consideration. Something of the sort is needed and I have hopes that this is "it."

From Emporia.

W. J. Reynolds, Emporia, Kansas, says:

> At last I have concluded to drop a few lines, not to the department, but to Brother Richardson. It has never been my need to write for information. When in trouble I can always find a way out by referring to the back numbers of the department in my files, since the one who has kept the back numbers of the department need not lack in practical knowledge of things pertaining to projection. Indeed, very much credit should be given you by reason of your cozy corner projection department. Does the operator of today ever pause to consider the learning, or rather the lack of learning the few of us had in the early days of this vast industry? Then the operator's brain was his only helper. We then had none of the modern improvements to aid us in our work. I wonder how many operators of the newer school could take the layout we had then and get results with it. I wonder how many of them would, at first glance even recognize it as a moving picture machine, or know how to operate it, yet no sooner do they get into trouble than they ship a letter off to the department asking a question, the answer to which has already appeared time after time. For the knowledge I have gained from the department I would not take one thousand dollars cash, and one hundred dollars would not tempt me to part with the back issues in my file. In closing I wish for you continued prosperity and a continuation of your work in the department.

Well, gentlemen, this is a sample of the other kind. Occasionally I publish a knock, therefore I am also entitled occasionally to publish one of this kind. Neighbor Reynolds has a level-headed way of looking at things, and in preserving the files of the department he has acted wisely. I would like to suggest to him, however, that the real juice of the whole department is contained in the Handbook and in much more get-at-able form, and as knowledge progresses that book will be revised from time to time to bring it up to date. By this I do not mean the operator should discard his files—by no means; I think there is nothing that can quite take their place, and, if they are properly indexed, particularly as regards the more valuable articles, the department is a gold mine of information, in that it contains not only such wisdom as I may have displayed in my comments, but far greater than that, the wisdom of operators and managers from all over the English-speaking world. I trust that Reynolds will pardon the publication of what was a personal letter.

Good Heavens.

W. S. James writes as follows.

> Just a few facts with regard to projection in (name of city deleted by censor). At the Majestic and Colonial it is fair; at the Mozart it is par excellence, but the thing to which I wish to draw attention is the conditions in another house in that city managed (?) by a new-comer in the business. The chief (??) operator receives the somewhat magnificent remuneration of four dollars per week, matinee and night; Saturday continuous from 1 to 11 P. M. The assistant's salary is two fifty per week. These operators (Heaven defend the title) are in charge of a motor generator set.

Well, I wonder if there is any earthly use in making comment on a proposition of this kind. At the least calculation this house must represent an investment of some thousands of dollars; these operators are in direct charge of material worth (if they have two projectors and a motor generator set) at least one thousand dollars. Yet the income on all this investment and approximately one thousand dollars of the investment itself is placed at the mercy of two men, whose combined salary is six dollars and fifty cents per week, or a few cents more than one dollar a day if they only worked six days a week. Probably if I was there and could speak personally to this supposed-to-be-manager, he would probably swell his chest out and speak somewhat thusly: "I am running my own business, and don't want any interference," all of which sounds very plausible, but is it his business? Have not the public some rights in this matter, inasmuch as they are the ones who are paying in the money? Has not the operator himself some rights in the matter, inasmuch as he is supplying the necessary labor in the operating room? Has not the film manufacturer some rights in the matter—rights, mind you, I said—which ought to have respectful consideration? How far may a man go in saying: "This is my business." It seems to me rather presumptuous in even so mighty a man as the manager of a theater to say this is "my business," or even for the owner of the theater to say it. As I view the matter it is the business of the film exchange, for instance, whether or not a cheap, incompetent operator is employed, who will most likely work at least a maximum amount of damage to their films. It also appears to me that the film manufacturer has some absolute rights in the matter of whether a competent operator, who will probably display to the audience the film which may have cost this manufacturer enormous sums of money, and months of labor, be employed, or whether a cheap, incompetent one will be put in charge of the projection, who will present the film as a series of jumping shadows, and, so far as that individual audience be concerned, absolutely ruin all the efforts of the producer, and most emphatically the public itself, which pays its good money to see a show, and not a rank imitation of one, has rights.

This, I believe, is one of the worst cases I have heard of, and had it not come from Brother James, whom I am very sure would not misrepresent things, I would hesitate about giving it publicity.

Questions Electrical.

Harry Albey, Louisville, Kentucky, says:

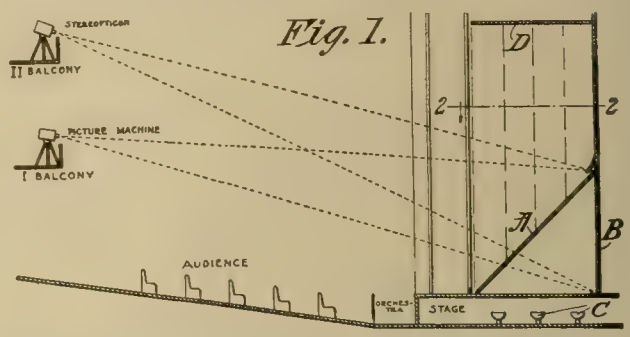
> This is my first letter, but as I need help I will proceed to introduce myself. Have had four years' experience flirting with the crank, but at present am employed as helper. What will cause a generator to change its polarity? If there are different reasons applying to series shunt and compound wound give details with regard to each. Does under-compounding mean that the series field is too weak or too strong? What is the effect on the voltage when overloaded?

With regard to your questions your letter is not very plain in some points. There are a number of things which might cause polarity to reverse. Assuming that you are operating a generator in conjunction with the projection lamp, if you disconnect your power before opening the switch between the generator and the lamp it would cause the polarity reversal. Most generators built especially for motion picture work are differentially compounded, that is to say, the compound winding is placed in opposition to the shunt winding, therefore if the power be cut off, with the generator still pulling its load, as the speed decreases the compound winding becomes heavier than the shunt winding, and this causes the reversal. Under-compound winding means a few turns of series in proportion to the shunt field turns, whereas over-compounding means a comparatively large number of turns in the shunt. When the generator is compound wound for constant potential, it means that the compounding is so proportioned that it will maintain a constant voltage within the capacity of the machine. An over-compound machine is one in which the voltage ranges above the given potential with increased load, therefore answering your last question, an overload on an over-compounded machine would mean a rise in the voltage, though just how far increased overload would raise the voltage I do not know.

How It Is Done.

Some time ago I gave a brief description of Photoplast, of which Charles Schneider, Springfield, Mass., is inventor, and upon which he holds letters patent.

At that time I confined my remarks to the surprising excellence of the demonstration Mr. Schneider gave with a temporarily rigged up apparatus. I am now, however, in receipt of drawings which make the modus operandi reasonably clear.



In Fig. 1, A is a transparent sheet of glass, D a painted scene, and B the screen upon which the projection is made, either from a moving picture machine or a stereopticon.

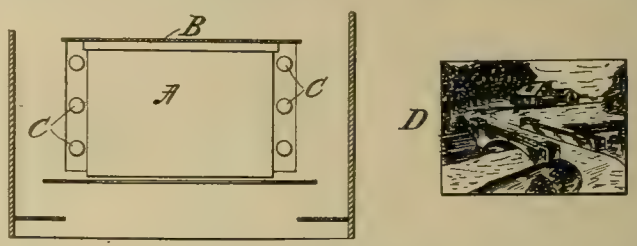


Fig. 2 is the ground plan of the stage showing side lights C-C, which burn continuously during the performance; they are also shown at C in Fig. 1. D, Fig. 2, is the scene which is suspended at D, Fig. 1, and reflected to the eye of the audience by the polished surface of transparent sheet of glass A, the actual projection being made directly through this reflected scene. In other words, the figures projected upon screen B pass through glass A which carries scene D and are reflected back through glass A to the eye of the audience, but the figures on screen B are of such brilliancy as compared to the reflected image of D on glass A that the effect is perfect. The figures on B "kill" the reflected image on the portion of A through which they pass.

I am not sure that this is entirely clear, but I guess you can dope it out.

In Fig. 1, we see both the stereopticon and moving picture machine, but only one of them works at a time. With proper films the moving picture effect is perfect, but the stereopticon effect is really marvelous. Even when one is seated but a few feet from the screen one would swear that the picture of a statute being projected from the stereopticon was the actual marble article standing right there before one's eyes.

Photoplast is not, at least at this stage of the game, adapted to regular moving picture theater work, and probably it never will be, but as a novelty in vaudeville work I am of the opinion that it will make a corking big hit.

Brother Schneider has our best wishes for the successful introduction of his invention.

Has Resigned.

J. B. Day, one of the old department correspondents, who has been chief operator and electrician in the Gem and Jewel theaters, Sherman, Texas, for the past five years, has concluded to see what snow looks like. Handing in his resignation he grabbed his grip in one hand, his household goods and his wife in the other and removed to Dorset, Minnesota, for a vacation. Brother Day will be open for engagement about the first of September, and the man who employs him is going to get an enterprising, up-to-date operator, who will deliver the goods on the screen. Friend Day has been flirting with the projection machine crank ever since 1905, and he is a live wire too. Managers looking for a live wire up-to-date operator, address J. B. Day, Dorset, Minn.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

THE BUCKSKIN SHIRT (Biograph), May 31.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1091, issue of May 15.

THE LONGER VOYAGE (Essanay), May 31.—Not a cheerful drama, but, common enough in real life, the story will find an echo in many hearts. Praiseworthy acting by Warda Howard, John Lorenze, Thomas Commerford and Sydney Ainsworth, and careful producing are features of the film.

THE IRON HAND OF LAW (Road o' Strife Series, No. 9) (Lubin), May 31.—The dramatic incidents in this instalment of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial are highly sensational and lead to Alene's arrest for the murder of Gilbert Jerome. Robert Dane and Daisy, the showgirl, are with her at the time, however, and this fact is a great comfort to Alene.

MRS. JARR'S AUCTION BRIDGE (The Jarr Family Series, No. 9) (Vitagraph), May 31.—Wm. Shea, as Uncle Henry, also a fire hose, play very important roles in this instalment of the Roy L. McCardell comic "Continued-in-our-next." Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley are still the efficient heads of the Jarr Family, however, and the punch in the play is not confined to the cut-glass bowl on the refreshment table.

HAM IN THE NUT FACTORY (Kalem), June 1.—Contrary to their expectations, "Ham" and "Bud" discover that running an insane asylum is anything but a congenial occupation. It has its humorous side—and a good broad side it is, at that—but the antics of the inmates, although highly amusing to an audience, cause the new keepers to take to the tall grass.

HIS PIPE DREAM (Lubin), June 1.—A cartoon comedy, on the same reel with "The Actors' Boarding House." A class of moving picture which, although held in high favor by audiences, must be cordially hated by actors, stage hands and producers, since it is the product solely of the artist's pencil. This cartoon is good for five minutes of solid fun.

THE ACTORS' BOARDING HOUSE (Lubin), June 1.—Pat Rooney, who is the leading luminary of this comic supplement conception of a theatrical boarding house, contorts his limbs, assumes grotesque attitudes and cuts up funny capers as if he were in reality a product of the facile pencil of Gus Dieks or Cliff Sterrett.

POLISHING UP POLLY (Selig), June 1.—Maibelle Heikes Justice's one-reel comedy again permits the country maiden and her faithful lover to triumph over a choice assortment of greedy city folk. The story is handled amusingly, and is well played by Virginia Kirtley, Eugenie Forde, E. J. Brady and Leo Pierson.

CARTOONS IN THE BARBER SHOP (Edison), June 2.—The original manner in which Director Roual Barre produces his Animated Grouch Chasers adds greatly to their enjoyment. The three cartoons, "Dr. E. Z. Bear's Busy Day," "One Hundred Years of Fashion Slavery" and "The Hicks in Nightmareland," are cleverly drawn, honestly funny and without padding.

THE FABLE OF THE INTERMITTENT FUSSER (Essanay), June 2.—"The higher they fly, the harder they fall." George A. illustrates this Ade-adage with great conviction and hilarious effect in his one-reel fable of a male human who flits from flower to flower in the Garden of Girls, and marries a "half portion," aged 18, long after he is old enough to know better.

"RED" WINS (Selig), June 2.—This one-reel drama comes very near being a veritable "slice of life." Helen G. Muir has gone into the slums for her heroine and carried her to a well-deserved "happy ending." Elsie Greerson is natural and attractive in the name part.

BUNNY IN BUNNYLAND (Vitagraph), June 2.—Carl Lederer is the artist whose clever pencil has recalled the jovial spirit of the late John Bunny back to the screen. Mr. Lederer's cartoon comedy is a distinct gain to this now popular form of motion picture play.

THE HEART OF AN ACTRESS (Biograph), June 3.—A new variant of the David Garrick plot, a member of the theatrical profession using her art to disillusionize an admirer and send him back to another woman, is found in this one-reel drama. The story admits of strong contrasts between city and country life, and affords excellent parts for Isabel Rea, Madge Kelly, Mrs. La Varnie, and Frank Newburg.

SOPHIE AND THE FAKIR (Essanay), June 3.—Margaret Joslyn, Ben Turpin, Harry Todd and Victor Potel have been given one-reel of new and laughable material in this farce. They fully merit the confidence shown in them by the producer.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 44, 1915 (Selig), June 3.—Knights Templar parade at Philadelphia leads the Thursday Hearst-Selig News Pictorial. Then follows: Wrecking smokestack at San Francisco, Girls' Pageant at Columbus, Miss.; New Yorkers signing petition for Leo Frank, Transportation Parade at Panama-Pacific Fair, Governor of Pennsylvania road-making, Italian building at the Fair, New York school children studying birds in Central Park, Dr. Carl Foss, Lusitania survivor, war pictures, Dutch liner Ryndam, at Hoboken, and the Thos. J. Cuno at Brooklyn.

SONNY JIM AT THE MARDI GRAS (Vitagraph), June 3.—Author and producer Tefft Johnson has used the Coney Island Mardi Gras as a background for the further adventures of Sonny Jim, and the reel is the gainer thereby. Bobby Connelly and Ada Utley (a dusky damsel of about Bobby's age) thoroughly enjoy themselves at the island, and spectators of the film will share their pleasure.

BRONCHO BILLY'S WORD OF HONOR (Essanay), June 4.—G. M. Anderson's favorite style of drama, this one-reel film gives him an opportunity to dominate an heroic situation in his very best manner. The play is well put together.

THE BELL OF PENANCE (Kalem), June 4.—This Carlyle Blackwell-Alice Joyce re-issue will readily be recalled as a picturesque romance of old California. The atmosphere of the time and place has been transferred to the screen very successfully, and the acting of the co-stars is in keeping with the subject.

THE DECOY (Lubin), June 4.—Three swindlers and one honest man comprise the characters in this one-reel drama, written by Will M. Ritchey. The story deals with a land swindle, but breaks ground on a new tract of fiction. The film is of average merit. Velma Whitman is earnest and adequate, as Flo Smith. Henry Stanley, L. C. Shaunway and Samuel De Grasse, are also competent.

JONES' HYPNOTIC EYE (Vitagraph), June 4.—A capital farce motive has been hit upon by David Smith in this one-reel film and he has succeeded in expanding it into fifteen minutes of amusing nonsense. The play is well cast.

HER DORMANT LOVE (Biograph), June 4.—The almost indispensable outlaw figures in this one-reel western drama, but the author discounts the fact by supplying his play with real people, dramatic situations, and a climax which contains a strong thrill and a stronger moral. Chas. H. West, Harry Carey and Claire McDowell are the "eternal triangle," and act with their accustomed skill.

FOR HER FRIEND (Biograph) June 5.—The averting of a domestic tragedy by a faithful wife, is the well handled theme of this one-reel drama. Augusta Anderson, Chas. Perley and Robert Nolan form an interesting trio.

A CHIP OF THE OLD BLOCK (Edison), June 5.—The cast of characters and diversity of scenes and incidents in this one-reel drama would have tempted most authors to spin it out into a two-part picture, at least. It makes a compact, interesting photoplay in its present form. Augustus Phillips, Margaret Prussing, Robert Brower and the rest of the long cast do credit to the direction of James W. Castle, who is also the author of the scenario.

THE HUMAN CHAIN (Episode No. 30 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), June 5.—The hazards which Helen takes in this photoplay are four in number, each succeeding one more dangerous than the other. The last one, where she is swung upon a rapidly moving locomotive, is especially thrilling. The strenuous life is the only kind favored by the undaunted Miss Holmes.

THE NEW BUTLER (Lubin), June 5.—In this one-reel Billy Reeves release, the Bibulous Billy sobers up long enough to secure a position as a butler and then proceeds to turn his master's establishment into a comedy "rough house." His conception of a butler's duties partakes more of the humorous than the useful; and he flits swiftly and nonchalantly from room to room, leaving a trail of consternation and laughter behind him.

BEAUTIFUL BELINDA (Selig), June 5.—James Oliver Curwood has uncovered a deal of unexpected fun in the center of an African jungle, and transferred it to this one-reel photoplay. The clever acting of C. C. Holland, Lee Morris and Lillian Haywood, and the unconscious efforts of a monkey, a donkey and an energetic bulldog—who is ambitious to catch bullets in his teeth—contribute largely to the amusing qualities of the film.

General Film Company Specials.

THE MAID O' THE MOUNTAIN (Biograph), June 1.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1091, issue of May 15.

WIFE FOR WIFE (Kalem), May 31.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1620, issue of June 5.

THE COWARD (Essanay), June 1.—The chief merit of this three-reel drama is the opportunity it affords for forceful acting on the part of three members of the cast. None of the trio is of much credit to humanity, and the assault of the father upon his daughter, although the fact is unknown to him, is in questionable taste. But there is no denying the power of the theme, and it suffers no loss of value through the acting of Sheldon Lewis, Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain and Peggy Sweeney.

PLAYING THE GAME (Vitagraph), June 1.—A two-reel comedy in which a man and a maid attempt to deceive each other by disguising their real personalities in order to frustrate the plans of their parents to have them fall in love with each other. Result: "Heaven bless you, my children!" Tried and truly pleasing material, acted in the proper vein by Lillian Walker, Frank Currier, Chas. Eldridge and Evart Overton.

THE SECRET WELL (Kalem), June 2.—Hamilton Smith, author of this two-reel drama, has unearthed something different for the scene of his story, and moves events forward at a rapid pace. The big sensation will cause many a gasp from an audience. Marin Sais is the endangered heroine, and heads a well-qualified cast. "Seen Through Grandpa's Reading Glasses," a bit of educational matter, completes the second reel.

THE DARKNESS BEFORE DAWN (Lubin), June 2.—There is plenty of real drama in this three-part photoplay by Shannon Fife. Most of the expedients have many times received the stamp of an audience's approval, but the author, in the present case, has dove-tailed them skillfully and kept the element of suspense in the foreground until almost the final situation. The play reflects much credit upon Joseph Kaufman's reputation as a producer. The leading characters find sympathetic interpreters in Mr. Kaufman, Ethel Clayton, Octavia Handworth and Earl Metcalfe.

THE INVENTOR'S PERIL (Lubin), June 3.—Lovers of sensational drama get a lively "run for their money" in this two-reel pictureplay, written by Adrian Gil-Spear. The inventor is not the only one in danger, startling events enveloping all the characters in a story which is anything but threadbare. Jack Standing, Joseph W. Smiley and Lilie Leslie, carry the acting to a high degree of efficiency.

HOW CALLAHAN CLEANED UP LITTLE HELL (Selig), June 3.—A three-reel story of politics and the police, in which I. K. Friedman shows familiarity with his subject and the ability to weave it into a convincing and vigorous drama. Director Thomas Santschi, who also acts the title role, performs both tasks in a thoroughly workman-like manner. Other capable members of the cast are Lafayette McKee, Harold Howard and Richard Le Strange.

THE TEST (Edison), June 4.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1273, issue of May 22.

THE BLOOD YOKE (Selig), May 31.—The most satisfactory feature of this two-reel drama is the way in which the problem that faces the heroine, is solved. The girl is a mulatto. She discovers this the night her hand is asked in marriage by a white man. She gives him up and devotes her life and fortune to mission work among colored people. Stella Razetto plays the part with fine reserve and marked effect. Lamar Johnstone and Harry Lonsdale do justice to their roles.

THE CLUTCH OF CIRCUMSTANCE (Essanay), June 5.—Lovers of romance will relish this two-reel drama, as it contains all the elements that insure the success of this class of screen fiction. The wrongfully accused hero, who suffers in silence in order to shield another, is set in a framework of reasonably plausible incidents, and the shifting scenes of the story have been selected with excellent judgment. E. H. Calvert, Lillian Drew and Betty Scott sustain the leading roles with skill.

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR (Vitagraph), June 5.—A three-reel drama of modern life by William Addison Lathrop, this photoplay is well worth the attention of an audience. The story is strong in plot, skilful in construction, and receives its due at the hands of John Costello, Leo Delaney, Anders Randolf and Leah Baird, who enact the leading parts.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

HER OWN WAY (Popular Plays and Players), May 31.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1785, issue of June 12.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MABEL LOST AND WON (Keystone), June 3.—Mabel Normand and Owen Moore appear in this number. Their engagement is announced during a party. A second woman claims his heart and hand, but Ambrose appears as the angry husband of the latter, with three children. The lovers are then reunited. The situations in this prove only fairly amusing, though the scenes are well taken.

BRAVE AND BOLD (Komic), June 6.—This is an excellent comedy of the farce order, in which Fay Tincher and Max Davidson are the funniest people. Max boasts of how he could handle two burglars at one time. Two of his friends plan to test his bravery, and the result is extremely amusing, for Max fails miserably in trying to keep even with his boast.

A MOTHER'S JUSTICE (Reliance), June 7.—A one-reel subject of fair merits featuring Mrs. Arthur Mackley. The story of the production is based on the old theme of the married man deceiving the girl, making a pretense of marriage, and later discovered through a telegram from the real wife. In this instance a slightly different development is obtained by having the mother of the wronged girl shoot the man, who confesses before death, and clears the blame from the mother.

DIRTY FACE DAN (Majestic), June 8.—This is an excellent children's picture, and is a detective story in which the children sit in judgment on each other. A dog is also included in the cast.

NOT A GHOST OF A SHOW (Royal), June 19.—Picturing the organization and performances of a barnstorming theatrical troupe. This is very old style stuff, but a few of the situations are funny. Lack of novelty is its chief drawback.

THE REDEMPTION OF THE JASONS (Beauty), June 8.—Showing how a poor young mother leaves her baby on the doorstep of a pair of old bachelors, later procuring a position as its nurse. Her husband returns and they claim the child. This has been done before in a different way, but it makes a pleasing little yarn. Neva Gerber appears as the young mother.

THE SOUL OF THE VASE (American), June 9.—An odd and somewhat mystical offering, with Beatrice Van, David Lythgoe and Joseph Harris in the cast. The young wife, tempted by an admirer, remains true to her husband. Her soul is seen to enter into the vase which he has been trying to perfect. There is a certain vagueness in the closing scenes, but the production has a pleasing imaginative touch and holds the interest.

PAYMENT IN FULL (Reliance), June 9.—The story of a young man fleeced of his earnings by a mining shark. He becomes a waiter and returns good for evil by saving the crook's daughter from her would-be despoiler. He then collects the money taken from him. Frank Bennett, Claire Anderson, Vesta Perry and others appear. The number is well-constructed and makes a fairly strong offering.

HIS GUARDIAN AUTO, (Falstaff), June 11.—James Cruze appears in this as the owner of a racing auto. He is wild and drives the machine wildly, using champagne for power purposes. His eccentric ride was amusing. The number as a whole is just a whimsical novelty and makes a good offering of its type.

THROUGH EDITH'S LOOKING GLASS (Thanhouser), June 13.—A half reel in which Lorraine Huling appears as a selfish young girl. She sees her true character in the looking glass and this brings about a decided change in her nature. A nice little idea in this.

BUD BLOSSOM (Thanhouser), June 13.—On same reel with above. A pretty little skit showing The Kidlet as a juvenile flower merchant. The Kidlet is delightful as usual and the flower scenes are very attractive. This makes a good light number.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE CELESTIAL CODE (Reliance), June 5.—A two-reel detective story wherein valuable government papers are stolen from a safe, through a plan established by means of the old Japanese celestial code. A child's kite is daily sent aloft by one of the accomplices residing in the home of the head of the Revolutionary party, with pieces of paper attached one by one by means of the line, conveying the message to the Japanese member of the party, who watches at a little distance away. The production is interesting and has a thrilling ending. Irene Hunt, George Walsh Harry James, Dark Cloud, Du Crow and James Warnack are in the cast.

THE LIVING DEATH (Majestic), June 6.—In the cast of this two-reeler appear F. A. Turner, Edward J. Peil and Billie West. The story is a gruesome one, treating of the rash act of an abnormally jealous father of a pretty young daughter. To keep her from a young male friend, he takes a cottage on an island where there is a leper settlement. Here the young owner of a large estate falls in love with the daughter, and to prevent the marriage, the father, when consulted by the young man on the matter of a simple rash that has broken out on his hands, tells him that he is a leper. The lie is righted afterward when the young man and the daughter have almost landed themselves at the leper settlement.

THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS (American), June 7.—A two-reel production with Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson and other talented players in the cast. The story has been well handled, and treats of the self-sacrifice of a wife, who has previously made the mistake of judging too quickly. Too late, after her husband has been obliged to leave his home on a false charge of theft, and she has sued for a divorce, which is supposed to have been granted, she follows her husband, only to find him happily married to another. Without letting him know that she has appeared on the scene, she steals away, having concluded that he has a right to the happiness that he has won for himself.

HEARTS UNITED (Reliance), June 12.—In many respects this production is commendable. It is in two reels, and is thoroughly human up to a certain point. It is unfortunate that in the scenes following the train wreck where the thoughtless wife is supposed to be killed so many graveyard scenes have been utilized to the elimination of details of importance such as the movements of the wife after having left the train at the station before reaching tunnel 6, where the accident occurred.

HIS SUPERFICIAL WIFE (Broncho), June 16.—A two-reel dramatic number, with Walter Edwards and Leona Hutton in the leads. The wife is a selfish, extravagant woman and to gratify her desire for a valuable bracelet the husband mortgages the home and buys it. The wife returns from a party and dreams that the necklace has gotten her into terrible trouble. These scenes, leading up to the killing of her admirer by the husband, are well staged. Many of the exteriors and interiors are attractive. The story is convincing and carries a good moral for wives inclined to be extravagant.

THE SECRET OF LOST RIVER (Kaybee), June 18.—A two-reel mission tale, with picturesque settings and a romantic flavor. The snake bite in the opening scenes could well be suggested instead of actually pictured in so realistic a way; women observers are unnecessarily shocked by such incidents. The finding of the painting in its copper case by the young prospector leads up to a very attractive story. The mission records are examined and the history of the painting fully shown. The production gives a fine idea of events in the early mission days. A good offering.

THE CANNON BALL (Keystone), June 14.—A hilarious two-reel number, in which Chester Conklin has some fun at the works of the Boom Powder Company. His villainous efforts to blow up the hero and the girl are not successful, but lead up to some extremely laughable situations. The second reel is particularly good. The Keystone company is in topknotch form in this number.

PATHE WEEKLY NO. 42 (Week May 24).—Preceded by war scenes, photographed under the auspices of the French Government. Other interesting items of the Weekly are a parade in Sydney, Australia, Harvard defeating Cornell on Lake Cayuga, African Chasseurs giving an exhibition in England of their expertness in the wielding of the lance, and the funeral of the Lusitania dead.

MAN TO MAN (June).—This is the first of the American Pathe product to be shipped to France to be submitted to the beautiful Pathe color process. The picture is in one reel, and is based on a simple but important situation in the ordinary life of man. Two men are pitted against one another alternately holding each other at bay for the possession of a wallet which belongs to the richer of the two. The man in the guise of a burglar has been forced to steal because of the necessity of keeping life in his wife and children as well as himself. It will of course be understood that he has been unable to obtain work. The end of it all is that the rich man at last awakens to the seriousness of the situation and hands over the money.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials.

NICK WINTER AND THE MASKED THIEVES (June).—A three-reel product of the Pathe European studios. It presents what might be termed a travesty on the Sherlock Holmes type of story. Nick does the most wonderful things in an eventually successful attempt to discover the identity of the three masked thieves. The production is one that will suit the majority of audiences.

WHO PAYS? SERIES NO. 8, "To-Day and To-Morrow" (Released week May 31).—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1790, issue of June 12.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE NO. 23 (Week May 31).—"The Tell-Tale Heart" is the alluring title of this number of the "Exploits," and the sphygmograph is used not only in detecting the degree of Elaine's love for Kennedy, but also in discovering the address of Wu Fang by applying it to one of his accomplices who has been captured. This episode is quite as thrilling as previous ones, and starts one guessing what the outcome of what has been begun in this chapter of the story will be.

United Film Service.

LOVE'S STRATEGY (June 13).—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1626, issue of June 5.

BRAND BLOTTERS (Ideal), June 14.—This is a stirring two-reel western picture. The plot is not particularly strong, however, and the most of the production is in the western atmosphere; the break-neck riding and all that belongs to the western wilds. The picture will please the majority of audiences.

THE NEW PHOTOGRAPHER (Superba), June 15.—Here is something new in the comedy line. The new photographer proves to be inexperienced, and the running off on the screen of the result of his work is no less comical than the actual taking of the picture, direction, etc., to which we are treated. The finished product is a sea-sick sample that makes the director's hair stand on end when he comes face to face with it. The new photographer is rapidly transported through the nearest window.

THE TURNING POINT (Empress), June 16.—A two-part drama directed by Joseph Levering. One of the main faults of this production, technically speaking, will be found in the absence of a link here and there which might add to the smoothness of the development. The production, generally speaking, has been well made, and would be a welcome offering in any theater. The story is not as strong as it might be, but the general atmosphere of the picture and the carefully arranged details, together with good photography, carry it over.

HUNGRY BOARDERS (Starlight), June 17.—Another of the Aubrey and Kendig series in which they endeavor to force from the world the living it owes them. This time they are banished to the kitchen to work out their room rent. The things that happen to disturb the peace of the boarding house are too numerous to mention.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

THE TOYMAKER OF LEYDEN (Imp), June 5.—The toymaker's daughter contracts tuberculosis and he spends all his money having a certain doctor cure her. The doctor afterward marries the girl. The plot of this is not strong, but it has a helpful side in showing the care that must be used in treating the white plague.

BILLY'S CUPIDITY (Laemmle), June 13.—A love story, with M. K. Wilson, Olive Fuller Golden and Gordon Griffith in the leading roles. The latter plays a newsboy, whom the hero injures slightly. The boy pretends to be hurt worse than he really is. He succeeds in bringing the quarreling lovers together. A pleasing and well-pictured little yarn.

THE RIDDLE OF THE SILK STOCKINGS (Imp), June 14.—A one-reel comedy, with King Baggot, Jane Gail and Ned Reardon in the cast. The department store representatives place a pair of "sample" woman's legs in a window of a country hotel to shock the natives. The trick is successful and will also shock many observers of the picture we fear. This is funny, but a little bit too breezy for some observers.

A DUKE FOR A DAY (Joker), June 14.—This low comedy number gets a good start but drops off in interest later. The plot is quite good, but the bath room scenes are not attractive and interfere with the natural humor of the production. A fair number.

THE LAST ACT (Rex), June 15.—A compact, well-constructed reel, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Joseph Girard. It tells how a young wife was lured from her husband to the city. He follows, impersonates an actor during a theatrical performance, and kills himself and his rival on the stage. A well-built drama with a tragical ending.

THE SECOND BEGINNING (Big U), June 17.—A love story, featuring Adele Lane and Harry Linkey. She is a poor girl and he saves her from insult. Later they are married and she falls into the clutches of a society man, but remains true to her husband. This is not powerful, but well-pictured throughout and sincerely presented.

THE PANZER TROUPE (Powers), June 17.—A half-reel number, showing the well-known Panzer troupe of acrobats in a vaudeville act. Some of the tricks are amusing.

THE WIZARD OF THE ANIMALS (Powers), June 17.—This, on same reel with above, shows Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the New York zoo, visiting some of the more noted animals in the big collection. This gives close views of Gunda, the largest elephant in captivity, and Dinah, a gorilla known as the most valuable animal in the world.

THE DOWNFALL OF POTTS (Nestor), June 18.—This number, written by Ben Cohn, features Eddie Leonard, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran. The latter appears as a burlesque detective, whom the lovers frame up as the criminal in the case he is working on. A characteristic number of fair strength.

AT THE BINGVILLE BARBECUE (Joker), June 19.—A half-reel subject featuring Max Asher and company at a barbecue. The comedy is of a burlesque sort and not very strong.

HER MYSTERIOUS ESCORT (Powers), June 19.—A story of Broadway life, with Jane Novak, Wm. C. Dowlin and others in the cast. An actress befriends a young wife who has left her husband; later the husband comes to call on the actress clandestinely and finds his wife with her. A reconciliation follows. This is nicely pictured, but only fairly strong in construction and presentation.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 169 (Universal), June 2.—Many parades and public exercises in American cities are pictured in this number, as well as interesting sporting events, war scenes and Hy Mayer drawings close the weekly.

ON HIS WEDDING DAY (Nestor), June 15.—A comedy number by Thomas Delmar, featuring Billie Rhodes and Neal Burns. The latter is caught in an auto accident on his wedding day, thrown into jail and escapes only by pretending to have small-pox. This is not so funny as some numbers, but runs along in an entertaining way and is fairly strong.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE OYSTER DREDGER (Victor), June 14.—A two-reel comedy-drama, written by Lon Chaney, with J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson in the leads. The rich girl falls in love with the oyster dredger. The latter part gives Mr. Kerrigan opportunity to display his good physique in a bathing suit through many scenes. The girl makes him think he is heir to her property and this, of course, leads to a love affair. The plot is not to be taken very seriously; it is made entertaining largely through interest in the principal performers. Otherwise it is not very strong.

IN THE SHADOW OF THE PYRAMID (Gold Seal), June 15.—Narrative No. 3 of the "Under the Crescent" series. In this two-reel instalment Olga and the other fugitives take refuge in one of the pyramids. A spy of the prince discovers their whereabouts and the prince himself comes and helps take them captive. The number is interesting, without being very strong in action or suspense. None of the incidents are particularly dramatic, but the atmosphere of the production is well maintained.

THE SNOW GIRL (Laemmle), June 16.—A three-reel number, written by Frank S. Beresford and featuring Glen White, Mildred Manning and Brinsley Shaw. All of the scenes are taken at Lake Saranac when winter sports are at their height. The out-door snow scenes, winter palace and general sports are very good. The story itself is conventional and only serves to keep the action going smoothly. The plot is entertaining, though none too convincing. An average feature number.

INTO THE LIGHT (Rex), June 17.—A two-reel religious story, featuring Jane Novak and Roy Stewart. The latter appears as a porch climber, who enters the girl's room and steals some jewels. She catches him in the act and instead of calling for help, reads to him from the Bible. The opening scenes contain a succession of improbable incidents, but later the sketchy manner in which the story is developed gains considerable interest for it. The attention of the observer is held throughout, in spite of the improbabilities. The scenes in the West, when the girl again sees the crook, now reformed, are also entertaining. An oddly developed number, quite pleasing in its way.

THE WHITE TERROR (Imp), June 18.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1275, issue of May 22.

ONE MAN'S EVIL (Bison), June 19.—A two-reel western story, written by Ida May Park, with Edna Maison, Wm. Clifford, Ray Gallegher and Arthur Shirley in the cast. The first reel has some faults in construction; later the story works up to a very strong situation. The girl's action in freeing the supposed murderer from jail, while the mob clamors in front, makes a strong dramatic appeal. This production has a number of drawbacks in development, but at the same time has certain qualities above the average for this type of story.

BLUE BLOOD AND YELLOW BACKS (L-KO), June 20.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Harry Griffon, Reggie Morris, Gertrude Selby and others. A number of the types are appealing, notably the Baron, the maid, the grouch and the pretty girl. The incidents contain considerable amusement of the nonsensical sort, but the plot hardly justifies two reels. The final scenes take place in the ball room, with a general rough house in action.

THE BLACK BOX (Universal Special), June 20.—The Fifteenth and last instalment of this absorbing serial by E. Phillips Oppenheim. Craig having died at the close of the fourteenth instalment, Quest looks for the mysterious contents of the black box. This is found and points to Prof. Edgar Ashleigh, whose peculiar actions have doubtless been under suspicions many times during the serial. The denouement furnishes a satisfying conclusion, the explanation being that Prof. Ashleigh had been bitten by an anthropoid ape, developing a murderous hydrophobia as a result. The serial has been finely pictured throughout and contains a good mixture of mystery and excitement.

John Charles---Villain of the Pictures

A MAN cannot smile and yet be a villain—not in pictures. On the animated screen a fiendish smile may be employed now and then to poke in the essential realism, but for the most part the villain must be a stern and foreboding individual. He must be as mild a mannered man as ever scuttled ship or cut a throat!

John Charles, who plays the "heavies" in many of the Red Seal Plays produced by the Selig Polyscope Company, in pictureland is a villain of the most approved type—outside of pictureland he is not a bit villainous—but that is another story again!

John Charles.

Starting to play parts in theatrical stock companies at the age of 16 years, Mr. Charles has enacted a range of roles from "Simon Legree" to "Hamlet" all more or less villains in their own way.

"In the good old days of the ten, twent, and thirt," said Mr. Charles the other day, "the villain who always smoked a cigarette, carried a riding whip and wore puttees, was frequently hissed off the stage. His was indeed a thankless part. In the pictures details are somewhat different. While the villain wins the enmity of the 'gallery gods' right off the bat, yet he cannot be hissed off the screen and, consequently no endeavors are made toward this end. Also the hard-working actor who portrays the villain in the pictures is not present in the flesh and is not obliged to dodge sundry missles which frequently was the experience of the 'heavy' who came forth in 'Thorns and Orange Blossoms,' 'East Lynn,' 'Only a Factory Girl,' and such like plays of halcyon days.

"I find that the actor who well assumes a 'heavy' role in motion picture productions is complimented for his work rather than condemned for the part he is compelled to play. I have overheard many compliments extended by audiences in motion picture theaters to picture actors who play 'heavy' parts convincingly. Just a few years ago such compliments would have sounded very strangely. I construe the new attitude to mean that sentiments are changing and that audiences are appreciating the work of each and everyone who assists in making the motion picture play the more realistic and entertaining."

OTIS B. THAYER IN NEW YORK.

Otis B. Thayer, director of the Pike's Peak Film Company, is in New York looking for a new star to take back with him to Colorado Springs, to the Garden of the Gods Studio, where he is producing Lariat Pictures for the United Program.

Will Stay in Boston

"The Birth of a Nation" Approved by "Three-Men" Censor Board.

A NOTABLE victory was won in Boston, Mass., on Wednesday, June 2, by "The Birth of a Nation" management that has been presenting the play at the Tremont Theater in spite of the determined opposition of a group of white and colored agitators. The opponents of the play jammed through the Legislature the previous week the so-called "Three-Men" Censor Bill, which provided that any play could be stopped without any reason being assigned and simply at the pleasure of two out of the three following officials: The Mayor, the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court and the Police Commissioner. The bill was promptly signed by Governor Walsh, and the opponents joyfully looked forward to the end they had aimed at, namely, the driving of the Griffith spectacle out of Boston.

Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara decided to see for themselves the object of the attacks. They visited "The Birth of a Nation" at different times individually. Then on Wednesday they gave a hearing to the counsel for the negroes and the counsel for the theater. John F. Cusick, the sole theatrical counsel, was faced by former U. S. Assistant Attorney-General William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson, colored lawyers, and J. Mott Hallowell, representing the white protestants. The hearing lasted two hours, after which the Board of Censors went into executive session.

After a short session Mayor Curley, in behalf of the Board, issued a statement. "Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel and having given full consideration to the entire subject, we have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

Probably no more astonished body of people could be found anywhere in the world than the makers of this censorship measure, thus finding themselves confounded by their own devices. News of the decision will go all over the country, and it will be perceived that a large and almost unlimited grant of censorial power is insufficient to suppress Mr. Griffith's great historical drama where men of sanity can sit in judgment.

J. S. Hebrew

FEW booking men in the film business are more conversant with the exhibition conditions of the industry than J. S. Hebrew, Philadelphia branch manager of the V-L-S-E, whose experiences have put him in touch with exhibitors from Maine to California and from the Lakes to the Gulf.

His first connection with the motion picture business was with the Philadelphia office of the Patents Co., at which time he assisted in concluding arrangements for the consolidation of the Calehuff, Schwaab, Lubin and The Electric Theater Supply Co., the four exchanges at that time doing business in Philadelphia.

J. S. Hebrew.

Later, he was transferred to Boston, where he consolidated the Howard and Kleine branches, following which he established an office for the General Film Company in Bangor, Me.

He then turned his attention to New York City, and later went to the far west.

Just prior to his connection with the Big Four, he handled the bookings for feature productions in the Pennsylvania territory from Wilkes-Barre and Harrisburg.

Mr. Hebrew is enthusiastic over the affiliation of the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies, and believes the combination will be of great force in the film business, and result in eliminating the uncertain condition that has existed in the feature field.

John Hines

JOHN HINES, the inimitable comedian of the World Film features, who has been chosen for the title role of the Wm. A. Brady photoplay "The Cub," has been on the stage ever since he was a child making his debut in 1905 in the "Babes and the Baron" at the Lyric theatre. His next engagement was his playing the role of "Little Billy" in William Gillette's production of "Sherlock Holmes." We remember John, or Johnny, as he is familiarly known to his World Film associates, with great pleasure supporting Madge Kennedy in "Little Miss Brown." He also played Geo. M. Cohan's part in "The Little Millionaire" on the road. Cohan and Harris liked his work so much that they placed him in the title role in "Children of Today," which was not successful. He next went back again to musical comedy, supporting Emma Trentini in "The Firefly."

John Hines.

It was therefore with particular interest that the man-who-asks-questions went up and asked Johnny how he happened to break into moving pictures. His answer certainly increased that interest. "I happened to get the idea when I was playing in 'Children of Today.' Mr. Forest was rehearsing me one day and he happened to remark how much 'silent comedy' I could get over the footlights; that is, how well I could express myself without using words. The outcome of it all was that last season happened to be a very poor one in the legitimate. So I decided that now was my opportunity to try out Sam Forrest's suggestion. My decision was settled when I was offered the comedy part in 'The Man of the Hour' in which Bob Warwick was starred. At first, I found it difficult because I was so used to having lines and cues, but through the encouragement and assistance of Maurice Tourneur I was able to express what could not be said."

CHARLOTTE IVES TO SUPPORT JOHN BARRYMORE IN "THE DICTATOR."

Charlotte Ives, one of the most popular ingenues of the American stage, and who will be remembered by exhibitors and the photoplay public through her natural impersonation of the featured role in "Clothes," one of the early productions of the Famous Players Film Co., has been re-engaged by that company and will appear in the support of John Barrymore in "The Dictator," the Paramount release of June 21.

Miss Ives portrays the role of the young American girl who goes to South America as a missionary, and who instead reforms Brooke Travers, the wild and impetuous adventurer, impersonated by John Barrymore. The romance that develops between the two eventually becomes the dominant part of the story, and even overshadows the thrilling situations that occur constantly throughout the production.

ENTERPRISING PENN YAN EXHIBITOR.

L. E. Barger, proprietor of the Sampson theater at Penn Yan, N. Y., paid a visit to the Moving Picture World on Tuesday, June 8. Mr. Barger is the leading picture theater manager in his section of the state and reports a satisfactory business. His house is equipped with a Powers 6A and a Mirroroid screen together with other up-to-date devices intended to secure good projection. Mr. Barger began business several years ago as an operator and has risen to the rank of progressive exhibitor.

BEURY FEATURE FILM CO. HAS FIRE.

Fire destroyed the plant of the Beury Feature Film Company at Toronto, Can., on Monday night, May 31. The buildings were entirely consumed and the loss is estimated at $100,000, which is said to be fully covered by insurance. At the time of the fire the company was engaged upon the production of an anti-cigarette campaign film for the Medical Review of Reviews. The negatives were saved.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

"The Arab" at The Strand.

EDGAR SELWYN in the title role of a photo-dramatic production of his original play, "The Arab," is the leading attraction at The Strand. Mr. Selwyn's character is that of Jamil, the son of a great desert Sheik, who falls in love with the daughter of a Christian Missionary and rescues her from a massacre in Syria. The play is picturesque and strongly dramatic, and has been given a fine production. The remaining pictures on the program consist of Dr. Edward A. Salisbury's views in the Red Woods of California; travel pictures in Denmark and Sweden, and The Strand Topical Review. Mme. Elsie Kutscharra, the Belgium prima-donna, heads the musical program.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

Maurice Costello and Norma Talmadge play the chief characters in "The Criminal," a Broadway Star Feature picture, at the Vitagraph Theater the present week. The play tells a story of tense human interest, and was written by Anna Bressman. Van Dyke Brooke, who produced the drama, is also a member of the cast, which includes Maud Milton, Estelle Mardo, and Thoman Mills. Another two-part chapter of "The Goddess," in which Celestia saves an East Side family from being evicted, is also on the program. The three shorter films include Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "Their First Quarrel"; Naomi Childers, Charles Wellesley, Bobby Connelly and George Stevens in a powerful domestic drama, "The Hand of God"; and Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley in Roy L. McCardell's Jarr Family Series, "Mr. Jarr and the Captive Maiden."

Elsie Janis at the Broadway.

"Madcap Kitty," a Bosworth Paramount Picture, heads the list at The Broadway. The scenario was written by Elsie Janis,. who also plays the high-spirited heroine. This is Miss Janis' second appearance on the Paramount program and she has scored a triumph on both occasions. South American Travel pictures, the Broadway Animated News, and new cartoons, complete the bill.

Mawson Pictures at the Lyric.

Sir Douglas Mawson's remarkable motion pictures which had a successful Broadway run last winter are to be seen again at the Lyric theater beginning Thursday evening, June 10. Over two thousand additional feet of film have been added to the entertainment since it was last seen on Broadway. Pictures of deep-sea dredging and creatures brought from a distance of over two miles below the surface of the water add a thrilling bit of interest to this marvelous film. The experiences of the party who lived for a year on a floating iceberg is another addition.

V.-L.-S.-E. INSTALLS MORE OFFICES.

The volume of business being done by the V.-L.-S.-E. continues to increase so rapidly that during the past week four new sub-offices and a new branch have been added to the chain of distributing points.

The new branch office is located in Cleveland at 2077 Fourth street, in the centre of Cleveland's film market, and is in charge of A. W. Goff. The territory to be served by this branch will include the southeastern portion of Michigan, as well as all of the state of Ohio.

Two new sub-offices have been attached to the San Francisco branch, one located in Los Angeles, California, and the other in Seattle, Washington. The Los Angeles office is in charge of H. D. Naugle, and the Seattle office will be in charge of Tom North.

Announcement is made by "The Big Four" of the establishment of a St. Louis office in charge of S. W. Hatch, who is favorably known to most of the exhibitors in the Middle West.

The V.-L.-S.-E. St. Louis office is permanently located at 3630 Olive street, and exhibitors in St. Louis and its immediate territory will obtain all their booking through this new office.

TO PRODUCE THE "WHISTLING MAN."

Maximillian Foster, a well-known contributor to the national magazines, is now busy putting "The Whistling Man," which is considered his best bit of fiction, into scenario form. When completed, Ed Lincoln, the former Vitagraph star, will produce it in the same big way he is now putting on Robert W. Chambers' famous novel, "The Fighting Chance."

Geraldine Farrar on Her Way

Geraldine Farrar, the world's greatest operatic star, left New York Monday, June 7, in her special car, surrounded by an elaborate entourage of managers and attendants. Miss Farrar will arrive in Los Angeles, California, where she is to have her first experience posing before the camera as a Lasky star, on Friday afternoon at 2:30. She will remain at the Lasky studio in Hollywood (just outside of Los Angeles) for a period of eight weeks, and it is now officially announced that the first vehicle for her use will be a dramatic version of "Carmen."

Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky Company, will himself take full charge of the Farrar productions and has, as a matter of fact, been making preparations for "Carmen" ever since the day the contract with Miss Farrar was signed.

Miss Farrar started on her trip from the Jersey City station of the Lehigh Valley Railroad at 11:50 Monday morning. The prima donna and her party occupied the private Pullman car "Superb." Accompanying her were her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Farrar; Morris Gest, her personal manager, and Mrs. Gest; Mrs. David Belasco, Frank Connors, James Sullivan and Wm. A. Page.

GOLDFISH ENTERTAINS ARTISTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., who is now visiting the studios of his company in Hollywood, Cal., gave an important dinner on the evening of June 1 to a select gathering of friends and artistic associates.

Among those present, as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Goldfish, were Raymond Hitchcock, Fannie Ward, Julian Eltinge, Laura Hope Crews, Charlotte Walker, Cecil B. DeMille, Mr. and Mrs. William C. DeMille, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Buckland, Jack Deane, Thomas Meighan and Mr. and Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky and Mrs. Sarah Lasky.

FAMOUS PLAYERS OBTAINS THOMAS HOLDING!

Thomas Holding, whose unusually vigorous, sympathetic and appropriate portrayal of David Rossi, the lover of Donna Roma in "The Eternal City," singled him out for honors second only to those won by Pauline Frederick herself, has been placed under exclusive contract by the Famous Players Flim Co., in whose productions he will appear as masculine lead for an indefinite period of time. Mr. Holding's next appearance before the camera will be in an opposite role to one of the Famous Players' feminine stars, more probably Marguerite Clark or Hazel Dawn.

SEELYE LOOKS ABOUT OLD PA.

C. R. Seelye, Assistant General Manager of the V-L-S-E, after attending the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' Convention at Reading, left on an extended trip through the Pennsylvania territory, and took the opportunity of visiting the Pittsburgh and Philadelphia offices of "The Big Four," to assist them in perfecting their organizations.

Before leaving, Mr. Seelye stated, that while the volume of business done by these two offices was more than satisfactory, he expected that when they were in perfect running order, the business would double itself.

Marie Dressler

WITH the arrival at the Lubin studio this week of Miss Marie Dressler, rated as the funniest woman on the stage today, the Lubin Company launched the first of a number of big comedy plans on which it has been working for some weeks past. Miss Dressler will begin work at once on a feature comedy picture, written especially for her, in which the famous comedienne will have plenty of scope to display her unique ability as a funster. An unusually strong company has been engaged for Miss Dressler, headed by Tom McNaughton, the widely known comedian. Howell Hansel, who has achieved an enviable reputation as a producer, will direct the picture. The Lubin Company is sparing no efforts to make the Dressler comedies the best ever filmed. The majority of the scenes will be made at the big Lubin ranch at Betzwood, Pa., where there is every facility for making exterior and interior pictures. For the past few weeks a large staff of artists and designers have been preparing special scenic effects in the studios on the ranch, to be used in the Dressler production.

Marie Dressler.

GEORGE NICHOLS WITH SELIG.

George O. Nichols, who recently joined the Selig Western Stock Companies as a director, has enjoyed fifteen years in the theatrical business as an actor and stage director. He started to work in motion pictures in 1906, then returned to the stage and produced "The Love Route" for the Shuberts.

Mr. Nichols joined the Biograph Company in 1908 and remained with that company for three years; and in 1911 he affiliated with Thanhouser as a producer and made several notable feature film dramas. Later, Mr. Nichols joined the Lubin Company as a producer, took a company to Jacksonville, Fla., where he remained a year. He went to Los Angeles, California, in 1913, directed for several film companies, and joined the Selig forces in April, 1915. He will be identified in the filming of a number of important film productions.

WASSMANN BUILDING ANOTHER THEATER.

W. H. Wassmann, general manager of The Crystal Amusement Company, with headquarters at 236 Fifth avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn., which operates and conducts the Rex and Crystal theaters in that city, is building another moving picture house in Nashville. This structure will seat 1,500 persons, and it is scheduled for opening January 1, 1916. Mr. Wassmann's long experience in the moving picture business has provided him with knowledge of the appropriate furnishings and up-to-date apointments of a modern picture house, so the public may be assured of a structure that will be a credit to their city. The theater will be built upon a plot of ground 50 by 150 feet, and the sidewalk in front of the two entrances, the house extending through a block, will be done in tile work. The projection surface will be a mirror screen, and the size of the picture will be 18 by 24 feet.

KEYSTONE'S ONCE A WEEK.

Charles O. Baumann, on behalf of the Keystone Film Company, announces a change in the plan of release for Keystone features. The Keystone two-reel features will be released one each week, beginning June 14, instead of twice weekly as heretofore published.

"Our reason," said Mr. Baumann, "for this amendment to our original plan is due to our insistence upon quality in these important features. We find that because of the high quality of these specials, as well as their length, they take more time to produce than we had anticipated. In order not to disappoint our public we have, herefore, concluded to release one two reel Keystone feature each week, and by so doing we can assure the motion picture world that the high Keystone standards will be maintained and perhaps exceeded with these new offerings."

Reviews of Current Productions

"Scandal."

Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber Produce a Notable Five-Reel Drama for Release on the Universal Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN "Hypocrites" Lois Weber aimed to unmask the mean hypocrisies of modern society and how well she succeeded is an old story; in "Scandal," a really significant photoplay, she selects Gossip, the favored guest at so many of our social gatherings, dresses him up as a fiendish monster and makes him the motivation of a thoroughly human drama. The picture is uncommon in having a definite theme of true import; it is a striking sermon in the guise of drama; it is completely in accord with the type of purposeful production that is a credit to the industry and should be given every possible encouragement.

Miss Weber attributes her idea for the scenario to a Brisbane editorial which appeared in the Los Angeles Examiner, stating that to sit behind the window of a club facing the avenue in any great city is to hear more poisonous and dangerous gossip in half an hour than may be heard at a sewing circle during an entire afternoon. Apparently Miss Weber liked the idea of putting the origin of malicious innuendoes squarely up to idle men—the very men who scoff most at the tale-bearing propensities of women—and having selected the central object for attack she imagined a convincing illustration to drive home her conviction. It is not entirely a man-made scandal; women, too, contribute to the false tales; but the trouble, so far-reaching in its effects, has its inception among a party of men who while away the hours by sitting in a club window and commenting on the passers-by. They do not see, as the audience does, by means of frequent double exposures, the gloating image of Gossip standing at their elbows.

Two marked virtues of this production are its simplicity and its realism, not merely the realism of externals, rather the deeper realism of character and truth to human intercourse. In all of its essentials the story is virtually a page out of life, a fuller development of tragedies such as we find recorded in newspapers day after day. The difference is that Miss Weber strikes deeper than a reporter's story; she looks for the cause; then notes the effects step by step and finds exaggeration unnecessary in the realization of impressive drama. We see the loungers in the club window and how, when Wright passes in an automobile with his stenographer, they place a man-of-the-world construction on the incident. With a fund of detail and perfect naturalness we see how the gossip spreads, although there is not a vestige of foundation for evil reports; how Wright's wife becomes jealous and leaves him; how the neighbors begin to look askance at Daisy and how the happiness of a score of people is destroyed by a network of flimsy circumstantial evidence that is magnified into a case against those who have committed no offense.

The construction of the picture is admirable. It follows facts in showing the spread of evil. The club gossips drop a spark and the resulting fire starts in a small way; then gradually spreads and becomes a veritable conflagration that cannot be checked until it has run its course. The meaning of a half-destroyed letter is misconstrued and Daisy's husband is made to believe that she has resumed an affair with a former admirer. An automobile accident that delays Daisy's return home until the small hours of the morning, added to the evil reports, is taken by the husband as proof conclusive of his wife's infidelity and after a powerfully acted scene he shoots the man whom he supposes has wronged him, thereby adding murder to the long list of crimes directly attributable to Gossip. Daisy wanders off into the country with her baby in her arms and is saved from suicide by Wright, now ruined in business and reputation and living in a little cottage with his aged mother. But the work of Gossip continues unabated, for it is rumored in the club that the stenographer and her former employer are occupying the same house, thereby proving the correctness of previous conclusions.

In matters of production, the picture is always artistic and the sincere acting of Miss Weber and Mr. Smalley is ably seconded by others in the company, including Rupert Julian, Adele Farrington, Abe Mundon and Alice Thomson.

"The Little Deceiver."

A Three-Part Photoplay by Essanay for Release Through the General Film Co., Full of Heart Interest, Featuring Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I FOUND the story of "The Little Deceiver," which was written by H. S. Sheldon, quite affecting as told in pictures and also possessing steady interest. The story has also the charm of being different from the ordinary run, in that a girl of seventeen poses as a boy until the close, when the revealing of her sex brings joy to her obdurate old uncle and a sweetheart to her old pal, who had taken a liking to her at a time when she passed for only a "sissified" boy.

Edna Mayo carries the part of the "boy-girl" very happily. She makes a very nice boy indeed, with just sufficient femininity disclosed to impress us that she is a capable actress. In the scene where the "boy-girl" has discarded her boyish apparel and appears before her uncle for the first time in rightful attire, Miss Mayo makes a very attractive figure. It is the first time in moving pictures that I have been able to see Miss Mayo's features to advantage, and a most engaging and winsome young lady was revealed. If only Miss Mayo would continue to dress her hair so that we can see her as nature has endowed her, we shall be happier!

The principal character in the story, that of Henry Bisbee, the old grouchy uncle in the case, falls to the lot of Bryant Washburn. I must congratulate Mr. Washburn on a most artistic conception and strong impersonation of the part. Never once do we catch a sign of the young Mr. Washburn under the gray hairs, wrinkled visage and bent form of old, crotchety Henry Bisbee. It is a fine illustration of the complete submergence of self by the force of art and intellect.

Richard C. Travers makes the most that can be made of the role of Dick Truesdale, whose old pal becomes his sweetheart, and Thomas Commerford shows his customary fine characterization in the small part of Mr. Howard, the attorney.

Two brothers, Henry and Tom Bisbee, fall in love with the same girl. Tom, the younger, wins her hand by villainous imputations.

Tom and his wife die and leave a girl, Frances, whom the family attorney advises to join her uncle, Henry Bisbee. On being notified, Henry agrees to receive his relative if it be a boy, but refuses in case it is a girl. Frances decides to go to her uncle disguised as a boy.

Scene from "The Little Deceiver" (Essanay).

The old man finds fault with the shy boy, who never plays or fights with other boys; but his love is awakened when this pretty, shy nephew of his captures a burglar who breaks into the house one night. Then he tells the story of his heart anguish and life-long regret over the wrong done him by Frances' mother and his brother Tom. At this point Frances delivers him a sealed letter, written by her mother before her death, and as the old man sobs in his despair she appears before him dressed in sweet maiden's attire, a perfect duplicate of the girl who had plighted her troth with him many years before.

The release date is June 15.

"Her Shattered Idol."

Four-Reel Majestic Comedy Portraying the Ludicrous Side of Girlish Ideals.

for a place in her social class, the sort of impulse that has now and then plunged sweet young girls into the unbearable misery of a misalliance. Such is the theme of "Her Shattered Idol," and it is fully developed in three acts. The fourth act seemed superflous when it started, but it caps a climax of comedy with roaring farce, to which a series of George Ade subtitles materially contributes.

Mae Marsh, as the rich young ward of Spottiswoode Aitken, is happily engaged to his nephew, Robert Harron, and a union of tastes as well as of young hearts is about to take place when the wandering eyes of Mae become fixed on blacksmith Elmo Lincoln, a young giant of physical strength and a pigmy in mentality. The case of the rude blacksmith is not the endurable combination of egotism and ability, nor of the bearable unity of modesty with ignorance—he is a clod, a veritable cave man, of excessive vanity. His sense of superiority knows no bounds when he finds that he has made an impression on the dainty young heiress, and his self-complacency is thrown into entertaining contrast with the girl's delicate refinement. She idealizes him in a dream, renounces her natural mate and prepares to elope with a stupid giant who would have merely excited her derision under ordinary circumstances.

Now, Uncle Spottiswoode intervenes with a shrewd plan. He catches his ward in the act of running away and assures her that she is taking unnecessary pains. Far from offering any objection to the blacksmith, the amiable guardian invites him to become an honored guest at the house and gives a party to celebrate the misalliance. The gradual disillusionment of Mae follows—she becomes completely disenchanted by an intimate view of her prospective husband—and the play supposedly ends with preparation for her marriage to her first choice. Not so. The cave man broods over his sudden fall from grace, hires a horse and runabout, visits the scene of the wedding and actually carries off the bride. The last reel is farcial at times, but it is nevertheless entirely appropriate, and it tops off a story that keeps most any audience in a roar of laughter.

dramatic adventure and mystery, unlike its predecessors and certain, one may surmise, of a cordial reception. These opening installments, the first reel introducing no less a person than President Carl Laemmle himself, are very well handled in that the story is fairly launched without undue delay; the essential characters are established and one realizes right from the start that the two parts of a broken coin are the pegs on which Mr. Hough's narrative is destined to be strung.

Kitty Gray, a newspaper woman, finds in the broken coin inspiration for a great story; Count Frederick of Gretzhoffen realizes that it is the key to riches; King Michael regards it as the means for continued extravagances, but the parts remain valueless until joined together that the inscription giving the location of hidden treasures may be read. Kitty holds one part, the King the other and Count Frederick is playing his own game exclusively, so there you are—three factions all equally determined to possess the coin in its entirety and decipher the inscription. Surely the opportunities for conflict are ample.

The mythical kingdom of Gretzhoffen—seemingly an odd combination of central Europe and the Arabian desert—is the scene of Kitty's experiences. Mr. Ford, who plays the scheming count in addition to directing the picture, once more gives evidence of his ability to inject spirit into fight scenes, of which there is an abundance, Kitty's stalwart champion bearing the brunt of each encounter and recovering in time for the next with great facility. Several of the settings in the first installment have unusual depth and the furnishings are in good taste. The second episode offers much variety in locations, the finest scenes, in a spectacular way, being those of a desert where a caravan is silhouetted against the horizon. The third offers a good ball-room effect and an acrobatic sensation by Miss Cunard, who jumps from one window and is caught by a man swinging from another across the way. Well directed and acted, these opening episodes hold the attention.

"Fine Feathers."

The World Film Corporation Releases Five-Part Adaptation of Play by Eugene Walters.

WITH Janet Beecher heading an able cast, including David Powell and Lyster Chambers, a five-part picturization of Eugene Walters' "Fine Feathers" was made for release on the World Film program. It is a straightforward, dramatic photoplay with the extravagance of an ambitious woman for its theme, and a plot utilizing domestic financial problems, modern business and the temptations to which a young man may be subjected.

The cause for Bob's downfall is amply explained when his wife tires of simple domesticity and begins buying hats from a Fifth avenue milliner, which must be paid for out of a weekly salary of twenty-five dollars. Either that, or Bob may acquire a comfortable fortune by rendering a false report on his test of cement to be used in the construction of a dam. Jane seconds the arguments of the unscrupulous builder of the dam. Bob is bought and straightway makes unprofitable investments in Wall Street until he is ruined. After the crash and the suicide of the chief offender, the wife is content to forego fine feathers and make the best of her husband's income, however unsatisfactory it may be.

Duplicates of the characters drawn by Miss Beecher and Mr. Powell may be found wherever young couples are tempted to follow the pace set by their more prosperous neighbors. Both of these people are understandable and it is not difficult to accept the dishonest Brand as an actual figure in a complex business and social regime. Bob shows himself to be a good deal of a fool in his dealings with Wall Street, but that need not detract from the likelihood of the story.

Evidently the director took even more than the customary pains in finding just the right thing in settings and the picture profits thereby, although the value of the elaborate scenes photographed in Murray's restaurant is discounted by the rapid movements of the dancers. A few defects of this kind are trivial, however, in view of the satisfactory quality of the production. Several of the sub-titles are much too long and stilted in their phraseology.

Lady Mackenzie's Big Game Pictures

Animals of Africa Caught Unconscious of Camera in Their Natural Environment—A Wonderful Offering, Instructive and Exciting to a Degree.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A FRANKLY enthusiastic audience witnessed the first showing of the Lady Mackenzie pictures of African animals at the Lyceum theater of New York. Lady Mackenzie has not provided pictures of slaughter. If we remember rightly, there are only two animals killed in the whole picture and these are shot down right in front of the camera. It was a case of death from tooth and claw or horn coming, and getting over the ground too, and death from bullet going out to stop it.

That one holds one's breath seeing these things is putting it mildly. The charge of a rhinoceros was startling—the great beast kept on coming and it looked as though he really was about to make good, when he quietly put his knee down on the grass and then limped off for a moment or so. The high power rifle shows so little of the smoke that one hardly realizes that a shot had entered Mr. Rhino's shoulder. The spectator will hardly expect anything more exciting than that; but there is still something in store that is just about twice as tense. It is a lion charge, the like of which has never been pictured and, it is probable, never again will be.

It took a long while to get his lionship out in the open where the camera could work upon him and when he came, he looked a bit peeved. His great mouth—it got so close to the camera that we could see his teeth—was open and at every leap the bigness of his paws was full of terror. Lady Mackenzie and her chief hunter were waiting and both missed. The man moved and the lady stood still. The lion passed within two feet of the lady, making, so it seems, for the man. Later he was killed by a shot and carried out of the bush.

The value of the films as natural history can not be estimated. They carry us into the very heart of the wild and, hidden beside a water hole, they show us what goes on there. These things are wonderful and it is something to be proud of to have brought them for us to see. The camera work is good and all the views are clear enough to give the whole story at the best moments, and at the worst moments, to make almost all of it plain.

"Life's Mysteries"

One-Reel MinA Comedy from the New Los Angeles Studio Is Filled With Rapid-Fire Fun.

THE title of the first release from the MinA Los Angeles studio contains no hint of the true nature of the picture. "Life's Mysteries" suggests solemn thoughts, weighty deductions, sighs and tears; nothing but fun of the broadest and most hilarious sort enters into the making of this capital farce. The story, although familiar in both novel and drama form, belongs to the sure-fire order of comedy ammunition. The celebrated foreign duelist, with his pseudo title and spurious reputation as a swordsman, who becomes the butt of his quick-witted American rival for the hand of a Maid-in-America heiress, is a favorite target at which to hurl broadsides of ridicule and laughable mishaps. Milton H. Fahrney, the producer of the film, has fortified the ground plot with skill and laid siege to the risibilities of an audience with every device known to screen strategy. "Honor Thy Father"

Story Full of Deep Things—Fresh Situations—Good Acting—Three-Reel Kalem Offering By C. Doty Hobart (Author) and Robert Vignola (Director).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE are several great doors, cathedral-like entrances, to the human heart. At one of these doors, half revealed and half hidden in the mystery, we come on the face of King Lear. The up-spring of Gothic arches and the tremendous shadows are behind him and, entering under that face, the heart that has tested life and brings the image of the great temple outlined within, sees more than even Shakespeare's words can tell. At this door the Kalem picture makers have just placed a new group of figures. They tell a fresh story and like everything that remains at this door even for a month, the effect upon us is marked—our attention is arrested and held while we follow the thread of the story, testing it by our own experience and trying it for likeness to the truth within us. The people always test such a story for its immortality.

The ingrate of C. Doty Hobart's story is not a daughter, but a son. The opening situation is not new—it's the often-used story of the old folks at home on the farm collecting mortgages while the son is away at college spending. They come to poverty and the son refuses help and is even cruel to them until his eyes are opened. It is developing the eye-opening process that the author has brought into use some sensational situations that are new to this reviewer and are certainly effective. The three reels are a bit too long and not everything pictured rings true beyond question; but none can deny that the story just as pictured does stir up the soul; there is ample life in it to put it over and when its meaning is finally in us, we have something to think about; it is a substantial offering.

The ungrateful son, who after graduating from college becomes the city district attorney, is played by Harry Millard. Alice Hollister plays a young woman with whom he is infatuated, not knowing that she is a criminal and the wife of a convict (played by Robert Vignola) in prison. Henry Hallem is a most excellent actor and his portrayal of the old father has many perfect moments. As the mother, Helen Lindroth puts balanced and telling pathos in it. No one, we think, can foresee the outcome of the story until the very end—that last reel is unusually effective. We heartily recommend the offering.

Mary Pickford Acts With Great Appeal in Adaptation of Popular Play—Produced in Five Parts by Famous Players.

IN Frances Hodgson Burnett's creation of Glad, the inspired and inspiring heroine of "The Dawn of a To-morrow," the Famous Players offered Mary Pickford a distinctive character of marked appeal. There was solid material on which to build—melodrama refined by a touch of religious symbolism—and Miss Pickford might well be selected as the ideal interpreter of the little girl whose soul rises above the sordidness of London slums; whose spirit is undaunted by dingy crimes and poverty. Her portrayal of Glad becomes much more than the display of a winsome personality, evident and, of course, welcome in the earlier passages; but not the outstanding feature of the performance as the story advances to tense climaxes. In the main, Miss Pickford has a part of large emotional possibilities, in some ways reminiscent of "Tess of the Storm Country," and she acts, as she did then, with force and sincerity.

The theme of "The Dawn of a To-morrow," the optimistic message of hope imparted by a frail, ignorant girl, is clearly developed in James Kirkwood's artistic production. The characterizations ring true with David Powell, giving a well-nigh flawless interpretation of Dandy, Forrest Robinson as Sir Oliver Holt and Robert Cain playing the dissolute nephew. In seeking the atmosphere of the London slums the director relied almost exclusively on studio construction, even for street scenes. Mr. Kirkwood made an exact replica of the buildings and alleyways described by Mrs. Burnett and they were peopled by unmistakably English types.

The plot is nicely calculated to emphasize the magical goodness of Glad, who without consciousness of extraordinary virtues becomes a messenger of cheer. Her poor little home is a haven for those in need. She prevents the suicide of the wealthy Sir Oliver Holt; she saves a friendless mother and child from starvation and in the most dramatic of all the incidents she saves her cockney sweetheart from punishment for a crime of which he is guiltless. "The Dawn of a To-morrow" is as wholesome as it is entertaining and it is finely acted in every role.

We are consoled, however, with the news that following in the wake of the "Exploits" will be "The Romance of Elaine," when we hope to learn what became of the great detective after his battle with the Chinaman. Mr. Prince has had a very successful career on the speaking stage. Since he has entered filmdom he has come into prominence by reason of his athletic propensities and aggressiveness. The part assigned to him in the Gotham's next release will be one that requires all of Mr. Prince's athletic and aggressive tendencies to be brought into prominent play.

ers of photoplays his appearance in the present production, directed by Edwin S. Porter, is a bit of good fortune. He makes a great deal out of James Ralston—otherwise known as Jim the Penman—even arousing sympathy for a man, who, if less sympathetically played, would appear hopelessly evil. Much of the dignity and tone of this picture must be attributed to the authoritative performance supplied by the leading player.

"Jim the Penman" is frankly a melodrama with crime much in evidence, and for the better part of five reels getting distinctly the better of virtue in worldly success. Ralston separates two lovers by means of forged notes and uses his talent for copying other men's signatures to swell his own bank account at the expense of theirs. He has lived in luxury for many years before being moved to repentance, partly for the sake of his wife and daughter and partly, one fears, because he believes there is a strong likelihood of his getting caught. At all events, Ralston's change of heart and the break with his partner, Baron Hartfeld, are worked into scenes of indisputable melodramatic power. An audience will have no reason to complain of dullness.

Frederick Perry again reveals his versatility by portraying Captain Redwood, the detective, as the Lawrence D'Orsay type of imperturbable Englishman. It is a capital characterization and a welcome departure from the customary figure of the photoplay detective. Russell Bassett makes a convincing Baron Hartfeld, whereas Harold Lockwood as Percival and Marguerite Leslie as Nina L'Estrange are other valuable members of an entirely efficient cast. "Jim the Penman" should prove a popular medium for Mr. Mason's debut in pictures.

"Rafferty at the Hotel de Rest" and "Rafferty Goes to Coney Island" Make Lively Entertainment.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

DIRECTOR J. A. Fitzgerald's latest productions for the Rafferty series, "Rafferty at the Hotel de Rest" and "Rafferty Goes to Coney Island" are characterized by a vein of popular comedy certain to appeal to the great majority of photoplay patrons. In each instance the story suffices and there is a great abundance of lively action contributed by Charles O'Hara in the part of Rafferty, and other equally able players skillfully directed by Mr. Fitzgerald. While many of the humorous incidents come under the head of slapstick or burlesque, offensive coarseness is at all times avoided.

In writing the scenario for "Rafferty at the Hotel de Rest," Charles O'Hara conceived a quack doctor, who gives his patients some uneasy moments by the use of an electric treatment, and then packs them off to a hotel in the country where all will be peace and quiet. Friend Rafferty goes along with the others and from the time the party arrives at the station and is forced into an under-sized bus, the unexpected misfortunes commence. Much ingenuity was displayed in the direction of this picture that has moments of quite uproarious comedy.

For the second of the productions, the All-Celtic players experience hazardous adventures on the way to Coney Island, some going by boat, others by automobile, all of the men concerned being in quest of a beautiful young woman, who visits a fortune teller, and learns that she is destined to wed a handsome youth, possessing little in common with Rafferty and his rather grotesque rivals. Among the laughable passages in this picture is a burlesque duel in which bricks take the place of swords and pistols. The exceptionally clear photography in both of these releases is to be commended.

MinA Films Coast Pictures.

New Series Proves a Success—Animal Pictures Are Soon to Be Made.

ON top of the phenomenal success of the new coast series of MinA films comes the announcement by the makers of this brand that another series of startling productions is soon to be made. This announcement, coming not merely as the upshoot of immature plans, but as the result of definite preparations long under way, is of particular importance, especially so in view of the past accomplishments of the MinA producers.

These productions, which are to be marketed shortly through the General Film program, are the animal pictures in which the Bostock menagerie will be used.

That these pictures might reach the highest state of perfection the producers, after careful study of the requirements, have provided means and facilities that certainly auger well for the success of their undertaking. Besides acquiring the Bostock animals, recognized as the largest and most magnificent group of performing beasts in existence, the makers of MinA Films are building a new studio in Los Angeles to meet the particular needs of animal picture making, and have also arranged with David Horsley to use his new duplex double exposure camera in these productions.

While completed to a point where one company has for several weeks been producing in one wing, work on the new studios has progressed so far that it will be possible to throw open the entire building for use within a fortnight. Because of the nature of the animal pictures it was necessary to construct a studio on absolutely original lines. This, of course, required experiments and as a consequence considerable time and money was spent before the proper arrangement was obtained. The result was worth the delay, however, for MinA Films now has the finest and most unique studio used for motion pictures. A detailed record of its design will appear in these columns later.

In keeping with the general surroundings, the entire equipment of the studio is new. Every stick of scenery, every light, and every piece of paraphernalia—each being of the best material and the latest and most improved type—will first see service here. Thus equipped it is reasonable to expect some unusual studio effects in the pictures.

A big coup by the makers of MinA Films was the acquisition of David Horsley's latest invention, the duplex double exposure camera, for exclusive use in MinA productions. By this "wonder-box" it is possible not only to save much time and money, but to obtain far greater photographic illusions than by ordinary methods. This new camera is used for the first time, aside from tests, in the MinA release for June 17, called "A Mix-up in Males."

The makers of MinA Films expect tnat their animal productions will mark the era of a new type of motion picture production. And, what with the finest equipment possible, backed by the many years' experience as producers, there is no reason why their expectations should not be realized.

"Runaway June" Contest

Arousing Much Interest Among the Fair Sex on the Coast.

"Gentlemen:—Enclosed you will find duplicate votes on the 'Runaway June' contest, which is one of the biggest contests I have ever pulled off for causing talk in my part of town, and has doubled my business on contest nights. I also have run the serial so far with the best success any serial could have. Yours very truly,

"Sydney S. Miller, Mgr."

"University Theater, 931 West Jefferson St., Los Angeles, Cal."

This letter from an enthusiastic exhibitor who is running the "Runaway June" contest has been received at the Reliance offices.

Manager Miller has reason to be proud and enthusiastic. The three contestants whose voting certificates he sent to headquarters are leading the voting in the entire State of California. They are neck and neck, however, in the race, and no sooner does one gain a certificate than the friends of one of the others make new efforts.

The women who are leading the State of California and who are being voted for in Mr. Miller's theater are Mrs. Bernice Mathis of 702 West 35th Place, Los Angeles, Edith Stump, 929 West Jefferson Street, Los Angeles, and Ethel Brubaker, 945 West Jefferson Street, Los Angeles.

The fact that they are making such determined headway in the contest is rather surprising to their friends for Los Angeles is, of course, much nearer the California Expositions than Eastern cities, so the prize, in their case, of the free trip aboard the "Runaway June" special train is not as costly as it is in the case of an Eastern winner. However, the three women are influenced largely by the honor of representing the State of California.

Mrs. Mathis has had cards printed which she distributes among her friends. They read: "Vote for Mrs. Bernice Mathis, 702 West 35th Place, in 'Runaway June' contest at University Theater, 931 West Jefferson Street."

Metro Forecast

General Manager Rowland Tells What His Company Has in Store for the Next Three Months.

METRO pictures during the seven weeks of its releasing activities have achieved remarkable results. General Manager Richard A. Rowland, speaking for the eighteen participating exchangemen, who control the destinies of the concern, announced in a form letter to his various distributing branches that business in every territory was satisfactory and the volume done from week to week and on an average was far greater than was anticipated when the concern opened two months ago.

"We would have been content," said Mr. Rowland, "to shoulder some slight losses while introducing the program, but to our surprise we are 'on velvet.' Of course our overhead expense is at a minimum, nevertheless we are now, where we thought it would require a year to put us. And we owe our success to nothing but the excellent quality of pictures given us by our producing allies."

For the month of June, Metro, beginning with Orrin Johnson in "Fighting Bob" which was released June 7, will present four other well known plays with absolute Broadway stars in the leading roles. Dorothy Donnelly and J. W. Johnston in "Sealed Valley" will be seen June 28, while during July, these four plays will be sent forth over the Metro route:

July 5, William Faversham in Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way," July 12, Mme. Petrova in Clyde Fitch's "The Girl With The Green Eyes," which in its screen form will be titled "The Man and Woman." This will be Petrova's second appearance on the Metro Program in eight weeks and from reports received on this remarkable emotional actress, the release should prove a most popular one.

On July 19, the first production of the newly formed Quality Pictures Corporation will be seen on the Metro roster. Quality Pictures contain the prominent screen star Francis X. Bushman supported by Marguerite Snow and an all-select cast and the first production, now in its final stages, will be Charles Frohman's former stage play, "The Second in Command," which Mr. Bushman personally selected for initial release from forty available plays.

In addition to Bushman and Miss Snow, the cast of "The Second in Command" will contain Messrs. Clifford and Cuneo and Misses Dunbar and Moore.

The Board of Directors of the Metro Company are undecided as to the fourth July release, but in all probability it will be George Ade's great southern play, "Marsa Covington" in which Edward Connelly, original star of the stage version, will play the title role.

For August, another strong quartet of plays and stars are aligned. Ethel Barrymore will play in her present stage starring vehicle, "The Shadow." Emmet Corrigan the virile American actor will appear in Frank L. Packard's tale "Greater Love Hath No Man." Ann Murdock will be seen in Frohman's "A Royal Family" and Edmund Breese will appear in his second Robert W. Service tale, "The Spell of the Yukon."

The following prominent stars are permanent possessions of the Metro Company and its allies and will, in the future, appear exclusively on the Metro Program.

Emily Stevens, William Faversham, Jane Grey, Orrin Johnson, Ethel Barrymore and Olive Wyndham, with B. A. Rolfe.

Mme. Petrova, Florence Reed, Edmund Breese and Emmet Corrigan with Popular Plays and Players.

Ann Murdock, Dorothy Donnelly and J. W. Johnson, Metro stars at large while Jane Grey, Valli Valli, Lionel Barrymore, Howard Estabrook and Irene Warfield are contracted to appear at intervals.

Quality Pictures' stars are Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow, both of whom will, in the future, for a long term of years, appear solely in Metro releases.

Among the plays to be seen with these stars are:

"Sky Farm," "Her Great Match," "The Mississippi Bubble," "The Silent Voice," "The Girl With The Green Eyes," "The Bridge," "My Madonna," "Barbara Fritchie" and other famous books and plays.

Joseph N. Engel, treasurer of Metro and one of the directing heads of the Popular Plays and Players is in direct communication with the famous operatic star Mary Garden, with the hopes of securing her for appearance in the title role of "Barbara Fritchie." Mr. Engel, through Hugh Massie of London, is trying to induce the temperamental songbird to appear for seven weeks in the spectacular production contemplated of this historical masterpiece. If successful, work will begin August 15 and the picture will be released during November. "Barbara Fritchie" will be staged at Frederick, Maryland, with the help of the city officials and a number of state historians.

KLEINE TO MAKE OWEN DAVIS' "THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR."

Owen Davis' famous play, "The Woman Next Door," is being filmed by George Kleine in his New York studios, work on which was started last week. Irene Fenwick, the dainty star of Kleine's "The Commuters" and "The Spendthrift," will be seen in the leading role with a supporting cast of Broadway players engaged especially for the feature. Della Connor, that pretty ingenue whose work in Kleine's "Officer 666," "Stop Thief," "The Commuters" and "Who's Who in Society," attracted nation-wide attention, and who is now appearing in the Broadway production of "Nobody Home," will be seen in the support of Miss Fenwick.

Crescent and Cross

The Age-Long Warfare Between the Arabs and the French Furnishes a Superb Spectacle in Biograph's Three-Reel Production of Ouida's Famous Novel, "Under Two Flags."

EVER since the discovery that scenes of battle furnish one of the greatest opportunities of the motion picture camera, warfare has been presented on the screen in almost innumerable productions of more or less merit. The Civil War, the last stand of the dying Red Indian race—these are familiar to every motion picture patron. But we do not recall any picture in which is shown the age-long strife between the Arabs and their oppressors—the war which, begun three centuries ago by the Paladins to regain the tomb of Christ, continues even to-day in border skirmishes. This kind of fighting is said by military experts to be extremely difficult; it differs as markedly from the ordinary motion picture conflict as from the modern system of entrenchments and long-range guns. Certainly it is picturesque; and Biograph Company, producer of "The Battle" and other famous war pictures, has once again devised a new kind of fighting thrill by making full use of the France-Arabian warfare in its first three-reel production, "Under Two Flags."

The locations for these battle scenes were carefully chosen in California, that amazing land which seems to contain scenery of every imaginable variety. The illusion of Arabia, with its deserts and palms and olive trees, is said to be as perfect as the illusion of Palestine in "Judith of Bethulia," whose scenes many an authority on Jewish lore has pronounced to be exact counter presentation of scenes in the Holy Land.

The Arabs play an important part in Ouida's story of "Under Two Flags." It is against them that the hero, an expatriated English guardsman, wages deadly warfare in the hope of being killed. He almost has his wish at the great battle of Zaraila, when the tide of fortune is turned against the Arabs by the arrival of reinforcements under the leadership of Cigarette, the daughter of the regiment. And because of this feat of arms the Arabs vow vengeance on the girl.

Their opportunity comes when she is riding alone through the night with the reprieve which is to save her hero, condemned to die at dawn for striking his superior officer. Instead of executing their oath, the Arabs, touched to their warlike hearts by the girl's courage, give her a fresh horse and bid her godspeed.

These are some of the scenes in the massive Biograph production of this famous story. Taken in conjunction with the exciting horserace scenes in the earlier part of the story, they furnish, aside from the compelling drama of the hero's adventures, a spectacle which should rival those for which Biograph is already famous.

"AS THE YEARS GO BY," FIRST CYRIL MAUDE SUBJECT.

As the initial motion picture vehicle for the well known theatrical star, Cyril Maude, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company has selected "As The Years Go By," conceded to be the biggest production ever attempted at the Morosco-Bosworth studios.

The drama embraces the world wanderings of a poet-souled adventurer and will accordingly present scenes typical of every clime and people. One of the innumerable details taxing the resource of the directors is the special train which will take a small army of principals and extras to the Imperial valley for the desert scenes alone.

To appear opposite Mr. Maude, the producers have selected Lenore Ulrich, the prominent star of "The Bird of Paradise," whose first motion picture subject "Kilmeny," produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., will be released the latter part of July. Other prominent artists will be included in the exceptional cast for "As The Years Go By," among which is "Bill" Desmond, the poplar matinee idol.

V-L-S-E Classifies Subjects

Will Fix Price of Features According to Excellence of Production.

WHEN the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay, incorporated for the purpose of booking their big features direct, they expressed the intention of helping the exhibitor to a proper return on his feature exhibitions. They promised a new era in picture play showmanship and a policy of fair dealing.

Startling things were promised and one of the first steps, now that their organization is in good working order, is an announcement that will, figuratively speaking, take the breath away from many of the Feature Interests.

Briefly, "The Big Four" are classifying their productions; they say that while each feature on their program represents the utmost allowed by the subject in dramatic values, artistic photography and construction, some plays do not register in their estimation, as high as others and such subjects, while they must be plays of superior merit to get a place on the V-L-S-E program, are rated as Class B.

Class B subjects will have a lower rental valuation. A maximum charge is placed upon them and no representative of the V-L-S-E will be permitted to accept a higher rental, no matter how strong the competition for service may be in his territory.

This method of doing business is unusual in the film industry, and its inauguration by the four standard companies, establishes it as a permanent part of the business.

Heretofore it has been the custom to place all features on a program in one class as far as rental cost was concerned. The salesman who could get the biggest price for an indifferent subject was considered the best man and the exhibitor contracting for service paid so much per feature irrespective of its real value.

The overthrowing of this custom by the V-L-S-E, will call for an entire change of system not only in business dealings, but in productions as well. It means that exhibitors will have a standard by which to judge values and will be in position to purchase according to value and not by rule.

The first instance of the application of this new system is applied to "Hearts and the Highway," the added release on the V-L-S-E June schedule, and the attitude of the company is reflected in a general letter sent to each branch manager by General Manager Walter W. Irwin. In this general letter, Mr. Irwin quotes a letter from A. E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company, and President of the V-L-S-E, as follows:—

> My dear Mr. Irwin:—
> We are putting out an extra feature in the V-L-S-E Service, "Hearts and the Highway."
> We are afraid that because of the success of "The Juggernaut," and "The Island of Regeneration," you will be tempted to ask high prices for this extra feature, and because of the success the exhibitor has had with the two previously named, he will agree to paying a price equal to the first features issued.
> We, therefore, desire to impress upon you that, while we consider "Hearts and the Highway," a good five reel feature, it is not in the class of "The Juggernaut," or "The Island of Regeneration," and we therefore, wish to put a maximum figure of Fifty ($50.00) Dollars per day on this subject.
> ('Signed) Albert E. Smith.

Continuing his circular letter to the branch managers, Mr. Irwin says:—

> Since the receipt of this letter, I have talked with Mr. Smith, and therefore, am at liberty to add that the Vitagraph Company considers "Hearts and the Highway" to be a class "B" picture, as compared with "The Juggernaut," and "The Island of Regeneration," and for this reason alone, the maximum price is fixed at $50.00 in cities of 20,000 or more inhabitants.
> Accordingly, it must be made clear to the exhibitors that this must not be taken to indicate that we are lowering our prices, for such is not the case; but merely that while "Hearts and the Highway" is a good picture, yet by comparison, it is considered by the Vitagraph to be in class "B"; and that the Vitagraph does not desire to perpetrate any imposition upon the exhibitors by leading them to believe that it is equal in merit to "The Juggernaut," or "The Island of Regeneration."
> (Signed) Walter W. Irwin.

An open and above-board policy of this kind is refreshing and is further explanation of the stand the company is taking. Mr. Irwin stated: "We want to make it clear that it is not a move in the direction of low prices for features. It is merely a question of putting proper valuation on film subjects and it must be remembered, that the four companies in the V-L-S-E are not compelled to find outlet for their productions on the feature program. If a production is not in every way worthy of a place in the V-L-S-E schedule, it is cut down and concentrated into a better small subject and put out as a general release. This means, that only the best from each company becomes a V-L-S-E, yet of these, there is a certainty some will be better and, that the greater superiority of some, may be offset and balanced, they are classified and priced according to rating.

WORLD FILM ACTOR WITNESS OF LINCOLN'S ASSASSINATION.

History at First Hand.

In April, 1865, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, was murdered. The crime was committed at Ford's Theater, Washington, D. C. where Mr. Lincoln and his wife had gone, with some friends, to see the play "Our American Cousin." The murderer was a half demented actor, John Wilkes Booth, who of course was executed in due time for the deed.

Of the witnesses of the dreadful deed it is probable that few remain; among them is W. J. Ferguson, the well known actor, who by the way is appearing in World Film motion pictures.

On the fatal day it appears from the evidence of Mr. Ferguson, that Booth was in and about the theater a great deal, as he had frequently been for several weeks. Indeed he had recently acted there. In the afternoon he quietly prepared for the dreadful deed by making it possible for him to enter the Presidential box unobserved.

Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Ferguson states, took his reception at the hands of the great audiences very quietly. The President was an unostentatious man who did not care much for publicity, and who avoided even the appearance of being attended by protective members of his suite told off to make his personal safety their object. On the fatal night, contrary to what has been stated, and even shown in motion pictures, the President had no bodyguard. Mr. Ferguson is positive that no man was detailed off to sit outside the President's box; and that Booth had no difficulty at all in finding his way into the box.

Again, it is popularly, nay generally, supposed that after Booth had shot the President, the assassin leaped on the stage and cried "Sic semper Tyrannis;" he made his way out of the theater as quickly as possible.

It was sometime before the audience realized in the theater that President Lincoln had been shot. But when the news became known, sorrow and confusion seized the people.

A talk with Mr. Ferguson is an intellectual treat; he is one of the comparatively few living men who enjoyed the personal acquaintance of President Lincoln.

RAFFERTY TURNS THEM AWAY AT TWO THEATERS.

With the famous Orchestra Hall, in Chicago, playing the Rafferty comedies to a packed house, and the handsome Claremont theater, at Broadway and 135th street, New York, to standing room only, it is very easy to predict a great and prosperous future for the Rafferty series of one and two part Irish comedy pictures that are now being produced by the All Celtic Films, Inc., and released through the exchanges of the World Film Corporation, in all the principal cities of America and Canada.

Hundreds of bookings from all over the country are daily pouring into the World Film Corporation's exchanges, for exhibitors are always on the alert for something new in comedies and Charles C. O'Hara's pet creation, Rafferty, has filled a long felt want in this line. J. A. Fitzgerald, is the producer.

DETAIL PERFECT IN "THE SOUL OF PHYRA."

The recent acquisition by Producer Thomas H. Ince of Prince Surrey, a genuine scion of the East Indian royalty, proved its value again during the production of "The Soul of Phyra," a beautiful story of the tropics, to be released on the Mutual program by the Domino-New York Motion Picture Corporation June 17. The young nobleman gave many priceless suggestions as to costuming and scenic requirements and as a result the detail in the picture is flawless. Enid Markey is starred in "The Soul of Phyra."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"A DEAL IN DIAMONDS" (Beauty).

The laughable adventures of a pair of rivals and the object of their affections, is the subject matter of "A Deal In Diamonds," an American "Beauty" release for June 22. The humorous actions hinge around a brooch of glass diamonds set in brass which is palmed off on several occasions as a priceless treasure. Neva Gerber, the charming little "Beauty" star, plays the leading role of Flossy, while Webster Campbell takes the part of Jack, her impecunious admirer. Both are admirable in their interpretations. Briefly, this is the story of the play:

Jack is strongest in Flossy's affections until Harry, with his many dollars, enters the scene. Jack buys a fifteen cent brooch, which he places in an expensive case. Harry loans him money on it, and gives the brooch to Flossy, thinking it valuable. Flossy discovers the deception. The brooch is thrown in a coal scuttle and Sophie, a maid, finds it. Flossy tells Harry the brooch has been lost and Harry, fearing to tell Jack, offers him $50 for it. Jack accepts (who wouldn't?) and with the money thus obtained regains his place in Flossy's affections.

The action is funny throughout. Miss Gerber's captivating smile and eyes are worked to full advantage as the petulant Flossy's heart wavers between the youth with dollars and the youth with nothing but the lining in his clothes. The climax, when Jack and Flossy glide merrily away in a taxicab, leaving Harry with Sophie and the worthless brooch, is carried off in inimitable style.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG AS A CHINESE EMPRESS.

World Film Corporation will shortly release the great photoplay, "The Daughter of Heaven," based upon Pierre Loti's celebrated spectacle of the same name which was produced at the Century Theater, New York, by George C. Tyler, two or three years ago. Clara Kimball Young is to be seen in the title role. Over a hundred thousand dollars was spent on the play before the curtain went up; probably it was the best advertised thing of its kind ever put on the stage. The press agent saw to that. Lieblers actually sent a newspaper man to China to get local color for the play. The costumes, settings and props were ordered and made abroad. Viola Allen was the star.

Pierre Loti was the author of "The Daughter of Heaven." Mons. Loti is now an elderly French naval officer. Point of fact, he's been a sailor many years, but having money has written books and plays; and has lived, when ashore, a la Turque in France and Turkey.

Pierre is (or was,—he's probably fighting now), a bit of a poseur and mystic. When he came here he wouldn't be photoed, or interviewed, or seen, or spoken to. Of course, George Tyler, a clever showman made the most of these transatlantic idiosyncrasies. His press agent handed out some great stuff—the best ever, all about China, Mandarins, Loti and his little ways. Oh-well "The Daughter or Heaven" in spite of all this was, and is, a good play with a strong dramatic motive; it's a Chinese version of Romeo and Juliet.

Now, can you imagine Clara Kimball Young as "Juliet," in Chinese settings? That's what the "Daughter of Heaven" is.

SUPERBA COMPANY TO BURLESQUE "TRILBY."

For the production of a burlesque on "Trilby," the revival of which on the dramatic stage has created much interest this spring, Charles Hutchinson, director of the Superba company has gathered together a splendid cast of fifty players. The role of "Trilby" is played by Edith Thornton, the pretty leading lady of the company, who plays her part with a pair of feet 24 inches long. Her excellent comedy sense makes her an excellent burlesque artist, and she is sure to win fresh laurels for herself in her portrayal of the part. In the restaurant scene into which Trilby wanders to sing, there are fifty people, and the setting has been artistically and expensively made. W. E. Browning, Joe Burke, Max Ulight are the other principals of the comedy. With this picture, which will appear on the United Program, Mr. Hutchison will change the policy of the Superba company for a time at least. From henceforth the United Program followers will see Superba comedies in which there will be large casts rather than two or three players. The regular stock company composed of Edith Thornton, Lean Davis, Cora Becker, Suzzane Willis, W. E. Browning, Joe Burke, Max Ulight and Will Rosser will be augmented in future pictures by new players who will not be permanently chosen until they have appeared in some of the new comedies.

"FIGHTING BOB" (Rolfe).

How closely Director John W. Noble of the B. A. Rolfe forces follows the chaotic affairs of the strife ridden Mexico, in his production of "Fighting Bob" one needs but read the history of the Rio Grande Republic and see the picture to be convinced.

"Fighting Bob" is based on the adventures of an American who joins the revolutionary army of a mythical republic. The auditor needs no titles to know that the mythical land is Mexico.

The picture was staged at Juarez, Mexico, by John W. Noble, under the direct supervision of Mr. Rolfe. General Villa, who made his federal district just south of Juarez, granted the Rolfe concern carte blanche rights for staging the picture and was even willing to play a part (which service was declined with thanks). In the Plaza Del Governador at Juarez, where the small low built adobe houses formed admirable backgrounds for the street fighting scenes, the Rolfe players disported themselves.

In Rua Triumpha, the extreme southern street and the most typical Mexican thoroughfare, the romantic scenes were staged. Olive Wyndham who plays the role of Dulcina, struck up acquaintanceship with a prominent Mexican official family and was aided in her costuming by Senorita Dolores Veinna, daughter of the household.

Orrin Johnson, who plays the title role, procured from Rodriquez Gonzale (Villa's social secretary) use of arms and riding accoutrement for the use of the principals in the picture, with the result that historically and atmospherically "Fighting Bob" is as perfect as it is possible to make it.

"Fighting Bob" is a most timely subject. President Wilson has just delivered his ultimatum to General Villa, Carranza, Zapata, and Jara and trouble is anticipated by Washington officials.

"THE INSURRECTION" (Lubin).

"The Insurrection," a Lubin three-reel naval drama, featuring Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe, released June 16, is an unusually stirring tale of love and intrigue during a South American revolution, and is a noteworthy example of what Lubin is doing with multiple reelers.

This picture will undoubtedly have a wide appeal because of the remarkable naval scenes shown throughout the three reels. These include almost every phase of naval activity—battleships, cruisers, destroyers and submarines; loading and firing torpedoes and submarines; battles on land and sea, and a variety of other unusual scenes.

One of the most striking of all the scenes is the bombardment of a town at night by the thirteen-inch guns on a battleship. The flash of the big guns on the ship, followed by the explosion of the shells in the town, is most realistically shown and provides a climax that is in a class all by itself. George W. Terwilliger is the writer and producer of the drama.

"THE WILD OLIVE" NEXT MOROSCO RELEASE.

As its next release, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces, "The Wild Olive," a picturization of the celebrated Basil King novel, with Myrtle Stedman and Forrest Stanley in the leading characters, supported by an exceptional cast.

In presenting the lovely Myrtle Stedman and Forrest Stanley in the stellar roles of this release, the producers introduce a duo of noted screen and stage favorites whose splendid work together makes them an ideal team. Miss Stedman is one of the most widely known motion picture stars in this country and her popularity among the "fans" has been repeatedly indicated by contests held in various publications, in which she has come out the winner.

Forrest Stanley, whom Oliver Morosco loaned for the photoplay company's production, is the leading man at Mr. Morosco's famous Burbank Theater stock company in Los Angeles, rated the greatest stock organization in America. Mr. Stanley's success in theatricals is well deserved and according to those who have seen his work in this film, his success on the screen will soon equal that of the stage. Supporting the leads are such able artists as Mary Ruby, Herbert Standing, Charles Marriot and Edmund Lowe, among others.

The international scope of the subject presents a spectacular series of scenes extending from the pines and lumber camps of the Alleghanies to the plazas, mansions and steamship docks of gay Argentine. The release date of this production is June 24.

The Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc. are about to release a five reel feature under the title of "The Pursuing Shadow" in which Tom Terriss, the well known English actor, is conceded to have one of the best parts which he has ever handled on the photoplay screen. Mr. Terriss recently entered into a releasing contract with the Picture Playhouse Company and this picture is the first feature starring Mr. Terriss which that company has taken up.

"The Pursuing Shadow," in its regular stage dress, was used by Mr. Terriss' father, William Terriss, with great success both in this country and abroad quite a number of years ago. The product of a pair of able French dramatists, its premier presentation was made in Paris.

The Picture Playhouse people are quite enthusiastic over the prospects of the new release because of the picture's unusual combination of pulling powers. The story is highly melodramatic, its action is stirring in the extreme, and yet, withal, there are big opportunities for the display of Mr. Terriss' abilities as an artist. The Terriss role in the picture is a dual one—that of a polished diplomatic attache and that of a thieving, murderous chauffeur—and the well known actor's efforts in delineating the widely different types recall the work of Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde."

DELIGHTFUL TOUR ON SELIG FLYER.

The tour of the Selig Exposition flyer through the Western States and California promises to be the most successful expedition of its kind ever planned. Hundreds of ladies and gentlemen have booked Pullman reservations on the train de luxe which will leave Chicago, Ill., on Thursday morning, July 8th. The cars will not be of the "tourist" variety but standard Pullmans of latest design.

There is yet plenty of time to book reservations. The sum of $128 covers all expenses excepting meals. The fare includes Pullmans going and coming, hotel accommodations, all side trips, etc. Two great expositions, the national convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors at San Francisco, tours of Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Diego, Santa Barbara, etc., are included in the itinerary. Western cities are planning receptions to the tourists and the Selig Jungle-Zoo, recently completed at Los Angeles, will be thrown open to the eastern guests and motion pictures in the making will be seen and personal meetings with notable motion picture stars will be enjoyed. The Selig Company will send you an artistic booklet for the asking. It is entitled "We Want You With Us In California."

ASSOCIATED TO HAVE CARTOONS AND EDUCATIONALS.

The new Associated Service which is shortly to enter the field with a complete program of twenty-one reels a week will not only consist of single, double and triple reel dramas and comedies but animated cartoons and educational subjects of general interest will also be given a prominent place.

Arthur Bard the General Manager of the Associated has under consideration several pen and ink artists of note, and as soon as negotiations have been completed work on this type of release will begin.

"HEARTS AND THE HIGHWAY" (V-L-S-E).

The five-part Blue Ribbon feature, "Hearts and the Highway," that has been added to the June releases of the V-L-S-E, is a picturization from the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's historical novel of the same name. It was produced under the direction of Wilfred North, with an all-star cast that includes Lillian Walker, Darwin Karr, Donald Hall, L. Rogers Lytton, Charles Kent, Rose Tapley, Charles Eldridge, Ned Finley, Harry Northrup, Charles Wellesley, Anders Randolf, and William Gilson.

The action takes place during the reign of King James II of England, and is a vivid presentation of the plots, counterplots, and intrigues that marked that eventful period in the history of England.

During the run of this feature in the Vitagraph theater in New York City, it attracted capacity audiences, and by virtue of its rapid action, sustained interest and the popular nature of the subject, it well merits a place among the V-L-S-E releases for this month.

In outline, the story deals with the adventures of Lady Katherine, daughter of the Earl of Clanranald in her efforts to secure the pardon of her father for conspiring against the King. In the disguise of a highwayman, she waylays the King's messenger bearing the warrant for her father's execution. She secures and destroys the King's order, and promptly falls in love with the messenger. A series of exciting incidents follow in which the King himself becomes involved, and the final climax brings a happy ending, in which the lovers are seen sailing away from the scene of their perilous experiences.

The feature is a costume piece with all the interest compelling elements of romance and adventure.

"THE KICK-OUT" (Knickerbocker Star Features).

The accompanying picture is from the forthcoming release of Knickerbocker Star Features, for the General Film program. A redblood picture, full of thrills and intense situations involving political intrigue and cunning. The leading parts are taken by Ralph Stuart, as the Mayor; George Howard, as the newspaper man, Miss Helen Case, as the Mayor's daughter and Mac Barnes as the Boss. These players under the direction of Robert T. Thornby, the director, present a drama of action and stirring punches of unusual character.

The script is from the new editor of Knickerbocker Star Features, Rev. C. J. Harris, who, with Director Thornby worked out the plot of action which holds the interest with intensity to the final "Kick-Out" of the Boss; which involves a railroad wreck; the mobbing of the Mayor and the Boss; the wrecking of the newspaper plant; but the final triumph of justice as the automobile engine serves well in running the presses which prove the salvation of the city.

"The Kick-Out" will be in three parts, released June 23, and the first of these regular feature releases on the General Film Company's program for alternate Wednesdays.

"CIRCUS MARY" (Universal).

Mary Fuller is featured as a real circus queen in "Circus Mary," a three-reel drama to be released under the Victor brand of the Universal on June 21. The scenes in which Miss Fuller actually takes part in a circus were filmed during the recent visit of the Frank A. Robins circus to Trenton, N. J.

Director Lucius Henderson, of the Victor studios, and the entire Mary Fuller company journeyed to the New Jersey city where arrangements were made with the municipal authorities for the Universal movie company to take part in the street parade.

Miss Fuller was given "Trixie," one of the circus's black beauties, a circus horse with a long pedigree whose forebears all were veterans of the tan-bark arena. Miss Fuller was cast as a tight rope walker and in the parade was arrayed in a white satin gown with flashing spangles. She was recognized along the route taken by the circus and attracted as much attention from the movie fans as the rest of the circus did.

COLONIAL, CHICAGO, FOR HIGH GRADE PICTURES

The Colonial theater, Chicago, is to open as a photoplay house June 14th, under the direction of Jones, Linick & Schaffer, well known amusement men. The Colonial is perhaps the best known of the Chicago playhouses. It is located on Randolph street in the heart of the "Loop" district and, during the years it has been playing the highest grade of combination attractions it has been extensively advertised as "The Theater Beautiful." The exact policy of the house has not yet been determined but it is assured that the shows will be of the highest grade and that everything possible will be done to take advantage of the great prestige the house has in Chicago with the idea of making it the Windy City's most pretentious home of the photoplay.

J. L. Kempner, of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., returned from Chicago Tuesday morning, June 8, after a ten days' trip in the interest of both the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Co. and the Prohibition Film Corporation. While in Chicago his dealings were principally with Jones, Linick & Schaffer, who have purchased extensive exhibition right for "Prohibition" in the mid-western territory and, through the Central Film Co., have contracted to conduct an aggressive selling campaign for Radium Gold Fibre Screens. H. A. Spanuth, general manager of the Central Film Co., is to direct the Radium Gold Fibre sales around Chicago and his first stroke of business was to arrange for the installation of a Radium Gold Fibre Screen in the Colonial.

MARIE DRESSLER IN LUBIN COMEDY.

Bubbling over with fun and "pep" and keeping everyone in roars of laughter, the irresistible Marie Dressler has been romping through scene after scene in the Lubin studio this week in her new five reel comedy, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise."

The new comedy, which is a riot of merriment and new ideas along comedy lines, was written especially for Miss Dressler by Acton Davies, widely known as an author and dramatic critic, and is one of the best vehicles she has ever had to display her unique ability as a comedienne. The production will be one of the most elaborate ever made in the Lubin studio.

Howell Hansel, who produced "The Million Dollar Mystery" and who has achieved an enviable reputation as a stage and picture director, will have charge of the production, and will be assisted by Albert F. Mayo. The company supporting Miss Dressler is an unusually strong one and is headed by Tom McNaughton, who has made an international reputation for himself as a comedian.

Most of the interior scenes for the comedy will be filmed in the big Philadelphia studio and the exteriors will be taken at the Lubin ranch at Betzwood, Pa., where a large force of artists, propertymen and others have been working for the past three weeks making preparations for the arrival of the Dressler company.

EXPERT FILM MATCHING.

There is a bit of film matching in "The Melting Pot," the Cort Film Corporation's production of Israel Zangwill's famous play put on at the Hippodrome last week which has called forth considerable coment because of the circumstances under which the two scenes involved were taken. In an interior scene, Walker Whiteside, as the young Jew is shot through the shoulder as he kneels facing an open door. The puff of smoke which indicates the path of the bullet comes from outside the door and he drops to the floor.

The shot is shown to be fired in an exterior in which Fletcher Harvey, as the Russian Baron, levels his pistol at the figure presumed to be inside the door shown in the exterior scene. When a square from each of the two pieces of film are matched, the smoke cloud on the interior matches perfectly with that from Harvey's pistol in the exterior. As a matter of fact, the interior was taken a week before Mr. Harvey was engaged to work in the picture and it was two weeks after he began work that he fired the shot.

"SANDS OF TIME" (Selig).

"Sands of Time" is a Selig three-reel Diamond Special, written and produced by Colin Campbell, and released Thursday, June 24. "Sands of Time" carries a story which can be classed as out of the ordinary. The "usual thing" will nowhere be found in this story of true heart interest. Colin Campbell, who produced "The Spoilers," "The Carpet From Bagdad" and other great Selig productions, has put his very best talents into this Diamond Special, which is enacted by an all-star cast of players and abounds in beautiful scenic and lighting effects and those ensembles for which Mr. Campbell is deservedly famous.

Dr. MacGregor has devoted his life to science and has achieved fame and fortune as a surgeon. It is never too early nor too late for him to go to the aid of the suffering. Dr. MacGregor, now well along the pathway of life, marries beautiful Enid. Dr. Gordon Blake is Dr. MacGregor's assistant. Enid longs for the undivided attention of her husband. She cannot understand why he must devote almost every minute of the day to professional pursuits. She naturally turns to Dr. Blake for comfort. Blake plots to win Enid MacGregor. He tempts her from her husband's home. She secures a divorce. Then to her horror, she discovers that Dr. Blake is unwilling to marry her. She ends her own life, realizing finally that the wages of sin is death.

Dr. MacGregor stands in the dissecting room ready to make a scientific demonstration to the assembled medical students. A body covered with a sheet is rolled into the pit by attendants. Dr. MacGregor prepares to demonstrate an important surgical detail. With scalpel poised, ready to make an incision, he removes the sheet from the face of the lifeless form. The scalpel drops from his hand. He stands rigid with horror. He gazes, as if one spellbound, on the mobile countenance of the beautiful woman lying there before him. It is his long-lost wife—his beautiful Enid—and the sands of time in the hour glass are nearly run. And the tallow dip is sputtering at its end. A hand appears, and the light is sniffed out.

PATHE SHOWS FIRST OFFICIAL WAR PICTURES.

Pathe is showing the first official war pictures to reach this country from France, and judging from those already exhibited they form a series of extraordinary interest. The pictures have been approved and censored by the French military authorities and edited by the French Cinematograph Chamber of Commerce, with a view to their being as widely shown throughout the world as possible.

The first pictures received showed Lord Kitchener, General Joffre, President Poincare, Marshal French and Minister of War Millerand in conference—the first time that such a number of celebrities have been shown together in a war film. Others picture the French army in their new "invisible" gray uniforms which are taking the place of the well known red trousers and blue coats. In fact each of the pictures has possessed a marked human and historical interest. It is promised that they will get better and better.

"HEIGHTS OF HAZARD" (Vitagraph).

What will probably be one of the most thrilling scenes ever photographed by the Vitagraph Company will be the filming of a tiger hunt, one of the many big scenes in "Heights of Hazard," a picturization by Eugene Mullin, of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's interesting story of the same name, now nearing completion under the direction of Capt. Harry Lambart. In staging the tiger hunt, two elephants, a tiger and fully two hundred people will be used, the cost of this scene alone approximating five thousand dollars. "Heights of Hazard" will be listed as a Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts and will serve to introduce Charles Richman as a Vitagraph star in the portrayal of "Billy Williams, the Unknown." Mr. Richman will be supported by Eleanor Woodruff as Olivia and Charles Kent as Mr. Martindale, her father.

"LARRY O'NEILL, GENTLEMAN" (Universal).

Taking her life in her hands, Violet Mersereau, star at the Universal's new glass studios at Covtesville, N. J., recently made a trip through the clouds with Aviator Fredericks at Hempstead, L. I., as a feature of the two-reel Imp drama, "Larry O'Neill, Gentleman," which will be released on June 24.

Miss Mersereau was quite unnerved on March 15 when she first learned of the unfortunate death of Aviator Stites at Universal City. She and Mr. Stites were old friends. Nevertheless when Director H. C. Easton made arrangements for her to make a flight with a well known aviator Miss Mersereau put aside all thoughts of her own personal danger and consented to make the aerial trip.

The photoplay was written by W. A. Lathrope and one scene shows an heiress aeroplaning. A young machinist, whom her father has taken from the shops and pushed forward in society in support of his theory that a gentleman can be made and must not necessarily be born to his station, falls in love with the curly-haired blonde heiress and a pretty romance develops.

"THE OLD CLOTHES SHOP" (Reliance).

There is delightful romance interpreted by screen actors of standing in "The Old Clothes Shop," the Reliance two-reeler in which Thomas Jefferson stars. Mr. Jefferson is the old clothes man. He is ably supported by Bessie Buskirk as his granddaughter Mina, W. E. Lawrence, Alice Field, Vester Perry and Charles Gorman are other principals. The production is the work of Director Giles Warren.

The appearance of a man of Mr. Jefferson's screen and speaking stage standing, in one and two-reel Majestic and Reliance subjects will be hailed by the exhibitors with hearty approval.

Scene from "The Old Clothes Shop" (Reliance).

"The Old Clothes Shop" constitutes a delightful visualization of the dreams of a romantic young girl who is forever reading novels. She constantly sees before her in the people of the real world her romantic characters. She acts on impulse in dealing with them. Strangely enough she is seldom wrong.

Mr. Jefferson has one of those mellow parts for which he is well known. Pathos and humor get across in his acting just as they did in those of his eminent father, the late Thomas Jefferson.

"THE VIVISECTIONIST" (Kalem).

In its two-act drama, "The Vivisectionist," Kalem has produced a story of decided timely interest. The publicity accorded this subject by newspapers and periodicals has naturally excited the interest of the public, and "The Vivisectionist" should reap the benefit.

The principal character of the story is Dr. Jardine, whose experiments in vivisection have made him confident of his ability to emulate the results obtained by Dr. Garel, of the Scene from "The Vivisectionist" (Kalem).

Rockefeller Institute, who is said to have succeeded in transferring a limb from one human body to another. Consequently, when Jardine's brother loses an arm as the result of an accident, the surgeon determines to attempt the operation.

Fearing lest an offer to some person for an arm would excite suspicion, Dr. Jardine looks about him for some person who would consent to the operation. He finds the very man he seeks in Murphy, an escaped convict. Murphy, however, has decided objections to parting with an arm, even though he is offered a good price for it. Hence, the surgeon is compelled to overpower the man and make him a prisoner.

Everything is in readiness for the operation when the police, who have gotten wind of the experiment, arrive upon the scene. Unusual suspense is worked up in the course of the story and the arrival of the raiders comes as a decided relief. The cast, a strong one, includes Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson, William H. West, Paul Hurst and Thomas Lingham. "The Vivisectionist" will be released in regular service Wednesday, June 23.

"THE SILENT CO-ED" (Thanhouser).

It was a big day for Director Arthur Ellery at the Thanhouser studio when the big scenes came on for "The Silent Co-Ed," in which Peggy Burke plays the captain of the basketball team. Ellery is one of these men to whom the ladies simply represent names in the cast, and here he was with a good gym-full of pretty chickens. It was up to him to show them how to tackle each other in the game, and the fact that they wore bloomers didn't make him any more comfortable. The girls, some of them experienced players, pranced and capered about and when he finally found himself the center of a hot scrimmage he gave it up and called for assistance. Everybody in trousers volunteered and that's all that saved the day for him.

MANY NEW YORK THEATERS TAKE UNITED SERVICE.

The growing popularity of the short story picture of quality is being proved again this week by the fact that four new motion picture theaters in New York alone have been added to the list of those in which the United Program will be exhibited. Manager Fred Holderman, of the New York Exchange, announces that Keeney's 3rd Avenue theater at Thirty-first and Third avenue, the Bryant theater, at Forty-second street, just off of Broadway, and the Unique and Comedy theaters on Fourteenth street have annexed the United Film Service releases this week, and that the New York market alone is growing so steadily that ten new theaters will be added to the list next week. Three of the theaters at Yonkers have been provided with short story picture plays by the United, and with the opening of Hopp Hadley's Airdome on Broadway near MacLean Saturday night, in which not only United pictures will be shown, but in which United stars will appear in person from time to time, an additional boost will be given the advocates of quality photoplays of one and two parts. Children's films are still in great demand. The Lyric theater at Hackensack is the most recent addition to the number of wide awake houses which are giving special matinees for children, for which the United Film Service fairy and juvenile story films are in special demand.

NEW PATHE-BRAY CARTOON COMEDY.

Pathe announces for release in the near future a cartoon comedy by L. M. Glackens of the Bray studios, under the title of "When Knights Were Bold." Mr. Glackens harks back to medieval times for the subject of this comedy and it is an exceedingly laughable skit, showing the adventures of Sir Cam M. Bert, a doughty knight. Sir Cam's adventures with a dragon are something new in cartoons and very ludicrous. After finally having slain the dragon he receives as a reward the hand of the King's daughter, and finds, alas, that the game was not worth the candle.

K. & B. GET MORE STARS.

Katherine Kaelred, regarded as America's foremost character actress, and Orrin Johnson, the noted Broadway star, have just been signed, it was announced by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, to appear in big productions of the Kessel and Baumann organization under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Mr. Johnson is expected to arrive at the Santa Monica studios within the next six weeks, while Miss Kaelred will not begin work in the films until three or four weeks later.

Much is written in the annals of theatrical achievements about both these latest recruits to the N. Y. M. P. fold. Miss Kaelred scored her greatest triumph as The Woman in support of Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was." Later, she placed herself under the management of Winthrop Ames, appearing in many of the successful productions at the New Theater in New York City. Orrin Johnson long has been a favorite with Broadway audiences, where the greater number of his successes have been won. He will be particularly well remembered for his work as the Priest in James Halleck Reid's drama "The Confession" and as the tired business man in James Forbes' comedy, "The Commuters."

In addition to Miss Kaelred and Mr. Johnson, the other legitimate stars whose names are now on Kessel and Baumann contracts are Willard Mack, Frank Keenan, Truly Shattuck, Julia Dean, Jane Grey, Lewis S. Stone, Dustin Farnum, Forrest Winant, H. B. Warner, and Henry Woodruff. This list, of course, is exclusive of the names of William S. Hart, Bessie Barriscale and others who are regular fixtures at Inceville.

"PIRATES BOLD" (Majestic).

In the Majestic childhood releases Director D. W. Griffith through his subordinates is doing for children as great a service as he did for the adult generation in "The Birth of a Nation." "Pirates Bold," the Majestic child comedy produced under the direction of the brothers Franklin is certain to attract children.

There are nine principals in "Pirates Bold," only two of whom are adults. Violet Radcliffe is the pirate chief. She is six and plays all the villains. Other principals are Carmen De Rue, Harry Essman and Baby Radcliffe.

In "Pirates Bold," little Waldo goes to the beach with his nurse on an outing. The nurse wanders off with the chauffeur. Bob and Tilly decide to give Waldo a scare. Bob, played by little Violet Radcliffe pretends to be a pirate chief and with Tilly and two other children seize Waldo and carry him off to a pirate cave. The children find a motorboat aboard which they put Waldo. The boat runs away to sea but help comes in another boat.

The whole constitutes a visualized children's picture book which is possible only in this day and generation.

"OUT OF THE SILENCE" (United).

"Out of the Silence" is a well chosen title for the Lariat photodrama of two parts which will appear on the United Program June 19. The setting of the picture is in the vastnesses of the Yosemite Valley, where Fred Madison, a victim of the drug habit, and his wife, lose their way on their journey to a sanitarium where Fred hopes to overcome his pernicious habit. In the wonderful country and the clear air of "God's country" Fred is restored to his natural self. The wildness of the picture is added to by the snakes and coyotes which actually inhabit the country in which the photography was made and which add a bit of almost terrifying realism to the drama. Another interesting feature is the war dance of Francisco Trujillo, the little Indian boy who lives with his parents in the cliff dwellers' abodes near the Garden of the Gods. William V. Mong, Reeva Greenwood and Walter Fischter play the leading roles, Mong as the drug victim, Miss Greenwood as his wife and Walter Fischter as the young doctor.

"THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW" (Lubin).

In "The Valley of the Shadow," the eleventh number of the "Road O' Strife" serial, released June 14, in which the Lubin Company is featuring Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson, the action quickens decidedly and takes a number of exciting turns.

Alene's execution is only a day off. Robert Dane frantically strains every faculty to solve the murder mystery. He believes that in the silver cup is the secret of Gilbert's death—that the mysterious words on the cup indicate a clue. Dane appeals to the court officials for permission to experiment with the cup, but is refused. He then steals the cup when the courthouse is untenanted.

Dane is fired upon by the watchman and badly wounded. Ignoring the wound through which his life blood is ebbing, Dane reaches home and hastily begins experimenting to prove by chemical analysis his startling theory is fact. There is little time to lose. It is now a matter of hours only before the law will demand of Alene her life.

"BRAGA'S DOUBLE" (Essanay).

This is the first of a series of photoplays taken from the thrilling "Adventures of Dominica," by Henry C. Rowland. Dominica Meduna is a beautiful and educated girl, utterly careless of other people's property, but perfectly circumspect personally. She is a genteel thief and associates with the criminal class of Paris. In this particular photoplay she engages a double for Braga, a South American criminal, to escort her about the city so that she can prove an alibi for her accomplice, who is bent on killing Legrand, a police officer. The plot fails and Braga is forced to flee the city to save his life. There is a thrill in every one of these adventures, while the naive character of Dominica is ever a source of surprise and charm. While the same characters appear in this series of five photoplays, yet each of the two-act plays is complete in itself and independent of all the others. The first release is June 22.

"THE SPENDTHRIFT" (Kleine).

George Kleine's film version of Porter Emerson Browne's "The Spendthrift," scheduled for release through the Kleine offices June 21, contains a series of scenes that will no doubt make their own subtle appeal to the feminine contingent in every audience.

These are the scenes laid in the New York establishment of Lucile, Ltd. (Lady Duff-Gordon), the internationally known modiste. They were made with the direct co-operation of Scene from "The Spendthrift" (Kleine).

Lady Duff-Gordon, and the models who appear clad in several of Lucile's most bewitching creations were selected from the bevy of statuesque beauties permanently employed at the West 57th street establishment. Miss Hebe White appears in an unusually fetching white lace and bonnet costume; Miss Yaha Grey in blue taffeta; Miss Phyllis in a blue brocade evening creation, and Miss Dolores in a dainty evening robe of coral chiffon.

Some of the most beautiful dresses shown in the picture are worn by Miss Irene Fenwick, who plays the lead of Frances Ward, the extravagant wife of Richard Ward, whose craze for style leads to mischief. "The Spendthrift" is in six parts.

"A NIGHT OUT" (Vitagraph).

The latest recruit from the legitimate stage to join the ranks of the Vitagraph Players is the international comedienne, May Robson, who has been engaged to appear in a picture version of her latest comedy success, "A Night Out." Miss Robson in her career as an actress, has won the hearts and tickled the risibility of millions of people all over the world by her inimitable mimic art and hopes to repeat her success in the silent drama. The stage version of "A Night Out" was written by Miss Robson in collaboration with Charles T. Dazey and has served as a starring vehicle for the popular actress for the past three years. Its adaptation for the films was made by Frank Dazey under the direct supervision of Miss Robson and in the pictured form will retain all the essential points that made of it such a positive success on the legitimate stage. Miss Robson will bring to the Vitagraph with her, Mr. Paul Decker, who has been her leading man during the five years of her former stage success, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," and also in "A Night Out," and will add materially to the success of the picture because of his knowledge of Miss Robson's characteristics and mannerisms. In addition to Miss Robson and Mr. Decker, "A Night Out" will be presented by an all-star cast of Vitagraph Players, and produced under the able direction of George D. Baker.

"A MIX-UP IN MALES" (MinA).

While "Life's Mysteries," released June 3, and "Father Forgot," released June 10—the first productions of the new series of MinA films—proved to be comedies of exceptional and unusual merit, the release of this brand for June 17, called "A Mix-up in Males," not only maintains the high standard set by the preceding picture, but possibly shows even a greater mirth-provoking power.

The story centers around old Pop Rounder, who plays the cabarets for all their worth. His wife, Henrietta, wires that she will return home from a journey on the night which Rounder has arranged to spend with a chum and his friends at their favorite palace. The chum persuades Rounder to accompany the party in spite of his wife's instructions, promising to bring him home in time to get his better half. But when the time arrives for him to leave Rounder has become so imbued with the carefree spirit of his surroundings that he refuses to follow his chum's pleadings. The chum then hires a couple of huskies to take Rounder home forcibly and to put him to bed. Through a mix-up Rounder escaped and young Jerry is seized in his place. The trouble arising from this error comes fast and furious and provides a wealth of comedy material.

In the cast are Jack Conners, William Ryno, George Ovey, Goldie Colwell, Janet Sully, Dolly Larkins and others. The picture is directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

SELIG LOBBY DISPLAYS POPULAR.

The lobby displays and other aids to exhibitors put forth by the Selig Polyscope Company in connection with the Selig Red Seal play, "The Millionaire Baby," are receiving many deserved compliments. "Lobby displays on 'Millionaire Baby' received and are great," is the tenor of letters received from managers of branch V. L. S. E. exchanges. The lobby display comes enclosed in a compact case of leather easily shipped and easily opened. There are striking cut-outs in colors; pennants, large photographs of scenes in the play, beautiful banners and novelties. Other than these the Selig Company is issuing special stories in plate and mat forms which are sent free to newspapers and which prove great aids to the exhibitors showing these Red Seal plays. Beautiful slides in colors have also been prepared. A beautiful booklet on "The Millionaire Baby" printed in colors has also been issued and copies will be found at the V. L. S. E. exchanges. The Selig Company is sparing no time nor expense to give exhibitors showing Selig Red Seal plays every assistance possible.

"SEEING NEW YORK" FOR STATE RIGHTS.

The Educational Film Co., now under the management of Chas. A. Goettler, offers state rights for their first release, entitled "Seeing New York With the Movie Man." This film was recently shown at the English Opera House, Indianapolis, Ind., and at the Hartman theater, Columbus, O., winning most favorable notices. Two other productions, highly interesting and of vital importance, are under way.

MICHIGAN SCHOOL BUYS SCREEN IN ST. LOUIS.

E. R. Anderson, of the Minusa Cine Products Company, reports an order for a Minusa Gold Fibre screen from the Michigan State Normal School at Ypsilanti, Mich. The screen is to be used in the lecture room of the college, where a special surface is needed for the projection of the many scientific films that are used in the course for students and teachers in the State Normal.

"FIGHTING BLOOD" (Biograph).

For the third release in the series of Biograph re-issues directed by D. W. Griffith, which are being released in the regular service of the General Film Company every Friday, Biograph have selected the one reel spectacle "Fighting Blood."

Exhibitors will recall when this production was first released in the summer of 1911, at which time the majority of exhibitors booked it for two and three return engagements. It is safe to say that a similar demand will prevail after this subject has been released; for, although it was produced four years ago, it sets a standard that is very seldom equalled by some of the larger feature pictures of today. At that time padding was unheard of, there was no demand for four and five reel pictures, and everything had to be done in one reel.

"Fighting Blood" is on a par with "The Battle" and "Love in an Apartment Hotel," the previous releases in this remarkable series of re-issues. Robert Harron, Florence La Badie, George Nichols, Kate Bruce and William J. Butler have the more prominent parts in this production; while hundreds of others help to make "Fighting Blood" a spectacle that will be long remembered.

Notes of the Trade

THE Star Feature Film Company have opened offices at 507 Boston Block, Minneapolis, Minn., and will cater to the Northwestern trade.

Oscar A. C. Lund, who for the past year has been with the World Film Corporation and who for three years before that was with the Eclair Company producing northwestern pictures, has allied himself with the Universal Film Mfg. Co. Mr. Lund for a time operated his own company in New York and under the firm name "The Washington Film Co." produced "The Dollar Mark," "The Marked Woman," and "M'liss" in addition to other Broadway legitimate successes. He also has written several plays in the Swedish, his native language.

Wallace Beery has three trained rats which go through wonderful "stunts" in Essanay's photoplay "The Broken Pledge." It is a camping scene and Beery and his friends are trying to scare three girls who are camping nearby and have taken a pledge never to marry.

Syd. Chaplin, Keystone funmaker, has been ill at his home for the past week, but is expected to be about in a few days. Mr. Chaplin has been working unusually hard for several weeks and suffered a nervous breakdown.

Otis Turner and Hobart Bosworth are well along with the production of Olga Printzlau Clarke's "The Scarlet Sin," a four-reel story of the coal region and they show a real man—a clergyman—who leaves the wealth and pomp of his wealthy city parish to attempt the religious regeneration of a little mining town. Hobart Bosworth, will portray the minister. Supporting him are Jane Novak, Frank Elliott, Helen Wright and Hart Hoxie.

Jacques Jaccard is preparing a cast for the first pictures since his return to the Universal Company. The story is one which Mr. Jaccard wrote himself under the title, "Promise to Pay." Since Mr. Kerrigan is still in the hospital, no regular cast has been assigned as yet to Mr. Jaccard. It is generally understood, however, that he will pick up a company of people about the studio who are not working and use them until such time as Mr. Kerrigan is again able to work. Lon Chaney, director of the Victor Company, is about to start production on a one reel story by Milton M. Moore, entitled "The Violin Maker." Vera Sisson, William Quinn, T. D. Crittenden and Mr. Chaney himself will appear in the principal roles.

Del Henderson, one of Mack Sennett's Keystone directors, has been playing a part in a picture that is being finished this week. This is the first work before the lens that Mr. Henderson has done since joining the Keystone forces.

The working script for "The Crisis," Winston Churchill's popular novel, to be released as a Selig Red Seal Play, is well under way at the Selig Mission studio. Editor Lanier Bartlett has written a 25,000 word script which retains all the original atmosphere of the book.

"The Twelve Superior Gods" is the striking title of Frank Lloyd's next Laemmle production. The story is an unusual one as the title intimates and offers plenty of opportunity for the company's display of talent. Marc Robbins, Gretchen Lederer, Millard K. Wilson and Frank Lloyd will play the leading roles.

Pauline Moran receives many inquiries as to whether she is the real Pauline Moran of international vaudeville fame. SHE IS! But she is with the Keystone Company at present.

Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., through their traveling representative, L. C. Baxley, report good business throughout the States of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Baxley has covered this territory for five years in the film interests.

The Stanley Theatre Company, of Philadelphia, has installed a large Day and Night Screen in their Alhambra Theatre. Considering that this theatre is 85 feet deep and 115 feet wide, at the rear, it is surprising how wonderfully clear the pictures are from all parts of the house.

Victoria Forde is "The Peach" and Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons are "The Pair" in "A Peach and a Pair," a Nestor (Universal) comedy which director Al E. Christie has just completed. The story was written by Mr. Christie and contains some ludicrous situations.

The next release of the Metro Pictures Corporation, on their regular program will be Rolfe's production of Rennold Wolf and Channing Pollock's comedy drama "My Best Girl," a five act feature, in which Max Figman and Lois Meredith play the leading roles. It will go over the Metro route Monday, June 14th.

Marshall Neilan who recently joined the Selig Company as a Director, was made happy this week by a wire from New York City informing him of the arrival of a wonderful ten pound boy at the Neilan home. Mrs. Neilan was formerly Miss Bambrick, a Biograph star.

Director Robert Leonard and Harvey Gates are busy at work preparing a screen script from the memories of Owen Kildair, published under the title, "My Mamie Rose." The picture will be released in all probability, under the same title as the original story, by the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

Dave Morris has recovered from his recent illness and is back at the Keystone studio in his old time form.

The spacious roof garden atop of the Riviera Theatre at Broadway and 97th street, was opened by the Fox Amusement Co. on May 31st last. The projection equipment is of the latest design and includes two motor driven Simplex machines.

Miss Olga Printzlau Clark has joined the scenario department of the Universal Pacific Coast studios. Miss Clark until recently had been doing scenario work for the American Company at Santa Barbara.

Jack Conway, formerly a leading man at the Reliance-Majestic studios, has been made a director. He is now engaged on his first effort, a two reel Majestic, "The Old High-Chair."

"The Whisper" is the next vehicle in which Bessie Eyton, the Selig actress, will star.

Fifth Annual Convention
Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America
and
Exposition of Motion Picture Arts
San Francisco, July 13 to 16, 1915

ITEMS OF INTEREST ABOUT THE CONVENTION

It is to be held in the most magnificent auditorium in America, as shown above. The convention chamber seats 2,000.

The exposition salon is larger than any heretofore used, but from present indications additional floor space will be needed.

There will be elaborate displays of all equipment and supplies used in any and all branches of the motion picture industry.

Three miniature theaters will be operated continuously each afternoon and evening, showing the latest and best in pictures and their projection.

The Convention closes Friday night with the greatest ball in motion picture history. The dance floor in the Auditorium is 197 feet square, and is entirely unobstructed by pillars or posts. The galleries have a seating capacity of 5,000.

Seventy-five film stars will be brought on a special train from Los Angeles studios to attend this dance.

You can visit the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco and the San Diego Exposition; also the great motion picture studios of the Pacific Coast without extra expense. An opportunity like this will never be repeated in a life time.

Plan to arrive in San Francisco not later than Tuesday morning, July 13th, and spend the entire week.

Saturday, July 17th, is motion picture day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It is also Liberty Bell Day.

Hotel rates are very reasonable. The Convention Committee is making reservations and guaranteeing the rates. Accommodations may be secured as follows: One person in single room, without bath, $1.00 per day up; with bath, $1.50. Two people, with bath, $2.00 per day up.

Address requests for hotel accommodations or information to Convention Committee, Room 306, 948 Market Street, San Francisco.

To Be a Film Palace

St. Louis' "Cinderella," Biggest Dance Hall in the West, Is to Show Motion Pictures—Will Seat 4,000 People—Special Features House Will Have—Other Theaters Owned by the Freunds—Why They Turned Over Big Dance Hall.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis (2643a Armand Pl.) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Cinderella, one of the largest and most luxuriously appointed dancing palaces in the country, which was built at an enormous cost on Cherokee street a few years ago when the dancing craze swept the county, is to be made into a gigantic moving picture theater by its owners, Harry and Eugene Freund. The Cinderella has been one of the famous resorts in the country and one of the show places of St. Louis, famed for its great patronage and for the many brilliant social functions held there, assemblages comprised of the most select society of the state.

The plans that will convert the Cinderella to a moving picture theater will be carried out in the same lavish scale that characterized the management of the dance resort. Seats for four thousand patrons will be provided and a promenade extending all around the auditorium will be a unique feature. Rest rooms, a children's play room in charge of nurses will be maintained in the basement, and over three thousand private lockers for the storage of wraps will be at the service of the patrons, with free checking privileges.

The Freunds are well known and prominently connected in amusement circles in St. Louis. They have successfully managed the Favorite theater and Airdome on Cherokee and Ohio avenues, and the Virginia theater. Eugene Freund says that the Cinderella will be converted into a picture show simply to satisfy the demand of the people for moving pictures, which are proving to be more and more a permanent fixture of every day life.

TWELVE ST. LOUIS SCHOOLS WIN PATHESCOPES.

The St. Louis Times has finished a contest which resulted in the awarding of twelve Pathescope projection machines to as many schools in the city. The results of the contest and the names of the winning schools were announced June 1. Great interest was taken in the contest, a friendly but spirited rivalry developed which resulted in teachers and students receiving a great deal of information as to the merits of moving pictures as a means of education as well as entertainment. The winning schools were Bryan Hill, Fanning, Garnett, Mount Pleasant, Webster and Wyman, of the public school class; Holy Cross and Trinity, Lutheran; and St. Aloysius and St. Liborius, Catholic. Ten machines were originally intended for distribution, but one each was given to the Bannaker and Morganford Schools as consolation prizes, bringing the total up to twelve.

The pupils of the St. Aloysius School celebrated the winning of their machine by giving an entertainment in the school hall on the Sunday night following, having as added attractions a progressive euchre and peanut party charging twenty-five cents admission, the proceeds to be used for the renting of films for future entertainments.

NEW MUTASCOPE THEATER OPENS.

Pohlman and Zimmerman have opened the Mutascope theater on Olive street, a short distance east of the original Mutascope, one of the oldest theaters in St. Louis, which was also operated by the same firm before it was torn down to make room for a large building. The new Mutascope is a fine example of a modern motion picture theater, up to date in every respect, seats six hundred people, and as it is well known for the excellent program the management maintains at the old Mutascope, and is in a thickly settled neighborhood, it is guaranteed an excellent patronage. Pohlman and Zimmerman also own and operate the Comet at 21st and Market streets.

A BIG THEATER FROM A LITTLE NICKEL GREW.

The Ashland theater, which was opened by D. T. Williams and wife at 3520 North Newstead avenue last week, is a living example of the power of little things. The Moving Picture World recently printed in this column an interesting account of the Williamses and the steady growth of their business. Now they have opened their brand new building that cost sixteen thousand dollars to build and equip. A good program for five cents admission has been their slogan, and the new place is managed on the same plan and at the same price. The Ashland seats 1,000 persons, is complete in every detail, and is the only big theater that has been built in St. Louis that does not contain a stage. Mr. Williams says that pictures have been the means of his success, and since vaudeville will have no place on his program there has been no place made for it in the theater.

ST. LOUIS JOTTINGS.

The Hippodrome, Sixth and Walnut streets, which after closing the regular season of vaudeville put on five weeks of Metro features, has closed for the hot months. Col. Alf. V. Oldham, who came on here to manage the Hippodrome, will return to Louisville, Ky., where he has extensive outdoor amusement enterprises that will engage his attention this summer until the regular theatrical season opens in the fall.

The Mozart Airdome presents a very beautiful appearance since the improvements undertaken by the management have been completed. A new entrance has been constructed, in the shape of three massive pillars that form a triangle, each topped with a big ornamental light. Swinging baskets of blooming flowers and trailing vines are suspended from the cross pieces that connect the pillars, and in the middle of the space a large Roman urn three feet in height is filled with growing plants.

GOLDIE SPURR SUES MAYOR.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

GOLDIE SPURR, of Marion, Ind., exhibitor, arrested in the test cast of the Sunday law at Marion, has filed suit against Mayor J. O. Batchelor, of Marion, for $1,000 damages for false imprisonment. The suit is being tried in Indianapolis on a change of venue from the Marion court. Mrs. Spurr charges that when she was arrested she was placed in jail without opportunity to give bail and only obtained her freedom by use of a writ of habeas corpus. The odor of disinfectant, she charges, made her ill. Mayor Batchelor testified that he was out of town when the arrest was made and did not know of the case until the day following. He admitted having ordered the arrest of any one who should attempt to violate the Sunday laws by opening a picture show. The case is being heard before a jury.

INDIANA SHORT ITEMS.

John Truelock, operating the Jefferson; W. C. Halstead, operating the Princess; J. Kelley, at 819 Indiana avenue; George Barrows, running the Veribest and Triway, in West New York street, Indianapolis, are airdomes that have opened in the first week of June.

Exhibitor A. B. Conant, proprietor of the Gem, at Yuma, Col., writes that his recent tenant in an Indiana theater that he owns at Bunker Hill decamped owing quite a bill for rent, but that the house is again open and thriving under the management of Sickler & Sickler, of Colorado.

"The Lure of the Mask" was presented for private view at the Bobbs-Merrill publishing house art gallery in Indianapolis. The Bobbs-Merrill Company published the novel, which was by Harold McGrath. The picturization of the story was done by the American Film Company and is shortly to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Ike Beitman, formerly engaged in the clothing business in Indianapolis, has bought the Savoy theater, in West Indianapolis.

The Colonial theater, Indianapolis, which has been running vaudeville and pictures, opened May 29 to run exclusively pictures during the summer months. This is the largest theater in Indianapolis now running exclusively pictures.

The Film theater, Frankfort, opened recently with three reels of pictures and two vaudeville acts. The program is to be changed three times a week.

The Airdome, at Arlington, Ind., has made the fourth start of the season, and the weather looks promising for a continuance.

Manager Sirk of the Gem, North Manchester, Ind., is making extensive improvements at his playhouse.

J. W. Davis has opened an airdome at Corydon, Ind.

The Orpheum, Lafayette, Ind., is giving away a Ford 1915 model, one $65 diamond ring and $25 in gold to the one receiving the first, second and third largest number of votes in a contest to close June 30. Votes are given with admission tickets.

The Lyric airdome, Muncie, has been opened with "The Goddess" and ten cents admission.

The machine room of the Shank airdome, Rochester, Ind., has been made of cement blocks. It looks like a one-eyed fort on a small scale.

Manager Galligan of the Nelson theater, Logansport, is giving his patrons 6,000 feet daily at five cents, and is packing the 1,100 seats for two performances every night.

George Senger, Mishawaka, in charge of two houses, is packing them both, he says, with bills that run strong on comedy.

The "camera fiend" is making a hit in Peru, where the Isis has been making the action snaps of local people a nightly feature.

The Fowler, Ind., Improved Order of Red Men, have opened a picture show. The same lodge is furnishing the band for the weekly band concert in Fowler.

J. R. Denniston, manager of the Grand opera house, Anderson, Ind., is interested in a film of Anderson, to show the industries in action and be put on in Anderson houses and in adjoining towns.

The Orpheum management at Hartford City, Ind., have an open lobby, which has been named "The Baby Cab Garage." About twenty of the cabs "park" there every night.

Tom Polk has sold the Lincoln theater, Valparaiso, to Charles Bailey of Sturgis, Mich. Mr. Bailey has been in the picture show business for ten years in Michigan.

James Alcorn opened Airdome Park at Greensburg, May 29.

C. A. Baldwin and F. Stock of Benton Harbor, Mich., have bought the Lyric theater, Michigan City, Ind., of J. N. Ledbetter. The new management will have trap drums, cornet and piano as musical features, and will charge five cents except on Saturday and Sunday, when the rate will be a dime.

Hubert N. Phillips will spend about $1,000 remodeling the Washington Park theater, Michigan City, Ind.

The Star theater, Union City, is adding more seats.

No-Appeal Censorship?

Municipal Judge in Portland, Oregon, Holds Jury Should Not Be Permitted to View Film Censors Had Refused to Pass—Nevertheless Jury Orders Acquittal of Theater Manager and Operator—Public Sentiment and Press Ridicules Action of Local Board.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THAT it was without the province of the jury to review the decision of the local censorship board upon any films submitted to it, and that the new city censorship ordinance made the decision of the board upon the propriety of any film, proposed to be exhibited to the Portland public, final, was the holding of Municipal Judge Stevenson of Portland in an action brought by the city against J. E. Murphy, manager of the Sunset theater, Milton Maguire, operator, and C. J. Kerr, local manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, for exhibting Keystone's "Guzzle Rivals Jonah" without the sanction of the local censorship board.

It seems that upon a viewing of a delegation from the Board, the film people took exception to its ruling, requiring them to eliminate from the film a scene where Guzzle is revived after emulating Jonah. The scene in question was pronounced by Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, to be "disgusting and revolting." Patrons of the theater, questioned upon the subject, declared the situations in the film to be extremly funny, but by the ruling of Judge Stevenson in not allowing the jury to see the film, the sense of humor of the local board as being the criterion of that of the general public could not be put in issue. The Portland Daily News caled for the opinion of Portland's citizens who had seen the film during the few hours it had been exhibited, and several prominent business men took occasion to express publicly opinions different from those of Mrs. Colwell and the other goodly matrons and gentlemen of the board.

Mr. Dibble, appearing in court for the theater, questioned the constitutionality of the ordinance for the reason that it provides for no appeal and that there is no time in the proceedings under the ordinance when a party against whom it operates shall have a hearing before the board. Mr. Tomlinson, appearing for the city, pointed out that, following the decision of the Oregon Supreme Court in the case of the City of Portland against Nottingham, if a statute does not provide an appeal, there can be none as the right of appeal is not a constitutional one under the Oregon code practice and therefore, inasmuch as the ordinance in question does not provide for an appeal, a review of the Board's decision could not be had. While the judge admitted that he was not free from doubt on the question of the constitutionality of the ordinance, he decided that was not a question to be passed upon by an inferior court and the matter was placed before the jury on the charge in the information, which left nothing for the jury to do except to pass upon the question of whether or not the film had been exhibited without a permit. While the evidence was uncontradicted that the film had been so shown, Mrs. Colwell admitted on cross-examination that up to the time of this prosecution no permits of the nature required by the ordinance had ever been issued to exhibitors. The jury found that a compliance with the ordinance on the part of the exhibitor and the operator had therefore been impossible and an acquittal of these two defendants was ordered.

Portland is to be well supplied with picture theaters this summer, inasmuch as the Heilig and the Baker, usually catering to legitimate and stock productions, are about to open to pictures and it is rumored that the Empress, recently taken over by Sullivan & Considine, will turn from vaudeville to pictures. The Orpheum closed to vaudeville a few weeks ago and was successful in showing "The Eternal City" at 25 cents as its opening bill as a picture house.

DECISION HANGS FIRE.

Edwin James, manager of the Majestic, is anxiously awaiting the decision of Circuit Judge Davis upon the briefs submitted some time ago in his case questioning the action of the local censorship board in refusing to pass "The Valley of the Missing," a William Fox production. The interest of the photoplay public of Portland in the local censorship fight is evidenced by the fact that Mr. James was, for several days after the action was instituted, besieged with telephone and personal calls, commending him for his stand.

CHURCH HEARS THEATRE MANAGER.

That stringest laws defining what pictures might or might not be exhibited and providing a severe penalty for their violation, would put the censorship question on a fair and equitable basis, was among the points discussed by Melvin G. Winstock in his address delivered at the Westminster Presbyterian church May 23.

NEW METHOD OF MAKING POSITIVES QUICKLY.

The Northwest Weekly, Portland, has been using for some time past a reverse negative process which they have found highly successful and which is of interest to the exhibitor in that it enables them to produce local pictures within an amazing short time after they have been photographed and at a minimum expense where only a single copy of the film is desired. Recently Mr. A. L. Smith, photographer for the company, took several hundred feet of film on the stage of a local theater and an hour thereafter projected the finished picture upon the screen of the theater.

A number of reverse negative processes have been tried with varied success, but usually the heating of the film during projection has caused the emulsion to run and blur. The process used by the Northwest people brings out the highlights clearly and does not effect the transparency nor does it soften the film.

Mr. Smith is covering the process with patents and is not at this time divulging the secrets connected with it.

RECITATION AS PRELUDE TO PICTURE.

The National theater, Melvin G. Winstock, manager, has the reputation of initiating innovations in motion picture exhibitions in Portland and following the successful idea of preluding films with pantomines of some striking aspect of the picture, Mr. Winstock, upon the showing of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," May 30th, precided the picture with a recitation of the poem by a man in the garb of an Alaskan miner. The recitation had the effect of throwing the audience immediately into the spirit of this striking picture, which was as Mr. Winstock desired it.

Tom North, representative of the Big Four, was tendered a luncheon recently at the Portland Chamber of Commerce and a large gathering of representative exhibitors was present.

The Portland exhibitors are contemplating going in force to San Francisco to attend the convention in July.

NEWS LETTER FROM FLORIDA.

By J. Melvin Andrews, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Florida Notes.

SECRETARY and Treasurer A. H. La Belle of the M. P. E. L. of Florida, is to be local manager of the new Strand theater, which will be built at Tampa, Fla. Bonfoey & Elliott are the architects, and as soon as the plans are completed construction will be started. The Strand is to be equipped with a new $6,000 pipe organ.

A new branch exchange of the United Program Film Service of Atlanta, is now successfully established at Tampa, Fla., with offices at 315 Curry building.

The Montgomery, at Tampa, which has been charging 25 cents for Paramount pictures, has now reduced the price of admission to 10 cents, playing to good business.

The Lyric theater, at Lakeland, has discontinued Paramount features and Pathe semi-weekly for licensed service, to fair business.

Miss Charlotte Givens, of Chicago, has bought the interest of H. G. Griffith, in the Palms theater, of Sarasota, Fla.

The Casino, at Kissimmee, Fla., has been leased for a term of years by Mr. F. Roberts, and is now under his management playing to fair business with general program.

Jacksonville Notes.

"The Butterfly," a production which Howard Estabrook & Company made while in Florida, this winter, with scenes in Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Atlantic Beach, and a cast with many local people, was shown at the Republic this week. The drawing power of a picture of this kind is high.

"The Goddess" is increasing in popularity with each episode, which is evidenced by the sturdy throng it pulls half a block from Main street, on Mondays, at the Imperial theater.

The Arcade theater, which is being erected by the Southern Investment and Amusement Company, of this city, is nearing completion, and is expected to be opened about the first of July.

Mr. W. L. Whithead, who is now general manager of the Grand, Prince and Savoy theaters of this firm, having succeeded F. T. Montgomery (the moving picture man), will also assume the management of the new Arcade. Mr. Whithead has not yet announced the policy of the new house, and assures us only the best will be shown. Although having been at the head of the above houses for only a short period of time, Mr. Whithead has made them a success which seems phenomenal, and deserves credit for being wide awake at all times.

Mr. Erring, traveling representative of the General Film Co., was in the city this week looking after the interest of his firm.

Mr. C. E. Tandy, of the Paramount Film Corporation, was also a visitor in the city on business this week.

Baker Haynes, who has covered the entire South with feature films, was in the city, and reported business good for the past few months.

D. C. Randolph, who is running a feature film exchange in this city, is now in New York buying new features. Carl C. Smith is in charge of the exchange.

Jacksonville, which for a long time was immune from the school fever, is now infested with two full fledged moving picture schools for teaching the "Art of Photoplay Acting."

Studio Notes.

"Bob" Vignola is now the proud possessor of a new runabout, which by the way is about the classiest thing in the city.

Guy Coombs has written a scenario, the principal scenes being on board a large steamship, which he will produce en route to New York, where he will work through the summer. With him goes his camera man, McGoery, his wife (Anna Neilson), Mr. and Mrs. Bob Walker and others of the local Kalem staff.

NEW PICTURE HOUSE AT UTICA.

By Billy Bison (229 Oxford Ave.) Correspondent Moving Picture World.

WORK is progressing on the new moving picture theater being build at Oneida Square, Utica, N. Y., by the Alhambra Amusement Co. Interesting ceremonies recently marked the breaking of ground for the house. Miss Louise Lux Cort, 3½ years old, granddaughter of A. J. Lux, of the company, turned the first sod with a little silver shovel. The theater will seat 1,400 persons, with boxes to seat parties of from six to eight and a large private box for eighteen. The house will be of brick, with steel frame, and with a frontage of 86 feet. All modern devices adding to the comfort of patrons will be installed. There will be a large orchestral organ.

EMPIRE STATE JOTTINGS.

Fire recently destroyed the Lycoming opera house, at Williamsport, Pa. The loss on the building and fixtures totaled $175,000. The Lamade estate owned the structure. A modern theater will be erected on the site.

The Larkin Company, of Buffalo, will show moving pictures of its plant. An auditorium seating 1,000 will be used.

The Consolidated Amusement Company has been organized in Jamestown, N. Y., with a capital of $250,000. It is reported that the purpose of the concern is "to buy, build and operate a chain of moving picture theaters throughout New York State, Ohio and Pennsylvania."

An official test for moving picture operators was recently taken by twenty condidates in Rochester, N. Y.

William F. White will build a moving picture theater in Lackawanna, a suburb of Buffalo.

In Oswego, N. Y., Frank R. Barbeau has organized a company which will open a moving picture studio "for the making of scientific and advertising films."

S. V. Wallace, manager of the Idle Hour theater, Cambridge Springs, Pa., has planned to show moving pictures of that place.

Complaints have been made to the police that children unaccompanied by their parents have been permitted to attend the moving picture theaters of North Tonawanda, N. Y.

Mrs. Charles S. Robertson has resigned as a member of Mayor Fox's board of moving picture censors of Fulton, N. Y.

Manager Davis of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo, has appointed Arthur Depew organist of that house. Mr. Depew is an experienced musician, having been organist at the Strand theater, New York, for seven months, and at another time organist at the John Wanamaker store in that city. Mr. Davis is using the V. L. S. E. service and the Metro programs with satisfactory results.

Mayor Rand, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., has declined to grant a license for more than six days to the Oliver theater, of that city. As a result an action has been brought to compel the Mayor to issue a license covering seven days a week.

IN PITTSBURGH.

Bender & Williams, owners of the Colonial, in 1733 Lowrie street, Troy Hill, Pittsburgh, has installed a Wurlitzer theater orchestra.

At a benefit performance staged by the Third and Fifth Ward political clubs at Germania Liederkanz Hall, Rose and Caliope streets, Pittsburgh, last Friday night, Manager W. J. Morrison, of the Quality theater, in Fifth avenue, loaned machine, films and operators for the moving picture end of the entertainment. The performance was for the benefit of J. (Hamil) McCloskey, prominent in film row, and the Quality theater donation made a decided hit.

The Boyle theater, at Station street and Crafton avenue, in the West End of Pittsburgh, has been enlarged until it will now accommodate about 300 people.

Appeal to Film Men

Pittsburgh Picture People Meet to Consider Measures for Relieving Stricken Belgium—Closeness of Film Business to Public Makes This Appeal to It a Natural One—Shows Becoming Almoners.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

A MEETING of moving picture men was held in the Grand Opera House Sunday afternoon, May 30, at 2.30 o'clock, for the purpose of arousing interest and securing co-operation in the movement for the relief of Belgium. Former Senator William Flinn presided and delivered a short talk on the subject of "Belgium's Needs." D. L. Gillespie, a member of the organization committee for Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania, also spoke, taking for his topic the methods by which various groups of men are out organizing themselves into committees of voluntary workers. No request was made at the meeting for subscriptions, the sole purpose of gathering the moving picture people together being to secure their counsel and advice and to enlist the co-operation of this important business industry in the humane activities which are now going forth to succor the million and one-half babies, women and children in stricken Belgium.

As the motion picture business is one of the most prominent activities in Western Pennsylvania and this city, Senator Flinn requested Harry Davis to call together a respresentative committee of motion picture men. In accordance he personally addressed a letter to those interested in the moving picture business urging them to attend this meeting.

The invitation was not, however, confined to exhibitors. Indeed, every man and woman engaged in the motion picture business was asked to be present and by his or her counsel and his or her help in any other direction, give impetus to the general movement of the commission for relief in Belgium, a commission based upon the highest ideals of neutrality and benevolence and having for its slogan the Biblical quotation: "For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat."

Harry Davis gave his theater for the purpose. Everything possible was done to make it an attractive place of rendezvous and assurance was given that the speakers would tell many things in which the audience would doubtless take a lively interest. A surprisingly large crowd attended, and according to the interest and enthusiasm that was shown, the Western Pennsylvania moving picture men will certainly do their part in helping stricken Belgium. The picture business will become the great modern almoner, if the church doesn't look out.

E. C. ROCKWELL WESTERN MANAGER FOR METRO.

One of the latest additions to the Pittsburgh staff of film men is E. C. Rockwell, who is Western manager for the Metropolitan Booking Offices, located in room 18, Hartley building, 405 Fourth avenue. Mr. Rockwell has been in the amusement line for the past fifteen years.

ACTORS AND FIREMEN IN PERIL AT PICTURE FIRE.

No more "movie" acting for Pittsburgh firemen if Councilman John S. Herron has his way. As a result of last Thursday's accident in Grant Boulevard, in which two firemen and two actors nearly lost their lives while staging a rescue scene in a burning building, Councilman Herron will present a resolution in council this week requesting Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong to instruct Director of Public Safety Charles S. Hubbard to see that no more city firefighters or apparatus be lent for such purpose.

Further testing of oxygen helmets, which was one of the objects of the proceedings Thursday, also will be requested before they are made part of the standard equipment in the Pittsburgh fire department. Failure of the helmets to work is one of the reasons given for the action of safety department officials.

All of the injured are recovering. Captain James D. Kane of Engine Company No. 34 probably will be able to leave the hospital this week. Captain Alvin K. Foster of No. 19 Company, and Jack Daly and Irene Templer, actors, are resting easily. Their burns are slight.

MINIMUM ADMISSION FOR "ETERNAL CITY" FILM.

General Manager James Steel, of the Famous Players' Film Service, has announced that exhibitors booking "The Eternal City" must sign an agreement to the effect that the picture will not be shown for less than 25 cents admission. Between the Pittsburgh office and the newly-opened office in Cincinnati there are five prints working.

PITTSBURGH BRIEF ITEMS.

The Globe theater, in Washington, Pa., has been remodeled to the extent of $1,900. The front has been improved, the lighting system changed, and the building improved throughout. One prominent feature of this theater is the ladies' rest room, which is elaborately furnished. This house has a capacity of 1,200 and is owned by T. M. Horton & Co., of Pittsburgh.

Walter Artzberger, who has leased the new theater being erected by H. J. Heinz in Penn avenue and 34th street, Pittsburgh, has contracted for the installation of a Seeburg Pipe Organ Orchestrion to cost $3,250.

The old Star theater in Swissvale, near Pittsburgh, has been razed, and J. H. Saver is building a new house, to seat 400 people. This house will be finished about July 1.

Albert Meiggs has purchased the American theater, in Ingram, near Pittsburgh, from Mr. DeOrnzo.

The Park theater, East Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, has changed hands. Mrs. A. Brown, the new owner, took charge last week.

The Nixon theater, Tarentum, Pa., inaugurated its picture season with "East Lynne," which opened last Thursday.

D. E. Crandell has purchased the Viola theater, in Sharpsburg, near Pittsburgh, and has changed the name to the Peerless.

George Balsdon, who opened the Pittsburgh office of the V. L. S. E., Inc., left last week for Minneapolis, to open a branch there.

An application has been made for a Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation by Michael J. Boyle, Thomas Holzman and Maurice E. Holzman for an intended corporation to be called the "Nemo Theater Company," of Johnstown, Pa.

Manager Thompson of the Columbia theater, in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has installed two large 24-inch exhaust fans in the ceiling on either side of the curtain.

All the exchanges in Ferry street, Pittsburgh, are undergoing a brightening up process. C. A. Becker has the contract for painting in Film Row. Work was started last week and the row already presents an improved appearance.

C. S. Osbourne, proprietor of the Dreamland, Cresson, Pa., has installed a Seeburg Pipe Organ Orchestrion costing $2,250.

Advice to Censors

Minnesota Clubwoman Gives Level-Headed Tips on Supervision of Pictures to Women's Clubs Interested in Local Welfare—Friendly Criticism Usually Welcomed—Guiding Principles in Special Shows for Children.

By Frank H. Madison, Minnesota Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MISS C. B. WATKINS declared before the annual convention of the Women's Clubs of the Eighth Minnesota district that women's club committee on censorship should not have educational pictures as their guiding ideas. Rather she would have films which would educate in beauty and morals. Her talk was one of the sanest that has been given in connection with the activities of women's clubs in the motion picture field. Among other things she said:

"The moving picture play has a firmly established place in the recreational life of the masses. It affords an inexpensive amusement which appeals most strongly to those among whom the recreational problem is most serious and by that class it is most extensively patronized. The fact that personally you may not care to attend moving plays is no reason for condemnation of this form of amusement. Personally I do not care to teetertotter in a public park, but I realize that this may be a wholesome amusement of those who enjoy it.

"The actual act of a murder is seldom thrown upon the screen, but portrayal of the following crimes is common:

"Instigation by bribery to commit murder or other crime. This is much more insidious to the morals than an act of violence, whose very nature repels; kidnapping and assault, especially upon young girls; holdups; the destruction of buildings by the use of bombs; the enticement of girls for immoral purposes.

"My purpose is to point out ways by which club women may help in making the picture play a benefit instead of a menace to the town. Right here I wish to say that you cannot know anything about the picture show in your town if you never attend it. It is a good idea for every club interested in the welfare of a town to have a committee whose sole business shall be the censorship of the picture in the town. As a rule the management of the theater is glad of friendly criticism and eager to confer with his patrons as to the class of shows they want.

"Granted that you have a committee on censorship; what shall be their guiding idea?

"Not educational. Remember that this is a recreation, and everything of an educational nature must be interesting or it has no value, I would give the educational film as a means of imparting useful information a significant place. I would rather choose those films that would educate in beauty and morals.

"As a moral factor the moving picture is of tremendous importance, and it is on the question of morals that censorship most frequently goes upon the rocks. Over-criticism will kill good censorship, for no manager can concede to unreasonable demands.

Tips on Special Children's Shows.

"It seems to us that a safe rule to follow is this:

"Eliminate scenes which the child is unlikely to see in every day life, if they take a trend you do not wish his thought to take.

"The elimination of sights with which all children are familiar in every day life is unnecessary, for instance:

"Do not condemn a scene because some man in it happens to be smoking. This is going too far. The fact of the smoking is incidental and the act is familiar, and therefore does not impress the youth one way or another. Do not eliminate fun, if it be clean. A good laugh always does a lot of good.

"I should add also the play which overstimulates the imagination by exaggerated dangers and adventures. Such plays are unwholesome. I should add in conclusion another film, the one that holds up to admiration the silly flirtation heroine. The moving picture heroine can act like a lady and frequently does without losing any of her charms. Our girls mould their ideas by the plays they see, the books they read and the people they admire. Let us put examples of right conduct before them."

MINNESOTA JOTTINGS.

Taft & Frenkel, of Des Moines, Ia., are having plans drawn for a handsome moving picture house at 622 Hennepin avenue in Minneapolis. The Fleischer-Rose Construction Company is drawing plans and helping finance the enterprise. The house will seat 750, will have about 100 feet of mirrors, and will have a varicolored terra cotta front. The proprietors will feature the 5-cent admission.

R. Meili is local representative of E. G. Tunstall and Peter Ermantinger, who have opened the auditorium at White Bear. The owners are connected with the Metropolitan, at St. Paul.

Manager Henderson, of the picture show at Alden will give two shows a week this summer—three reels for 10 cents.

The Northwest Weekly had a camera man with the Automobile Club of St. Paul on its sociability run through the state.

The Jitney theater, at Minneapolis, has purchased a new $3,000 photoplayer.

Rev. Herbert Ford, pastor of the West Duluth Baptist church, representing the Morals Committee of the Ministerial Association of Duluth, objected to the tiger rug scenes when he inspected "Three Weeks," but no formal protest was made and the mayor and the safety commissioner passed the picture.

RUNNING FIVE THEATERS IN TWO-BLOCK NEIGHBORHOOD

Memphis Theater Co. Runs Nearby Houses—Programs and Feature Schedule.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Majestic Amusement Company, owners and operators of the Majestic and Empire theaters of Memphis, Tenn., is now operating five motion picture theaters inside of a radius of about two blocks, between No. 80 North Main street and 146 South Main street. Three of these theaters operate under the Majestic title while two operate under Empire title, as follows: Old Majestic No. 1, C. M. McElravy, manager, 49 South Main street; New Majestic No. 1, George Currier, manager, 145 South Main street; Majestic No. 2, J. B. Amis, manager, 138 South Main street; Empire No. 1, Homer W. Sibley, manager, 80 South Main street, and Empire No. 2, Joseph Beurer, manager, 146 South Main. The company's main offices are at 49 South Main street. The officers of the corporation are R. C. Tarlton, president; C. A. McElravy, general manager, and C. F. Bridges, secretary-treasurer.

At the New Majestic Theater No. 1 the admission price for adults is fifteen cents and for children five cents. At Majestic Theaters Nos. 1 and 2 the price is ten cents for adults and five cents for children, while at the two Empire theaters the admission price is five cents to all.

New Majestic No. 1 has changes of program on Sunday, Tuesday and Friday, while Majestic No. 1 changes three times each week and at Majestic No. 2 and the Empire theaters the changes are made daily. The concern is having a twenty-page weekly program published, showing the feature productions to be shown at the three Majestic theaters, and also notes the regular programs at the five-cent theaters, such as Keystone comedies on set dates, and the serial pictures. On the inside of the outer cover of the program is the schedule time for starting the shows in the various theaters. For instance, where four-reel continuous subjects are shown, the shows begin at 11 o'clock a. m. and each hour thereafter until 11 o'clock in the evening. Five-reel subjects are shown starting at 11.45 o'clock a. m. and thereafter at 1 p. m., 2:15 p. m., 3:30 p. m., 4:45, 7:15, 8:30, 9:45; six-reel subjects start at 11 a. m. and thereafter at 12:30 p. m., 2, 3:30, 5, 6:30, 8 and 9:30. Considerable discussion has come up from time to time concerning the fact that the public is not versed in the hours in which shows are to start. Exhibitors who would adopt this schedule and advertise it would find that it would do away with a good deal of congestion during the evening hours.

STAR IN MANCHESTER SOLD.

Announcement has just been made of a change at Manchester, Tenn., whereby A. Warren Mahan has acquired the Star theater. Arrangements have been made whereby pictures will be shown every night instead of twice a week, as was the case under the former management.

FILM OF NASHVILLE BOOSTERS.

The Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, recently received the pictures of the Nashville Boosters' Club, which were taken while the club was out upon its annual 1915 trade extension trip. The pictures were taken by Martin Wiles, and are said to give a splendid outline of the activities of the boosters who traveled through parts of Kentucky, Tennessee and other states. The Crescent Amusement Company has not announced as to just what theater the pictures will be shown in, but it is expected that a good deal of interest will be shown in their exhibition.

COMIC NASHVILLE FILMS.

Uncle Hiram and Aunt Lucindy, two of the world's greatest rube comedians, are at Nashville, Tenn., where they will participate in some comic pictures to be made around the city by S. L. Brownie, an expert in the motion picture business and patentee of the "auto-automatic" device for turning the crank on a motion picture camera.

ELECTRIC FOUNTAIN AT CRESCENT.

The Crescent theater of Nashville, Tenn., has installed an electric fountain which has been the subject of many appreciative comments from the patrons of the theater. The fountain is set directly behind the new organ, and is a decided asset to the pretty picture house. It has a white marble body, and banked with tall green palms. The arrangement is so cool looking that it is expected to help make the patrons feel cool during the warm summer months.

PARTHENON OF NASHVILLE OPEN.

The new Parthenon of Nashville, Tenn., was thrown open to the public at ten o'clock on Monday morning, May 31, Decoration Day. The fact that the day was a holiday brought big crowds on the streets, and the theater had a very auspicious opening. The opening program was the Belasco masterpiece, "The Heart of Maryland," in which Mrs. Leslie Carter has the stellar role. This film was shown for three days to good crowds. At the opening flowers were given to every visitor. In order that the unusual beauty of the front of the theater would prove an entire surprise to the public a screen was erected in front of the lobby and this screen was not removed until early on the morning of the opening day. Ira Lamb, president of the Parthenon Amusement Company, designed a miniature of the theater.

SUDEKUM BUYS THE CRESCENT IN MURFREESBORO, TENN.

Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville, Tenn., has just acquired the Citizens' theater of Murfreesboro, Tenn., and will remodel it at once. This theater will be a part of the big string of theaters which the company now operates in Kentucky and Tennessee. Oscar Altman will be manager of the new house.

DIXIE BEGINS CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

E. E. Pitsinger, manager of the Dixie of Winchester, Tenn., has completed arrangements with the Parent-Teacher Association of the city, whereby pictures for children are being shown every Friday afternoon at the Dixie theater. The association has made arrangements whereby a number of programs will be censored by Mrs. Warren Waite, secretary of the organization, and leader in this branch of the work. The story of each picture is told to the children during the story hour in the schools on Thursday afternoon, and interest is well keyed up for the film exhibitions on Friday.

At the Crescent, in Chattanooga, films made in Chattanooga in which "Uncle Hiram and Aunt Lucinda" appear are being shown as they are made. The first section shown included scenes in the editorial rooms of the Chattanooga Times, the Mountain City Club and the Union Station.

Jesse L. Lasky's production of "The Circus Man" made such a hit at the Elite, of Clarksville, Tenn., that it was played at a return engagement on May 14.

William Dowling and George Shepherd, operating as Dowling & Shepherd, have purchased the Bon Ton, at Mt. Ayr, from Mrs. J. D. Willeys.

M. Osmum, who recently sold his Star theater, at Knoxville, has purchased the Olympic there from Leo Devendorf.

KANSAS CITY NOTES.

Messrs. Arthur M. Ford and Joseph Fox have purchased the Holland and Marple theaters at Wichita, Kan. They were in Kansas City recently and had quite a little chat with C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange. Mr. Ford has for some time past been manager of the Marple theater for its owner, Mr. M. Dood. He succeeded in pulling the theater out the rut and it is now one of the most profitable picture houses in Wichita. The Holland theater will be under the management of Mr. Joseph Fox, who was formerly connected with the Santa Fe Tour company. This theater runs the Paramount service four days a week and the World Feature films two days a week. The partnership wil be incorporated in the near future under a firm name that has not yet been decided upon according to the partners. The firm expects to branch out and grow up in the business by adding to its present holdings in the way of new theaters in the fall.

Hus Bennert of Springfield, Mo., has again got busy on making arrangements for another show there. He has announced that negotiations may be consummated within the next few days whereby he will establish a moving picture theater in the lower floor of the building occupied by the Elks Lodge.

The Electric theater at Willow Springs Mo., has opened its airdome and they are giving performances every Tuesday and Saturday nights. The admission is five and ten cents and they are showing four reels of pictures each evening.

One-Man Censor Rebuffed

Wichita, Kansas, Censorship Fight Over "The New Governor" Temporarily Settled in Court—Negro Promised That City Would Be Living Hell If Picture Were Shown, but No Disturbance Resulted.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

FROM the ruling of Judge Thornton W. Sargent in District Court, May 24, it appears that the exhibitors of Wichita, Kas., are now free from the harassing "one man censorship" that has prevailed there for several years.

In one of the previous administrations of the city government a law was placed on the statute books making it a misdemeanor for any exhibitor to show any film that was "inherently wrong." The city humane officer, W. E. Reeves, was delegated to see that this law was obeyed. Mr. Reeves in several instances has ordered pictures taken off the screens, and in one instance, according to his testimony on the stand, closed the Crawford theater and dismissed the audience. The exhibitors of Wichita have chaffed under such conditions for some time, but no one up to the present has ever questioned Mr. Reeves' authority.

The bomb finally burst when the Princess theater announced that it intended to show the Fox production, "The New Governor." Three days before Mr. Chambers, manager of the theater, was to show the picture, and after he had put up his deposit to get it and had done some advertising, Mr. Reeves told him that he would not allow the picture to be shown. It appears that a delegation of colored citizens had requested him to see that the picture was stopped, complaining that it would breed race hatred.

Mr. Chambers immediately prepared to fight the case. Saturday previous to the Monday on which he intended to start the picture he petitioned Judge Sargent in the district court to grant him a restraining order against stopping the picture. The city attorney, Mr. Connely, asked that the case be continued until Monday morning at 9 o'clock, so that he might have the mayor and commissioners and other witnesses that he desired. This continuance was granted.

Mr. Chambers immediately got in touch with the Kansas City office of the Fox Film Company and asked that he might have a private showing of the picture for the benefit of everyone interested in the case, and particularly for Judge Sargent. A large number of the best citizens of Wichita attended this exhibition and not a dissenting opinion was heard.

When the case was called for trial Monday, the court room was crowded with witnesses and spectators. Mr. Chambers was called to the stand first, and showed the court wherein he would entail considerable loss if he was not allowed to show the picture.

The best witness for the defense was Charles Hardin, manager of the Kansas City office of the Fox Film Company, who came to Wichita especially for the purpose. He showed that the picture had been passed by the National Board of Censorship and had been shown in several of the largest towns of Kansas. The complaining parties had asserted that the city of Chicago had stopped the picture, and when Mr. Hardin showed that pictures were running in the Ziegfeld theater in that city the case lost considerable of its imposing aspect. Several times during the trial the plaintiffs tried to bring in articles and testimony referring to the "Birth of the Nation," asserting that this play was of similar nature. The court refused to hear any such testimony, however. Mr. Hardin, after telling of the number of towns showing the picture, was told that they were not Wichita, and that a peculiar condition existed there. He brought down a laugh when he reiterated, "That he had been dealing with the exhibitors in that city for several years, and the only peculiar condition that he was able to notice was the censorship."

The ridiculous feature of the whole trial was that the chief objection of the negroes, i. e., that Phil Morrow, after learning that there was negro blood in his veins, did not continue to hold his position as Governor. They intimated this fact went to show that the negro was not as good as the white man. One negro minister wasn't sure but that it would have been all right for Georgia, the white girl, to marry Phil. Others said that it showed the negro race in a bad light, but when they were forced to admit that the strongest characters, namely Phil Morrow, Aunt Jinny and Belle, were negroes, the case was practically lost. One negro said that if the picture was shown it would stir up racial strife and would make Wichita a living hell. The picture was run two days and there was no sign of a disturbance.

Judge Sargent in handing down his decision said that all of the objectionable features of the picture as stated by the complaining witnesses were matters of history and as such were depicted. He said the picture was no worse than a picture based on Uncle Tom's Cabin would be. As a matter of law he stated that he could not protect Manager Chambers from arrest, but that he could enjoin Mr. Reeves against arresting Mr. Chambers continuously during the running of the picture, which Mr. Reeves threatened to do. Prominent attorneys in Wichita were of the mind that the city would have to stand liable for a damage suit if Mr. Chambers should be arrested and later wished to contest the matter. However, Mr. Chambers was not molested in any way.

NO MORE "DRAWINGS" ALLOWED IN KANSAS CITY.

The police department of Kansas City recently put an end to drawing contests and lottery schemes in moving picture theaters in the city. For several months managers of picture shows have issued coupons with tickets sold at the box offices and on certain nights duplicate coupons drawn out of a hat denoted the winners of prizes. Some of the prizes were railroad tickets to vacation resorts, diamond rings, pianos and so forth. John L. Ghent, acting chief of police in the absence of Chief Hiram Hammill, issued an order that all managers of picture shows be notified to discontinue the drawings, characterizing them as lotteries and gambling games. The drawings have been conducted mostly by the managers of the shows in the residence district.

CHILD SINGER DIES.

The moving picture patrons of Kansas City have lost one of the rare bits of pleasure that they were at one time anxious to have. Little Ruth Irene Light, a child actress, who has sung in many of the picture shows of Kansas City, died last week at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Light. She would have been 4 years old in a few weeks. Ruth began singing in public shortly after her second birthday anniversary.

Superintendent Herr, of the Kansas State Reformatory at Hutchinson, Kas., has installed a Powers 6A machine for the purpose of giving moving picture entertainments to the inmates of the reformatory.

Ontario Theater Tax Cut

Provincial Treasurer of Ontario Decides to Reduce the License Fees for Picture Theaters—New Schedule Is Much More Reasonable—Exhibitors' Protective Association Had Made Representations on the Matter.

By David K. Billing, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THEATERS in the larger provincial centers will not be assessed on the new provincial rate quite as highly as at first expected. The provincial treasurer, after receiving many representations from various municipalities, has decided to make an appreciable cut in the tax, and notices to that effect will be sent to theater owners in the near future.

According to the original schedule, $300 was charged on theaters in all cities of 20,000 and over, $200 in all places 10,000 to 20,000, and $100 in all under 10,000. The new scale provides for a tax of $200 for all cities over 25,000, $100 in places from 10,000 to 25,000, and $50 in all under 10,000. The decrease in the revenue caused by this change will be made up by a treasury grant, but it was felt that the original tax during a war year would be a fatal burden for many theaters, especially those in small centers that only give a few shows during the year. Theaters obtaining a license after December 1 will be charged half price until June 1.

The announcement of this cut came a few days after a big deputation from the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association had waited on the treasurer and had asked for a decrease in the tax.

PAUL BERN IN NEW YORK TO HANDLE BEURY PUBLICITY.

Paul Bern, scenario editor of the Beury Feature Film Company here, left for New York last week to handle the publicity for that concern. As secretary of the Medical Review of Reviews, he was able to effect the production by the Beury company of a great propaganda anti-cigarette play in six reels which the Review wished produced, and which is being backed by that powerful organization.

This is the first production of the new company and they hope to make a sensation with the play, which is the work of Mr. Bern. Mr. Bern has been connected with the legitimate stage as actor and director, his last engagement having been with "Too Many Cooks" at the Thirty-Ninth Street theater, New York. Edward H. Robins, who will be featured in the picture, will go to New York, Washington, Detroit and Denver for scenes to be used in the play.

At this writing it is not yet known what effect the studio fire, noticed in the Moving Picture World last week, will have on the Beury Company's plans. We hope the fire has burned up its jinx. Certainly this company, from the days when it was the Cornness-Till Co., through, has been up against many difficulties, including unwarranted reports that hurt its credit, bitter competition and destructive fire.

THE MARY ANDERSON DROPS SPECIAL SHOWS FOR SUMMER.

By G. D. Crain Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LEE L. GOLDBERG, manager of the Mary Anderson theater of Louisville has announced that, due to requests of the Louisville Playground Association and also of the Parent-Teacher League, it has been decided that children's motion picture shows at the Mary Anderson theater will come to a close on June 16, but will be taken up again in the fall with the opening of the scholastic season. "Joan of Arc," a two-reel production, will be the last film exhibited this season. Previous to the showing of this film the story will be explained by the librarians in the children's departments of the various public libraries of the city.

MRS FRED LEVY WORKING HARD FOR GOOD CHILDREN'S FILMS.

A. M. Shorey, manager of the Queen theater of Knoxville, Tenn., recently asked Mrs. Fred Levy, of Louisville, promotor of children's picture shows in this city, to come to Knoxville, Tenn., on June 10 for the inauguration of Children's motion pictures in the Tennessee theater. The invitation was accepted at once by Mrs. Levy, who is working like a Trojan to get the movement well under way throughout the country. Mrs. Levy has been showered with so many requests for information concerning the work that she will probably have to hire a private secretary before long to aid her. Mrs. Levy, with her husband, who is interested in some of the local theaters, will leave shortly for a two months' trip to the California exposition. The return trip will be made by way of the Panama Canal and back through New York.

BAD STORM VISITS LOUISVILLE.

Presence of mind on the part of doormen at motion picture theaters is a necessity which is coming to be realized among the exhibitors. In several instances during the past few weeks fast head-work on the part of employes has stopped people from becoming excited at the theaters. On one occasion fire broke out in the old Columbia theater, which has been closed since that time. The fire consisted of a cople of reels in the operators' room, but people got excited. The employes did not get excited in the least and quickly calmed the rush to the doors. On Tuesday evening, May 25, one of the worst storms on record broke in Louisville. The wind acquired a velocity of seventy-two miles an hour, which is the local record, and many theaters had worried patrons to contend with. Hail, lightning, thunder claps, and breaking glass made many people feel that something serious was taking place and a rush was made to the doors in some instances. At the Majestic theater three large glass bulletin boards were blown over and smashed at the same time that a violent peal of thunder was heard. Some fool as usual exclaimed: "I smell smoke" and a rush was made toward the door, where a laughing employe stated that one of the boys upstairs had dropped a box of glassware. A few were not convinced and went outside, but quickly returned when the heavy rain was encountered. One-half of the roof at Macauley's theater was torn off by the wind, and show windows all over town were smashed. This storm came up very unexpectedly and most of the people who went into the theaters did so while the sun was shining.

FRESH AIR AT THE ALAMO.

The Alamo of Louisville recently had a series of tests made to try out its washed-air ventilating plant and see that it was in shape to relieve the humidity of the summer months. This ventilating feature is one of the company's chief assets during the summer months and great care is being taken to have it work to the best advantage.

W. F. GRAU SECURES THE DIXIE.

W. F. Grau, manager of the Princess theater of Mayfield, Ky., has closed a deal whereby he has taken over the Dixie theater and will hereafter operate both theaters, which are owned by the Princess Show Company, an incorporated concern. Harry Evans, who for several years has conducted the Dixie theater, will leave shortly for California with his wife. Evans sold the property to B. F. Briggs, who was to have taken over the management on June 1, but a deal was closed before Briggs started operations. A few changes have been made in the projection room and the interior of the building.

NEW SIGN AT THE FOURTH AVENUE.

The Federal Sign System Company has just completed the installation of a semi-triangular sign for the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. This sign will be used for showing in electric lights the name of the star or either that of the play itself which happens to be on the screen at the time. The sign extends out over the sidewalk and attracts attention for some distance. A new sky-rocket flasher light will be placed on the building shortly and will go up and shoot downward toward the entrance.

LOUISVILLE BRIEF NOTES.

A. C. Farrell, manager of the Central Film Service Company, distributors of the Universal program, recently received a letter from New York, advising him of the purchase by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of a vaudeville circuit for use with the Universal program. These pictures, made by the vaudeville performers, will be especially adapted for chilren's motion picture shows, it is said.

Tonie Zoellers and W. B. Oelze, of Hazard, Ky., are organizing a small company to be incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000, for the purpose of taking motion pictures of commercial interest in the vicinity of Hazard.

The Sanders Amusement Company of Louisville, recently incorporated, with the intention of opening several airdomes in Louisville, has taken out a permit for the erection of an airdome at 2334 West Broadway.

Harvey B. Day, of the Fox Film Corporation's Pittsburgh, Pa., office, was recently in Louisville, calling on the trade. He reports good bookings throughout his entire district.

The Clay Street Amusement Company of Louisville has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000. The incorporators are: Leslie H. Thurman, George G. Buckingham and Peter Campbell. The concern will operate an airdome on Clay street.

At Greenville, Ky., Lawrence Sullivan of the Queen theater is overhauling the stage and having some new scenery painted.

Algin Daniel, of Irvine, Ky., has assumed the lease on the opera house and purchased the motion picture equipment of Clyde Gaines.

Damon's theater, at Elkton, Ky., discontinued motion picture shows for three days recently, due to the spring commencements which were held in the theater.

The West Louisville Amusement Company, capital $600, shares $10 each, recently filed articles of incorporation. The company will operate a moving picture airdome in the western part of Louisville. The debt limit is $400.

H. F. Bryant, of Pleasureville, Ky., was recently in Louisville, where he was making arrangements for rebuilding his moving picture theater. He will probably open an airdome for the summer months and build later.

Fred Pernett, of Bethlehem, Ind., was recently in Louisville making arrangements for opening a new moving picture show, either in Bethlehem or one of the nearby towns in Southern Indiana. He recently sold his Star theater, which was known as the "Star of Bethlehem."

Lewis Baum, of the General Film Company's Indianapolis office, was recently in Louisville arranging for bookings of the Vitagraph Company's production of "The Goddess."

Schoen, Fred Winter, Ottis Hubbuch, Phil C. Dean, C. L. Beck, Henry Wempe, S. S. Speir, Al. Stebler, John Hoeb, C. L. Casey, Ned Dickens, J. J. Scoon, John Sheridan, Henry A. J. Puls, C. C. McMahan and D. Y. Fauer. The concern has leased the property operated last season by the West End Colonels, but will have to buy some equipment.

Willock & Cloyd, managers of the Opera House, at Campbellsville, Ky., have been using the Mutual Program. They will also show bookings made by the General Film Company.

At Maysville, Ky., the management of the Pastime has announced that preparations are being made for extensive improvements at the popular little theater.

The Royal, at Eighteenth and Broadway, Louisville, has let a contract to Bredeman Brothers, for repairs on the building which will cost about $800.

A permit has been taken out at Lexington, Ky., for a new $40,000 moving picture theater to be erected by the Phoenix Amusement Company, of which M. Switow, of Louisville, is president.

OKLAHOMA NOTES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southwest News Service.

Frank C. Doggett is now manager of the Busby theater at McAlester, Okla., succeeding Bert Estes, who is now operating the Star airdome.

Van B. Higbee of Hitchcock, Okla., is remodeling the old Woodman hall, which he purchased for use as his Majestic theater.

June 15 was fixed as the opening date for the new Soledad at San Antonio, Tex.

Manager Charles Kimball has purchased a moving picture camera and will film local events and scenes for the Pope and Happy Hour theaters at McKinney, Tex.

When the colored citizens of Union of Orange, Texas, protested to Mayor Dan F. Minahan against the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," he replied it would not be permitted if it was found that it showed a prejudice against the negro race.

Some managers show "The Spoilers" for ten cents, but Manager Green of the Unique at Miami, Ariz., calmly fixed the price of his first five rows at 50 cents and the rest of the house at 75 cents.

R. B. Campbell has opened his new airdome at Bixby, Okla.

C. B. Reinhardt has sold his interest in the Star at Nowata, Okla., to Charles Walker.

C. W. Burkhart has moved his picture show at Bay City, Tex., back to his airdome.

Moving picture managers in Houston, Tex., have been granted the police power recently asked and will war on "mashers."

The Ardmore Amusement company of Ardmore, Okla., has been incorporated with capital stock of $3,000. Incorporators, C. Lowenstein, M. Lowenstein, R. P. Poland and others.

When "The Spoilers" was booked for the Majestic at Enid, Okla., a local newspaperman said: "The writer has seen this picture and firmly believes that no greater picture has been produced."

Manager Halper has been making plans to extensively remodel the Princess at Roswell, N. M.

Sunday shows, the first given in that city, have been tried by the Princess at Orange, Tex. Although there is no opposition the unfavorable sentiment has not crystallized into action.

R. R. Short will operate two shows at Sulphur, Okla., having leased the Ramsey theater.

The Mutual Film Corporation of Oklahoma has been formally dissolved.

The new board of censorship in Ft. Worth, Tex., appointed by Mayor Tyra, is composed of women. Miss Margaret McLean is secretary and Mrs. J. N. Brewer, Mrs. B. C. Rhome and Mrs. L. D. Cobb are members.

Takes Another Big House

Gillingham, Detroit Exhibitor and Exchange Man, Has Ten-Year Lease on Majestic in Grand Rapids—Will Turn It into Picture Theater—Many Improvements Planned—Will Reopen Last Week in August.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A. J. GILLINGHAM, owner of the Empire theater, in Detroit, and manager of the local branch of the General Film Company, has taken a 10-year lease of the Majestic theater in Grand Rapids, which heretofore has played legitimate attractions. With the building of the new Strand theater, on Monroe avenue, the ownership of the Orpheum, Idle Hour, Original, Idea and Monroe Vaudette theaters, and the control of the Columbia theater, makes Mr. Gillingham the leading factor in Grand Rapids' amusement interests. It is his plan to completely renovate the Majestic, redecorate and make it one of the most beautiful playhouses in Michigan for feature photoplays.

These improvements will involve the expenditure of about $20,000. C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, who designed the new Strand, now under construction, has charge of the remodeling of the New Majestic, and the contracts have been awarded to Frank Farrington & Co., of Detroit, who also have the new Strand construction.

Holden & Lane, of Pittsburgh, have been awarded the contract for a duplex organ to cost $10,000, but in addition there will be a first class orchestra as well as vocalists of established reputation. There will be new stage effects; there will be a new indirect system of lighting, a new ventilating system, new lobby and new electrical illuminations at the entrance.

Mr. Gillingham said, in commenting on the new theater, which will reopen the last week of August: "I believe we will be able to give Grand Rapids just what is wanted. We will produce all of the big photoplay features exactly as they are put on in the eastern cities. We will have an immense seating capacity and prices will be from 10 to 25 cents. We propose to make the new Majestic high-class in every particular. We will have uniformed attendants who will be courteous in their treatment of patrons. One novelty for the benefit of patrons will be the reservation of seats for the first evening performance.

CAILLE AND GUTHARD BUY ADDISON THEATER.

It looks very much as if A. Arthur Caille, president of the Majestic Theater Company, was planning to re-enter the moving picture industry on a larger scale than ever. He is at the head of the Maxine theater, Mack and Baldwin avenues, and of the Majestic theater, Woodward and Willis avenues; now comes the announcement that with Henry Guthard, treasurer of the Majestic, he has purchased the Addison theater, 524-526 Woodward avenue, from Chris E. Pudrith. He says that improvements to the property and possibly an addition to the building will be made. The policy of the Addison will be modeled after that of the Majestic. It is also reported that Mr. Caille is behind the new Ferry Park Theater Co., which is capitalized at $100,000 and which will erect a large photoplay theater at Grand River avenue and the Boulevard. This would give him an interest in four theaters.

BIG MAJESTIC DOING CAPACITY BUSINESS.

What is greatly surprising many people interested in the motion picture industry is the enormous business being done at the Majestic theater where the Big Four features are now being shown for a whole week. When the Majestic first opened, many people said: "It will never be a success; it is too large, it can't get features, and it is away from downtown." President Caille and Manager McGee just smiled at these reports and said: "We will show 'em." Today the Majestic is doing capacity business almost all the time, and this despite the fact that May was an unusually rainy month and June starting out the same. A few weeks ago this announcement was made: "Owing to the tremendous expense the Majestic is under for its exclusive feature films, shown here simultaneously with their appearance in New York, where one dollar is charged, we are compelled to increase price of seats in section A to 25 cents." The Majestic is doing fine—much better than its management or its directors really anticipated.

PICTURE MEN INTERESTED IN OPERA.

Three men well known to Michigan exhibitors are the principal stockholders in the Gotham Producing Company, which is capitalized at $3,000 and which has inaugurated a season of summer musical stock at the Detroit Opera House. These men are Harry Goldberg, formerly manager of the Casino Feature Film Co., Michigan distributors for Paramount features; Harry E. Oppenheimer, of Saginaw, who is interested in several theaters, and Harold B. Franklin, who is operating the Strand theater in Port Huron. Mr. Franklin is the producer; Mr. Goldberg personal representative and manager, while Mr. Oppenheimer is inactive. The company will remain at the Opera House for a period of sixteen weeks. Mr. Goldberg has plans under way which will keep him in Detroit permanently at the conclusion of this engagement. He says he is not at liberty to give out details, other than that he will have a fine line of features to offer.

DETROIT VOTING CONTEST FOR COMEDY HEROINE.

John H. Kunsky, operating eight theaters in Detroit, has made an arrangement with the Detroit Journal a leading afternoon newspaper, to conduct a two weeks' popular voting contest, one voting coupon appearing in the paper each day during the two weeks. The young lady who gets the most votes will be given the leading role in a photoplay which Mr. Kunsky has arranged to have made by a Chicago firm. The picture will be 2,000 feet long and will be produced immediately upon the conclusion of the contest.

When the film is completed it will be shown for a week at the Washington and then at the Garden, Alhambra and other Kunsky theaters. The picture will be a comedy drama and will be staged in Detroit. Only unmarried women are eligible in the contest. Ballot boxes have been placed in all of Mr. Kunsky's theaters, and coupons may also be mailed to his office, 2206 Dime Bank Building. The contest terminates on June 19.

Mr. Kunsky is getting a lot of good publicity from this scheme, the Journal devoting a half page daily to it, in addition to running about a column of reading matter.

Edward They, former traveling representative of the Casino Feature Film Co., of Detroit, who resigned a few weeks ago, has returned to that concern.

The Walling theater lasted one week as a moving picture theater. Several reasons are given for this: poor location, past reputation of theater, and poor projection.

Two New Houses Rumored

That Cincinnati Is Soon to Have Two New Moving Picture Theaters Has Become Sufficiently Definite—Sites for Both Have Been Selected—Names of People Behind the New Ventures Not Yet Made Public.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

REPORTS that the downtown district of Cincinnati is to be enriched by the construction in the near future of two large moving picture houses have become sufficiently definite to point out the locations which will be used by the new houses, it being stated that one, the larger of the two, which will seat more than 2,000 persons, will have two entrances, one on Vine street and one on Fifth, giving it direct egress and ingress on the two busiest blocks in the city, while it is said that the other house is to be constructed on the other side of Fifth street, at the corner of Walnut, where an old three-story building now stands. The persons who are behind these ambitious projects have not yet been divulged, but it is declared that they have ample capital for the purpose, and that the construction of these two houses is virtually assured. The building of the Fifth and Walnut house would necessarily involve the elimination of the Star and the Bijou, two smaller theaters now occupying first class locations on the north side of the Fifth street block known as Fountain Square, as it is understood the new house at this point would take in that half of the block.

GOOD FILMS OF INDIANAPOLIS AUTO RACE.

Cincinnati motor enthusiasts who decided not to brave the rain, the cold, the mud and the crowds in order to see the great $50,000 sweepstakes at Indianapolis on Decoration Day, are congratulating themselves on being able to get an accurate idea of the race, notwithstanding, as Messrs. Foster and Weigel, in charge of the destinies of the Grand during the summer season of moving pictures, promptly made arrangements for the pictures taken of the race. They were shown at the Grand on the Friday after the race, which, it may be said, is going some. Taken on Monday, two days were consumed in developing and printing the films, while another 24 hours were necessary in getting the approval of the Ohio Board of Censors. The pictures will be at the Grand for a week and should draw heavily. They comprise about 1,500 feet of film.

WILL FILM LATONIA DERBY.

As usual, Clarence Runey, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, will have crews on hand at the famous Latonia course, near Cincinnati, to get pictures of the Inaugural Handicap, on the opening day, and of the great Latonia Derby, on June 12.

SUMMER PICTURES AT THE COLONIAL POPULAR.

The Colonial, one of Dayton's largest and finest theaters, has opened its summer moving picture season with pronounced success, the cool weather of the past few weeks aiding it materially. Each program consists of a high-class feature with several one or two-reel films, making a show of unusual length and attractiveness. Manager Max Hurtig recently declared his intention of giving Dayton "the biggest dime's worth of film features it ever got or ever will get" all through his season, and so far he has made good in pronounced style. The program is changed daily, which in itself almost guarantees continuously large audiences, as patrons can come back each day knowing they will see something new. The admission is 10 cents for the ground floor and 5 for the balcony.

NEW THEATER EXCLUSIVELY FOR PICTURES.

The Lincoln Theater Company, recently organized in Massillon, O., by John E. McLain and others to build an up-to-date theater, has decided to make the structure an exclusive moving picture house. Mr. McLain has had this idea from the first, it is understood, but there was some pressure brought to bear to have the house equipped for handling all kinds of theatrical attractions. The failure of so many road companies, however, especially of the cheaper class, was pointed out as indicating that attractions would be few and far between, whereas first class moving picture attractions could always be had. It has therefore been determined to proceed with a view to handling moving pictures only. The structure, which is already well advanced, will cost about $50,000.

NEW BIG HOUSE IN YOUNGSTOWN.

A handsome and modern moving picture theater, to seat not less than 1,500 people, is to be a part of the proposed new Hotel Tod structure to be built in Youngstown, O., by the owners of the present building. The building is to be thoroughly remodeled from top to bottom, making it practically new, and the theater part will be wholly new. The present lease expires on July 1, and as soon thereafter as possible the work of remodeling it in line with the plans referred to will be started.

GRAND RAPIDS DRAMA LEAGUE ENDORSES SHOWS

Exhibitors Have High Standards—Curfew Law Wanted by Reformers.

By Frank H. Madison, Michigan Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN general the show houses in Grand Rapids are up to a very high standard is the summary of the report of the Drama League inspection committee. In the last year sixteen picture houses have been added. Nearly all buildings are new or have been recently remodeled and have plenty of light, heat and ventilation.

"The chief danger comes to unaccompanied girls after they go out upon the street," reads the report. "The curfew law should be more rigidly enforced. If girls and boys under 18 years of age were forbidden to enter theaters at night unless accompanies by adults the effect would be a safeguarding of public morals.

"The committee also finds that the character of the pictures have improved immensely, both in photographic art and in subject, though many are termed as sensational. The committee classes this kind of entertainment as 'fillers.'

"The committee has always tried to be constructive, and not destructive, in its criticisms. There were no precedents in the past to work by. The rules laid down by the National Board of Censors were the only guide.

"The committee found occasion to complain only of minor matters to proprietors of picture houses, and in each case when objection was raised the proprietor was prompt in complying with the committee's recommendation."

SUNDAY LAW NOT ENFORCED.

The Arcade, at Charlotte, gave a Sunday night show, increasing the interest in the Sunday show question there. It is said there is in effect an old ordinance which could prevent the performances, but its enforcement would make it necessary to close some other business houses and create a condition akin to a "blue law Sunday."

SHORT MICHIGAN ITEMS.

Lee De Camp, architect, of Grand Rapids, is drawing plans for a $35,000 moving picture and vaudeville theater to be erected on Monroe, near Crescent street, in that city, for the Nichols theatrical interests and T. H. and J. W. Goodspeed. It will seat 1,000.

Allen & Rytkonen have opened the Royal in Negaunee, which has been closed for some time, and will operate it Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights. They also operate the Star, in Negaunee.

Lloyd Simpson is now manager of the Aladdin, at Bay City, L. H. Newcomb taking the management of Wenona Beach Park.

Milan R. Roberts, of Bellevue, has accepted a position as operator at the Vaudette, in Lansing.

The Orpheum, at Ann Arbor, had a special show of Y. M. C. A. boys' camp pictures.

Joseph Loverine, of Dollar Bay, is erecting a new 30x90 moving picture theater at that place.

Oscar F. Hansen and Edward Sather, of Chicago, have taken over the Caldwell, at St. Joseph, succeeding H. E. Rehfield. Sather will be in charge.

Darrah & Graham, of the Princess, at Big Rapids, have taken over the Grand there from A. Marcussen and will operate both houses. Some changes have been made in the interior of the Grand.

The opera house at Quincy was destroyed by fire.

The Star, at Houghton, recently gave a twelve-reel show for 5 and 10 cents.

Reading is without a picture show, F. E. Osborne having closed the house he opened Feb. 15.

Bay City has adopted eastern time and picture houses now start their shows at 2 p. m. instead of 1 p. m.

Mrs. Florence Signor, of Ypsilanti, is erecting a $25,000 theater seating 500 at Washington and Pearl streets, in that city. It will open in September.

John Getzel has purchased the Kurie building, in Dollar Bay, and will remodel it for a new home for the Cozy.

Business men of New Haven are giving open air moving picture shows every Saturday night to attract shoppers to town.

The Gem, at St. Johns, has started a series of Sunday night shows, confining the programs to religious, educational and thoroughly clean films. The World Film Corporation's "Joan of Arc" was the first. Shows do not start until church services are over.

Robert Hortenbach was denied a license by the Minneapolis city council to operate a picture house at 746 Adams street N. E.

A building in Tracy is to be remodeled for a new home for Jay Craig's Wonderland, it is reported.

Albert Mork and Milo Hoffman have purchased the La Grand at Granite Falls from E. M. Erickson.

Sandon Bros., Inc., proprietors of Wonderland at Mankato, have started construction of their new $60,000 moving picture theater on Walnut street in that city. It will be 44x120, and will seat 1,000.

Howard Atz has leased the opera house at Hancock.

Jeane MacMicol of Minneapolis, a city saleswoman for a photo supply company, has been selected to represent Minnesota on the trip to Universal City.

S. C. Olson has opened a picture show in the village hall at New York Mills.

Manager Roman has opened his new picture house at La Porte.

Serials are popular at the Moveum in Aitkin. "The Trey of Hearts," just finished, is being followed by "The Exploits of Elaine."

Walter L. Hamilton has purchased an interest in the Grover building at Galesville, and will remodel part of it into a moving picture theater.

AMERICAN FILMS IN MEXICO.

Fiat Money Makes It Hard to Make Money with Pictures from the States.

By Harry B. Ott, Chihuahua Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE great problem that at present confronts Mexican exhibitors is the all important one of pictures. Naturally, the supply available in this country is very limited, and the time is here when it will no longer be possible to bring in American films, for the value of Mexican fiat money has gone so low, that even with constantly crowded houses, managers will not be able to meet the expense of American service. Reluctantly, but inevitably, one theater after another has discontinued its American pictures. The "Herrera" of Torreon and the "Cine Club" and "Salon Variedades" of this city have already done so, and the "Alcazar" will follow suit after the first of the month. Those theaters south of Torreon have long since found American films impossible. And so from bad to worse things go, but the moving picture men optimistically hold on, knowing that peace must eventually come and hoping that its advent may not be long delayed.

MEXICAN SHORT NOTES.

American serial pictures have met with the enthusiastic approval of Mexican audiences. For the first time in this country, the "Alcazar" of this city has run such pictures with great success. "Lucille Love" has been completed and "The Trey O' Hearts" is now well under way, and each installment is greeted by crowded houses.

The "Teatro Calderon" of Zacatecas, formerly a "legitimate" theater, has been remodeled into a picture house, and will run feature films.

Work has been started on Chihuahua's new picture theater. Alberto Damlani, one of Northern Mexico's pioneer film men, is the proprietor. The building will be completed in about three months.

The intensely Roman Catholic character of the Mexican people must be taken into account by exhibitors in this country. On a recent religious holiday, which here means a day of general festivities, the Cine Club ran Kalem's "From the Manger to the Cross," with great success.

In order to facilitate the employment of laborers, by making their surroundings more attractive, the American Smelting & Refining Co., better known as the Gugenheim smelter trust, has offered manager Fred Williams splendid inducements to open a branch of the "Alcazar" at its smelter plant, five miles out from this city. The construction of the theater building is now well under way, and the house will open in the near future.

The "Teatro de los Heroes," the government owned theater in this city, which has a seating capacity of 3,000, and which was formerly dedicated exclusively to "legitimate" productions, has successfully inaugurated a picture and vaudeville policy.

The present week witnesses the beginning of the annual festivities in honor of Santa Rita, this city's patron saint, and celebrating the arrival of the first Spanish Roman Catholic missionaries. The festivities being composed mostly of open air concerts and wide open gambling, where the poor people are fleeced of their few "centavos," naturally hurt the theaters and moving picture houses.

IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The Portola theater has made arrangements to secure first run V-L-S-E attractions in this city.

Nat E. Abrams has been placed in charge of the booking department of the Golden Gate Film exchange.

A Simplex machine has been shipped to the Orpheum, Bisbee, Ariz., R. T. Lockie, manager, by G. E. Metcalfe.

Peterson Bros. have fitted up a large touring car with a generator set and Powers machine and will tour the mountain towns of the State with moving picture attractions.

New License Law Wanted

Oakland, Near San Francisco, Requires High Fees for Picture Theater Licenses—Mayor Mott, at Request of Exhibitors' League, Has Now Introduced a New Ordinance That, If Passed, Will Set Fees at More Reasonable Figures.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT the request of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Alameda County, Mayor Frank K. Mott, of Oakland, one of San Francisco's most important suburbs, has introduced into the City Council a new ordinance regulating the licensing of moving picture houses. This ordinance, if passed, will reduce the license fees materially and will place Oakland more on a par in this respect with other cities of a similar size. Under the terms of the proposed measure houses seating 1,000 or more will pay a license of $100 a year, payable quarterly; houses seating between 400 and 1,000 will be assessed $75 a year, or $20 per quarter, and houses seating less than 400 will be taxed $50 a year. The prevailing license fees are: Houses seating 400 and under, $150 per year; between 400 and 975, $200 a year, and more than 975, $300 a year. Strong arguments have been advanced for the change in license fees and it is believed that the reduction will be ordered.

PANTAGES THEATERS FEATURING PICTURES.

Pantages theaters at both San Francisco and Oakland have adopted the policy of showing five or six vaudeville acts and rounding out their bill with a high-grade moving picture production of five or six reels. This policy has met with considerable success at the newly opened Hippodrome here and illustrates the strong tendency toward moving pictures.

SCREEN CLUB REDUCES DUES.

The Screen Club of San Francisco has reduced its monthly dues to one dollar and is now making a strong bid for membership. The initiation fee will also be waived for a short time and through this means it is expected that a marked increase in membership will be secured before the holding of the National Convention here in July.

HALF INTEREST IN FILMLAND SOLD.

Miller Bros., owners of the "101 Ranch" attraction at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, have purchased a half interest in the Filmland concession, and hereafter the two concessions will be operated jointly, using the cowgirls, cowboys, soldiers and Indians as an added attraction at the motion picture studio and theater. Nearly all of the performers at the "101 Ranch" are to appear in special film stories, and the public will be given the opportunity of witnessing the actual work of taking pictures and later will see these in the theater adjoining the studio. A number of productions have already been made and these are being handled by the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., of this city.

LONG TRIP IN SMALL BOAT.

William Woodworth, manager of a moving picture theater at Juneau, Alaska, and a charter member of the Arctic Brotherhood, plans to leave for San Francisco early in July in a 28-foot power boat, accompanied by two friends. Moving picture apparatus will be carried and pictures will be made on the way down the Coast.

ALLEN TAKES CALIFORNIA OFFICES OF UNITED.

J. W. Allen, who recently arrived in this city from Los Angeles, on his way to the Northwest, where he planed to take charge of the interests of the United Film Service, received word while here to remain in San Francisco as manager of the two California branches and has taken charge here. Mr. George Ekre, who has been with the firm in charge of the San Francisco branch for some time, has resigned and expects to leave for the East shortly.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

The Filmoptican Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $60,000, to deal in moving picture machines and films. The interested parties are C. A. Turner, W. S. Braun, K. Van Zante, C. R. Bassett and J. R. Robinson.

The Theograph Film Company has made application to the California Corporation Commission to sell stock to the extent of about $75,000 to enable it to commence work on the manufacture of religious educational pictures.

S. Harris, who handled "Tillie's Punctured Romance" in Oregon and Washington, is in this city for a short stay.

The stock and fixtures of the Kriterion Exchange are to be disposed of at an early date at auction.

The Elite theater on Market street, near Seventh, has changed hands and is now being operated by A. Cohn.

A change has been made in the management of the Electric theater on Church street, and this is now being conducted by Bruner & Jacobi.

Charles Goddard of Sacramento, and former president of the State League, visited San Francisco recently to look over late releases, as did also Nathan Brothers, who conduct the Actograph theater there.

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

Herman Levy has opened the Star theater at Newman, Cal., this being a splendid new house with a seating capacity of five hundred.

David Solari, who conducts a chain of theaters in Superior, Cal., and who recently took over the Garrick theater at Stockton, has renamed the latter the Strand and has installed two new Powers cameragraphs No. 6 A.

E. C. Shearer, a well known exhibitor in the San Joaquin valley district, has fitted up a traveling outfit and will shortly start on the road with moving pictures.

The Oakland Hippodrome Company has been incorporated at Oakland with a capital stock of $100,000 by J. F. Fleming, W. Morris, E. E. Smith and D. Greenau. Ye Liberty theater has been taken over and will be conducted as a moving picture and vaudeville house.

The Bell Amusement Company has been incorporated at Vallejo, Cal., by P. J. Hanlon, C. F. McCauley and D. J. Moran.

A new theater was opened recently at Woodland by Harry Leland, of Sacramento.

The Modesto theater at Modesto is again being conducted by A. A. Richards by reason of the failure of William Anderson to make payments on the contract of purchase at $14,000.

The Thomas H. Ince Film Co., of Los Angeles, has been permitted by the California Corporation Commission to issue its capital stock to Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, A. Kesel, Jr., Charles Kesel and Chas. O. Bauman.

I. F. Morris, proprietor of the Sequoia theater at Sacramento, Cal., was a recent visitor here. This house is now changing programs but twice a week, instead of four times, and is showing Fox and Metro attractions.

Texas Sunday Laws

Austin Court of Criminal Appeals Decides That Isis Theater at Fort Worth Broke Law by Showing on Sabbath with Voluntary Contributions—Public Opinion Thought to Be Against Strict Interpretation.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southwest News Service.

A MAJORITY of the Court of Criminal Appeals at Austin held that it is a violation of the Sunday law of Texas to operate a moving picture show on Sundays even though no admission is charged or required by the proprietor of such show. Judge Davidson did not concur in this opinion.

This decision of the court was in the case of E. L. McLeod, proprietor of the Isis, a moving picture show at Fort Worth, and in the trial of the case testified that no admission fee was charged and none required, but that a glass jar was placed near the ticket window for the purpose of receiving donations from persons who wished to donate on entering the show. On Sunday, March 21, 1915, donations amounted to $30.

The court held that the glass jar was only an evasion of the law, that it is clear that the legislature intended to prohibit any such place to be run on Sunday when it enacted the Sunday law and where a remuneration was received or accepted.

"The 'silent solicitor of contributions' is but a substitution for a ticket seller and such attempted evasion of the law cannot be countenanced," says the court, through Judge Harper, who wrote the opinion.

It is a blue law, is the verdict of the Beaumont Enterprise regarding the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeals, that it is illegal to operate a moving picture show in Texas on Sunday.

"But it is extremely doubtful that public sentiment will long uphold such a law," it continues. "It is very doubtful that public opinion will insist that this law should be enforced, although it ought to be enforced of course, if it remains on the statute books.

"A law that forbids on one day of the week, recreation of an educational nature, which in no manner interferes with the rights of others, and which does not in any way disturb the peace and dignity of the state, the due observance of the Sabbath according to the views of the conservative majority, is a bad law and it should be repealed.

"It was the proud boast of our stern, hardfaced, heavyhanded ancestors that they left their homes to come to a bleak, unknown shore that they might worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences—and, as some cynic has added, to prevent everybody else doing the same thing. A law that makes moving pictures on any particular day of the week unlawful is a law calculated to interfere with the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. A law censoring moving pictures, declaring what kinds may and what kinds may not be shown, would be all right. The moving picture is an educational influence second only to the school. It may be made a moral influence second only to that of the church. To forbid moving pictures on Sunday is almost as unjustifiable as to make it unlawful to use a musical instrument or to sing in a place of public worship on Sunday."

SOUTHWESTERN ITEMS.

The Soledad Theater Company of San Antonio which is erecting the new Soledad there has been incorporated with capital stock of $50,000. The incorporators are W. J. Lytle, C. T. Fincham and Martin Wright.

A series of moving picture shows and musical programs will be given this summer at the City Auditorium in Houston, the receipts being divided alternately between the public libraray and a charitable institution. The poor and friendless will doubly profit by these shows, as free tickets will be issued to all orphans' homes and other charitable institutions. Performances will be given on Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday nights and on Saturday and Sunday afternoons. Two early programs included "Les Miserables" and "The Life of Our Savior."

A drug store in San Antonio has been giving free tickets to the Grand to ladies and children with each ten cent purchase at the soda fountain. Reese Prosser, the minstrel man, has been singing at the Grand.

H. J. Gould of Dallas is now manager of the Rex at Waco, succeeding E. W. Peters, who has been manager of the Crystal at Galveston.

Wren & Berry have been making preparations to open the Lamar airdome at Wichita Falls.

The Williamson Submarine pictures were sent back to the Isis at Houston for two days.

The Odeon is the new name of Wonderland in Houston street in San Antonio, which has been remodeled by the Otto Koehler estate at an expense of $10,000. The reopening under the management of the Royal Amusement Company was planned for June 15. A stage has been added for vaudeville.

The Unique at El Paso booked a three-day return date of "A Fool There Was."

PHILADELPHIA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

MAE OLIVER and Lillian A. Boltz, the two winning contestants recently nominated by the "Evening Telegraph," one of Philadelphia's leading newspapers, to represent Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania in the Universal Beauty Contest, recently boarded the Beauty Special and are now enroute for the Pacific Coast, where they will see the Panama-Pacific and San Diego Expositions, the wonders of Universal City and many other beautiful sights.

FINE SET FOR DRAWING COLOR LINE.

The Senate, at Harrisburg, recently passed the House bill which provides that all persons have equal rights, regardless of race, color or creed, in places of public accommodation or entertainment. The bill now returns to the House for concurrence in amendments. Several alterations to the provisions of the bill were made in the Senate such as limiting the damages and fines for failure to provide with the provisions of the bill to $100 and the prison penalty originally one of the leading features of the bill was eliminated.

ORDER CHANGES IN BIJOU AT STROUDSBURG.

The many patrons of the Bijou theater, Stroudsburg, were recently greatly surprised when it was discovered that the popular playhouse had been temporarily closed by the State factory inspector. This was the result of the erection of an addition to the Wallace Department store which adjoins the moving picture theater and the closing of two side exits to the theater.

During the Odd Fellows convention, which was held in Stroudsburg several weeks previous, one of the delegates to the convention was an inspector and he notified the authorities at Harrisburg of the so called "fire trap" at the Bijou. He did not have the authority to close the house or to recommend changes as he was not on duty and did not represent that section.

The inspector ordered two five foot exits made in the rear of the theater and the platform at the rear graded back about ten feet, thus making a grade without any steps. The screen will also have to be made a little more narrow. The two side exits will be completely bricked in. These alterations will immediately be started and the theater will open in the course of a week's time.

DEPARTMENT STORE OPENS A SHOW.

A moving picture theater for the benefit of shoppers and their children has been established on the second floor of Lit Brothers' department store, Eighth and Market streets. Non-inflammable films are used in the theater and all pictures shown will be of an educational nature.

GEORGE BROTHERS BUILDING.

Recently after consumating a deal for the purchase of the moving picture theater known as the Photoplay, at 221 Market street, Harrisburg, next door to the Victoria theater, the George Brothers, proprietors of the Victoria, have completed plans for the enlarging of their theater. Isaac Silverman was the former proprietor of the Photoplay theater. Work has already started, but the performances at the Victoria have not been interrupted as yet.

Both theaters extend from Market to Blackberry street and have the same floor level and are of nearly the exact construction. The George Brothers recently took over the William Penn theater, at Thirteenth and Thompson streets, and are building a restaurant at the present time at Market and Aberdeen streets. They were pioneers in the moving picture business in Harrisburg.

PHILADELPHIA SHOW NOTES.

Manager Moses, of the Trent theater and the Taylor Opera House, Trenton, N. J., recently closed his theaters on the afternoon of the funeral of William S. Hancock, the well known potter of that city. Mr. Hancock was also president of the Trenton Theater Building Association which organization controls the two houses. In addition to the closing of the theaters, Mr. Moses has had his establishments draped in deep mourning.

The performance at the Stanley in Philadelphia, on Saturday morning June 12, was especially nominated as an official Boy Scouts' celebration. The interest of a legion of the khaki-clad lads has been enlisted and they are working as hard to insure the success of the unique affair as is the management of the theater. The play to be presented is known as the "Adventures of a Boy Scout," and has received the endorsement of no less a personage than President Wilson.

Mr. Samuel Lapin, inventor of machines producing dramatic sound effects, and who is located at 620 Riverside Drive, New York, was recently a visitor among the various film supply houses of this city. Mr. Lapin is the inventor of the wonderful drumona machine, the agency for which is controled in this locality by Mr. Calehuff, proprietor of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street. Mr. Lapin is about to place another invention on the market. This new machine will be known as a miniature church organ and produces electric chimes of the most melodious tunes imaginable. It is especially fitted for work in airdomes and can be attached to an ordinary piano.

It has recently been announced that a change in management has been put in force at the Empire Palace of Frankford. Mr. A. W. Watts has been superseded by Mr. A. Straud.

The new Palace, Main and Mill streets, Norristown, Pa., was opened to the public on Decoration Day. The program displayed was of a most satisfactory nature and, as it is the intention of the management to exhibit nothing but the best of films, many patrons should be attracted to this new theater.

William Eyer has recently opened a new moving picture theater at Pen Argyl, Pa.

NOTES FROM PRAIRIE STATES.

Wisconsin.

WILLIAM PUFAHL, five years operator at the Majestic in Rhinelander, has been made manager of the Crescent at Shawano, which has been leased from George Nagel by H. C. Zander, proprietor of the Majestic at Rhinelander.

O. H. Ostness, E. Buck and Ben Rosenberg of River Falls have been inspecting moving picture houses in that vicinity securing pointers for the house Rosenberg is to install in his building at River Falls.

The Neenah theater at Neenah recently had a program that was full of contrast. On it were "Creation" and "The Devil."

A new moving picture show is to be started at Wild Rose by local promoters, it is reported.

W. J. Brueske of Fall Creek is erecting a new theater at that place.

Iowa.

A. L. Larson of Des Moines has taken over the Iris theater at Hamburg.

L. C. Mainland of Monmouth, Ill., has purchased the Empire theater at Ft. Madison from J. M. Murphy. The new owner will be assisted in the management by his son.

The Electric theater at Maquoketa had local pictures for two nights.

E. E. Bennett of Dodge Center, Minn., who purchased the Grand at Cedar Falls, has been remodeling the house to secure a more artistic effect. He will change to General Film Service.

A baby tornado at East Pleasant Plain hit the tents of the Dayton & Hyde moving picture show and did $150 worth of damage.

N. Samish, manager of the Willard at Creston, has taken over the lease of Hal Kelly on the Temple Grand and will operate both houses, playing his big features at the larger Temple Grand.

The Superba at Lyons gave a benefit for the Lyons Veteran Fireman's Association.

C. H. Dodge, of Keokuk, of the Dodge Theater Company, has taken over the management of the Grand theater at Ft. Madison, succeeding D. Orville Reese, who resigned to accept a position as lecturer for an educational film over the Orpheum circuit. There will be no change in the picture policy.

C. N. Haight, camera man for the Temple Grand, filmed the Creston Volunteer Fire Department's tournament in that city.

Nebraska.

Free moving picture shows will be feature attractions at Capital Beach Amusement Park in Lincoln this summer.

Paul Pogenpohl and Boyd Toliff have opened a moving picture show at Cody.

D. C. and Paul Phelps have opened an airdome at Peru.

The Airdome at Nebraska City had the town filmed and featured the pictures for two days. The Airdome is using its own lighting system this summer.

IN ILLINOIS.

Rev. H. W. B. Prost, of Tuscola, has purchased a moving picture machine and will give shows every Saturday at St. Joseph's Hall, in that city.

Manager Joe Erber, of Erber's vaudeville and moving picture theater, at East St. Louis, has built a fireproof operating room outside his house preparatory to operating all summer.

No moving picture shows were given at Bluffs for two weeks because of an epidemic of scarlet fever.

Clinton friends of Archie Willis, who is now conducting a theater at New Albany, Ind., received word that he fell down stairs at his home and suffered a broken leg.

Sympathy, No Criticism

Oak Park, Illinois, Committee from Fair Hope League Has Learned a Lot About Running a Picture Show—Puts Responsibility Back on People and Won't Criticise Playhouse Management—Wholesome Hints to Critics.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A COMMITTEE from the Fair Hope League, which has given three "selected" shows at the Playhouse, in Oak Park, says: "One thing it has learned, and that is that running a moving picture show is not a dream and the Playhouse management has the committee's full sympathy and no criticism.

"Has it occurred to the public, which has remained away because the pictures did not appeal to them, or which came to criticise and found what they were looking for, that it is the patrons who decide the character of the program, that good films cost more than bad ones, that you can have what you demand for yourself and children by taking an interest and by liberal patronage?

"The Playhouse management is here to pay expenses at least. They are more than willing to co-operate with the public in a movement for better films. This committee believes that the film companies will have to feel some demand from the public before the right kind of films for educational shows can be secured. Of this and substitution it remarks:

"Sometimes fifty per cent. of the program is 'substituted' by the film company that has the contract to supply the pictures. We know this is true; we have seen the correspondence. The management is again helpless and has to show what is sent or lose financially, which they have done on several occasions.

"The films substituted are usually of the lower class. Why? Because more low class films are released than good ones, and since there is more demand for this kind by the public which supports the moving picture business in Chicago. This condition affects Oak Park and our children."

SUNDAY SHOWS PROGRESSING.

Sunday shows are to the front in two Illinois cities, Mattoon and Danville, while in a third, Evanston, theater managers have had it shelved.

In Danville the managers gave Sunday shows in the face of an order to close. For this the city council revoked all licenses, leaving only the Lyric with a permit. The managers hung together to make a court test of the case.

The question takes form in Mattoon by the managers proposing that city ordinances be amended so that they can give Sunday matinees. The argument that the young people will be better off in the shows than on the streets is advanced.

Bodkin & Keane, the Evanston picture men, who have asked for permission for Sunday opening, requested the city council to disregard that plea. The issue had been thoroughly discussed, especially in the churches.

WITH ILLINOIS EXHIBITORS.

In pursuit of the policy "pictures plus," Illinois exhibitors are still devising out-of-the-routine programs. In Urbana there is an amusement coupon company whose coupons are given with purchases by many merchants. These coupons are redeemed by the Princess theater or are good for a ride on a jitney bus. The Orpheum, at Rockford, had the official film of the Rockford Young People's Exposition. The moving picture show at New Boston also had local scenes. Dreamland, at Kewanee, is giving matinee-goers Japanese vases and chinaware, using local business house windows for striking displays of the souvenirs. Wright & Dehm, at the Lawford, in Havana, "treated" by showing five reels free to crowds which saw the high school class play in their house. "The Merchant of Venice" was given at the opera house in Dwight under the auspices of the Parent-Teachers' Club. The Rose, at Minonk, and the Abbey, at Monmouth, are adding to the musical program, having installed new players. The Evanston, at Evanston, had a "Movie Raffles," offering $10 to his captor and increasing the reward $10 a night for five nights if he remained uncaught. The Riverdale, at Riverdale, is operating only on Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

McINTIRE PUTS IT INTO POETRY.

Manager C. H. McIntire, of the Amuse-U, at Carbondale, celebrates his emergence from the hospital by breaking into the knocked-down, jammed-up style of poetry such as is written by Walt Mason, the Kansas bard. This song of convalescence was published in McIntire's usual 2x6 program space in a local paper. Appreciation of the many acts of friendship runs throughout, but for quotation purposes, the last paean of thanksgiving must suffice:

"It's all over now, and I sure had a very, very close call: I can hardly walk, but I'm sure glad that my appendix is in alcohol."

ILLINOIS NOTES.

Leal L. McCullough, of Springfield, has purchased the Colonial moving picture theater, in his native city of Urbana, from Mrs. E. S. Wheeler and E. C. Bleau.

J. A. King is building an opera house at Palmyra.

The opera house at Pana was destroyed by fire. Loss $40,000.

William J. Olson, six years manager of the Gaiety, at Galesburg, will be manager of the new $75,000 vaudeville house to be erected on South Kellogg street in that city by H. A. Craig.

It's Manager Bennett at the Haish Auditorium in DeKalb now, the firm of Breeding & Bennett having been dissolved. Pictures and vaudeville will continue.

"The Life of Saul" and "The Man He Might Have Been" make up a sample program for Rev. E. O. Stixrud, pastor of Epworth Methodist church, in Elgin, who gives moving picture shows every Friday night.

D. Boos has sold his moving picture show at Oregon and will enter the field at Dixon.

E. J. Burns has been fitting up a building in Elizabeth for use as a moving picture theater.

Edward Ball, of Ottawa, has leased a site on Madison street, in that city, for the construction of an airdome seating 1,000 persons. Ball formerly conducted an airdome at St. Charles, Mo.

Lou Collins has leased the Orpheum theater, on La Salle street, in Ottawa. This is the theater which has been operated by B. S. Jordan, who has moved to a new location. In the course of Jordan's removal an injunction was served on him restraining him from tearing out the front partition, booth and anything that had become a part of the building.

Ben A. Shepman has started the Shepman Film Advertising Service, with headquarters at Quincy. Industrial picture work will be done in connection with the recently established Mathes' Weekly Film Review, which will film middle western subjects.

Manager Newman has opened a summer season of pictures at the La Salle theater in La Salle.

OUR INDUSTRIAL FILMS FOR SOUTH AMERICA.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOTION pictures are to play a prominent part in the winning of the South American trade for the manufacturers of the United States, according to officials of the Bureau of Commercial Economics in this city. All last week bankers and prominent business men representing the South and Central American countries were in conference with our own bankers, merchants and government officials at the Pan-American Union endeavoring to devise ways and means for enlarging the commercial relations between the various republics and the United States. The Bureau has been requested by the Latin-American delegates to furnish motion pictures illustrating American industries which it has gathered from all the principal manufacturers, producers and transportation lines of the country. The Bureau controls a large number of films, but these are, however, only available for use when no admission is to be charged.

BEN. DRUM LEAVES WASHINGTON.

It was with regret that the local exhibitors and exchangemen were called upon last week to say farewell to Ben E. Drum, formerly manager of the local office of the World Film Corporation, who has resigned his position and has gone to Chicago where he will take a much-needed rest. Mr. Drum, it seems, has not quite recovered from the recent illness which kept him confined to a hospital here and his trip west is made partly to regain his health. Although a resident of Washington but a very short time, Mr. Drum has succeeded in making a large number of friends in this territory. During his regime he placed in effect a number of schemes for the betterment of the service and a greater efficiency in the office which made for the betterment of that business. He was popular not only with the employees but with all with whom he came in contact, and he has the best wishes of all for great future successes.

BAMBERGER TO MANAGE BRANCH.

Leon J. Bamberger, who has been assistant sales manager of the World Film Corporation, in New York, succeeds Mr. Drum as manager of the local office. Mr. Bamberger has had a number of years of experience in the motion picture business and broke into the game at the exchange operated in Indianapolis, Ind., by H. Lieber, which is now the office there of the General Film Company. After a two years' stay he went to the Kinemacolor office in Chicago, later taking charge of the Mutual offices, first in Buffalo, N. Y., and then in Indianapolis. Upon leaving that company he joined the World's forces and was a special representative traveling from New York to the branch offices. Under C. R. Seelye he was assistant director of sales and then assistant sales manager.

PICTURES IN A BOOM TOWN.

The Venice Amusement Company has opened the Venice theater at Hopewell, Va., with K. C. Corehan as manager; Grant Green has opened the City Point and another house is being built at that place. Hopewell is the place which has come into existence almost over night. It is the place where the E. I. duPont deNemours Powder Company is to manufacture ammunition for the foreign as well as the American army. A month ago it had a population of 500, it now has 17,000 and it is predicted that before the year is over that number will be increased to 35,000. Sidney B. Lust, of the United Film Service, who has just returned from Hopewell, says it looks very much like a mining camp in boom time, carpenters are hard at work putting up stores and dwellings, and there is a buzz and a hum totally unlike any other part of the State. Thus far the movies are the only amusements to be had nearer than Petersburg.

CAPITAL CITY JOTTINGS.

Edward Friedman, of New York, has been made a member of the force of the World Film Corporation's Washington office and will serve as a traveling representative.

G. J. Schaefer, sales manager of the World Film Corporation, visited this city on his return to New York following an extended stay in Dallas, Texas, New Orleans, La., and Atlanta, Ga.

The Apollo theater, on H street, Northeast, announces an increase in its price of admission from five to ten cents on all days except Monday. At the end of six weeks, however, the price will be ten cents on that day also. The theater will exhibit the V-L-S-E, Metro and Box Office releases.

Continued inclement weather is playing havoc with the airdomes. There was but a very few days during the month of May on which these could be operated, and a continuation of this condition will mean a heavy loss to the airdome exhibitors.

One of the most modern moving picture theaters, particularly as regards ventilation and sanitation, in Washington, is to be built soon at 1230 C street, northeast. The plans for the building, which is to be the property of the Home Amusement Co., have been completed by W. S. Plager, architect.

Eugene Rudolph is about to open Scheutzen park and airdome.

O. A. Savin, formerly of Bluefield, W. Va., has assumed the management of the Academy of Music in Lynchburg, Va.

C. A. Turner of the Empire theater in Portsmouth, Va., has taken over the management of the Columbia theater in that place.

J. D. Hofheimer and Mr. Rohrer, of Richmond, Va., stopped over in Washington on their return from a trip to New York and Philadelphia.

George Karanicholas, who operates the American in Norfolk, Va., is about to open an airdome having a seating capacity of 1,100.

Burton & Shippen has opened the Idle Hour in Petersburg, Va.

W. F. Thompson will soon open the Dreamland, in Norfolk, Va. This house has been closed for some time, during which it was remodeled and enlarged. A delay in obtaining a part of the equipment prevented an earlier opening.

J. F. Thompson, formerly traveling representative here for the World Film Corporation, has resigned his position and has returned to his home in New York.

A. C. Lombard, traveling representative for the Precision Machine Company, of New York, is in Washington for a stay of several weeks. He is slated during the week to address the members of the local operators' union and is going among the operators discussing with them any difficulties in operating with which they may have met.

The Circle theater on Pennsylvania avenue, Northwest, has been greatly improved by an extension of its lobby. A side wall, the depth of the lobby, has been torn out, giving entrance direct into the confectionery store which adjoins. These improvements will give a triple benefit—the storekeeper will get additional trade, the operators of the theater obtain increased space, and the patrons benefit on stormy nights when the lobby may be full by being able to await admission in the shelter of the store.

TINKER WILL MANAGE PHOENIX.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EARLE B. TINKER, who recently resigned from The World Film Corporation and took a position with the Picture Playhouse service, has again resigned. He will represent the Phoenix Film Corporation in Maine, and will release Cosmofotofim and Sawyer, Inc. productions to Pine Tree State exhibitors.

Several theaters have already signed up for Mr. Tinker's new service, and that Manager Burns, of the Graphic, at Bangor, will use it, speaks well as to its quality. Mr. Burns is noted for his good judgment and critical taste in selecting shows. The Graphic will use one subject weekly, which is the output of this company.

CHARLIE STERN PRAISED.

Speaking of Charlie Stern, manager of the Universal exchange, at Bangor, a competitor pays him the following compliment:—"He is a good example of what a film man must be to be successful. No one ever sees Charlie ruffled. Any exhibitor will tell you that his word is as good as gold."

NEAT BOOTHBAY PICTURE HOUSE.

One of the finest summer resort moving picture theaters in the State of Maine is that of Dolloff and Dutton, at Boothbay Harbor. It is run by Charles Dolloff and Walter Dutton, experienced show men, who know the business from A to Z, and are highly regarded by the public and fellow film men. Their theater is ably conducted in every way. It is clean, well ventilated, prettily decorated and leaves nothing to be desired. This house seats about 450 people. It has just started in every night in the week after having run three nights a week during the winter.

AMONG MAINE PICTURE MEN.

E. H. Little, who has been manager of a moving picture house in Lynchburg, Va., and has recently moved to Portland, where Mrs. Little's family is located, is looking for a manager's berth. Mr. Little has been a showman for 14 years as agent and road manager.

Daniel Maher, formerly operator with the Palace theater at Bangor, has taken a position with the Park theater in the same city. Mr. Maher is one of the best known of the Maine operators and has a fine reputation for skill.

Manager A. L. Ehrgott of the General Film Co., Bangor, has returned from a trip to Machias, by automobile.

The Eastern Democrat, a Bangor weekly, is the only paper in the state of Maine devoting a page exclusively to moving pictures and general film news.

As in the past two years, Manager John Bishop will again have charge of the Gem theater at Peaks Island, Portland Harbor, this summer, the principal attraction being moving pictures. The dance hall in connection with the Gem will also be opened this summer and will be run in an efficient manner. The opening will be early in June.

W. G. Means, of Machias, has bought out Babb and Coffin, owners of the Phoenix Opera House, and by this move Mr. Means now has entire control of the moving picture business in his home town. He is proprietor of the Gem, which will continue as heretofore. The Phoenix Opera House has closed indefinitely. Mr. Means is using General Film service, which he reports is giving great satisfaction.

Thomas Willett, manager of the Dreamland, at Van Buren, is using General Film service. Mr. Willett was a recent visitor to Bangor.

Fred P. Chase, the Dorchester, Mass. man who is running theaters in Orono and Camden, reports that at the opening of his new house in Camden, it was packed to the doors, and there is every indication of a very successful season.

J. A. Guthrie opened an Airdome at Bar Harbor Monday, June 7, using Universal service.

Peerless Amusement Company, at Kingfield, has opened with Universal service, one night a week. R. L. Kimball is proprietor.

Lee Ferguson, proprietor of the Pastime of Mapleton, Me., has sold that theater to C. W. Sylvester, who will run Universal service.

BEAUTY CONTEST WINNERS.

The winners of the New England beauty contest run by the Boston Traveller for the Universal Film Company are: Miss Pauline Westphalen of Springfield, Massachusetts delegate; Miss Agnes M. M. Cheney of Concord, New Hampshire delegate; Miss Forrestine Dennison of Portland, Maine delegate; Miss Julia F. Hamilton of Richford, Vermont, delegate, and Miss Margaret V. McDonough of Jamaica Plain, delegate at large.

The following are brief biographies of the winners.

Miss Pauline Westphalen is 21 years of age and lives with her parents at 32 Bryant street, Springfield. Until four years ago, she resided in Manchester, Vt., where she received her education in the public schools and at the Burr and Burton Seminary.

Miss Agnes M. M. Cheney is 17 years old and lives with her parents at 6 Munroe street, Concord, N. H. She graduated from the Concord public schools and for a time attended a Boston business college.

Miss Forrestine Dennison is 21 years old and lives with her mother at 140 Sherman street, Portland, Maine. She is a graduate of a public school.

Miss Julia F. Hamilton is 18 years old and lives with her sister at Richford, Vermont. She is a graduate of the town's public schools.

Miss Margaret V. McDonough is 17 years old and lives with her parents at 362 Center street, Jamaica Plain. She is a student at the Notre Dame Academy.

The winners arrived in Boston on Tuesday and established their headquarters at the Copley Plaza Hotel. Several automobiles were placed at their disposal. They took a trip to Nantasket Beach on that day.

On Wednesday they went on a shopping tour. In the evening they attended the theater. On Thursday they were taken on a sight seeing tour of historical spots in and around Boston. After luncheon they attended a horse show and in the evening went to New York on the Fall River Boat, accompanied by Manager and Mrs. J. A. Eslow of the New England Universal Film Exchange.

HARDWARE MEN HAVE FILM.

The committee of the new England Hardware Dealers' Association in charge of the campaign to have the National Retail Hardware Association hold its annual convention in Boston in 1916, has adopted moving pictures as its chief form of argument. The committee has had pictures taken on a tour of nearly 1,500 miles in New England and the film exceeds 3,000 feet in length. The pictures include city and rural views in the various New England states, scenes in and about factories and glimpses of cities and state organizations and officials who desire to entertain the National Association.

FIGHT ON FOR PICTURES IN EXCLUSIVE WINCHESTER.

The proposed entrance of moving pictures into the exclusive town of Winchester has been flatly rejected by the Board of Selectmen. Three of the leading women of the town who are backing the project, claim that they will push the matter and obtain an expression of public opinion on the question. George T. Davidson, chairman of the Board of Selectmen, is in favor of the idea.

The women interested are Mrs. Oren C. Sanborn, a member of the Fortnightly Women's Club, Winchester Country Club, Peace Society and an ardent suffragist; Miss Mary Kellogg, a well known classic dancer and authoress, and Miss Alice Mason.

In discussing the action of the selectmen, Mrs. Sanborn says: "We want a high class moving picture house for our town. Every child in this town, as in any other, must be amused and there is nothing more instructive and more entertaining than a picture show. There is not an amusement place in the town. We are going to try to find some way to push the matter at once."

Will Not Bar Picture

Boston's New Three-Man Censor Board Will Not Suppress "The Birth of a Nation"—Refuse Petition with 6,000 Names—Hard Blow to Negroes—Trouble Was Expected at Theatre, but There Were No Riots.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE newly formed board of censors for photoplays in the city of Boston has refused a petition of 6,000 persons to suppress "The Birth of a Nation" and the Griffith spectacle will be allowed to continue its run in Boston. This board, which is composed of Mayor James M. Curley, Chief Justice Winfred Bolster and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara, was created by a recent law which was enacted by the Massachusetts legislature to deal with this famed production on account of the many protests of the colored residents of the State.

The decision, which the board announced, reads as follows: "The officials designated by Chapter 348, Acts of 1915, having received a petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of 'The Birth of a Nation' be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protestants and the licensee and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

This decision comes as a severe blow to the colored contingent who have been endeavoring to stop the photoplay since it opened its Boston engagement at the Tremont theater two months ago. However the leaders in the agitation against the film are still confident of suppressing the picture, which they allege libels the entire colored race. They refuse to state what their next step will be. All insist that the fight will continue, but in what form they will not state. On two nights following the decision of the censors, large groups of colored protestants marched up and down on Tremont street in front of the theater. They made no unlawful demonstration, but kept repeating to themselves, the words "We protest."

The hearing of the board was private. Aside from the members of the board, only these five persons were admitted to the hearing chamber, Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, legal adviser of the board; J. Mott Hallowell, former Assistant United States District Attorney General, William H. Lewis (colored) and Butler R. Wilson (colored) representing the protestants and Attorney John F. Cusick, representing the picture interests.

It was previously agreed that whatever occurred in the hearing chamber should not be made public, except for the statement to be given by Mayor Curley. Representatives of the press were denied admission as well as a stenographer for the protestants. The protestants contended that the photoplay was immoral, was stirring race prejudice and was a menace to the community. They claimed that the board had the power to suppress the production by revoking the license which was held by the theater.

While the board was in executive session, the Mayor's outer suite was filled with colored men and women. It was originally intended that each side should have half an hour in which to present their case, but a full hour was used up by each side.

When W. Munroe Trotter, one of the leading agitators against the production, announced the decision of the board to 300 colored persons assembled in St. Mark's Church on Tremont street, he was greeted with cries of "Dynamite" and "There's a Way."

In concluding his address to these persons, Trotter said, "The case now rests in the hands of the public, in your hands, and I advise you to be very, very, very careful what you do."

Several police reserves were rushed to the Tremont on the night following the decision of the censors on account of several groups of colored persons who were picketing in front of the theater.

All the leading agitators, both white and black, against the production have asked their followers not to resort to any violence in their attempt to stop the picture.

"THE NIGGER" BARRED.

In spite of the many protests received throughout New England about the Fox production, "The Nigger" or "The New Governor" as it is sometimes called, the mayors of only three cities have seen fit to bar its exhibition in their cities. These cities were Everett, Mass. and Providence and Newport, R. I.

LEAGUE TO CELEBRATE VICTORY.

To celebrate their victory in the recent censorship fight, which was waged for several months, the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will have an outing to Nantasket Beach on Wednesday, June 16.

They will leave Boston on the 10 o'clock boat. When they arrive at the beach, many athletic events are planned. It is believed that a feature of the outing will be a baseball game between teams representing the exhibitors and the exchanges. Much rivalry exists between both sides on account of previous struggles which they have had.

President Ernest H. Horstmann is in charge of the arrangements and guarantees that all who attend will be sure to enjoy themselves. He asks that all who intend to make the trip send in their names at once.

NEW ENGLAND JOTTINGS.

Sam Moscow, road man for the New England office of the United Film Service, is on a trip through Maine, making investigations of the territory for Manager Fred B. Murphy, who is contemplating opening a branch office at Bangor.

Walter S. Davidson, Maine roadman for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., has resigned his position. He is succeeded by Charles H. Nestor, formerly manager of the Columbia theater, Taunton, Mass., and a former member of the Mutual road forces.

Harry F. Campbell, New England manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has closed a contract whereby the productions of his company will be used in the Scollay Square Olympia theater, one of Boston's largest and most beautiful playhouses.

Work has been started on the projection room, which Manager Fred B. Murphy of the New England office of the United Film Service is having installed in the United Building at No. 209 Pleasant street, Boston. An operator will be in attendance all the time.

The Lawrence Opera House, under the management of W. R. Rothera, has changed over to its summer policy of using pictures. The house has a seating capacity of 1,600 and is using United program changing twice a week with ten reels to a change. An admission of five cents is charged. The policy is proving to be very successful.

Manager John Craig of the Castle Square Stock Company has decided o give an exhibition before each performance. He has arranged to have 600 feet of film taken each week, showing the members of the audience as they are leaving the theater. It gives the patrons of the house a chance to see themselves.

A new departure in automobile advertising for the state of Maine is the free exhibition of motion picture films showing an automobile factory in the construction of a well known automobile.

Mitchell Granby, who represents the Fox Film Corporation in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, was a visitor to Bangor during the week, and reports business as excellent. Mr. Granby reports that he has placed Fox Film Company features in 25 houses in the state of Maine during the past four weeks. A few of these houses are: Star theater, at Bar Harbor, Joseph Emery, proprietor; Grange Hall, at Harrington, run by S. Anderson, proprietor of the Milbridge Opera House; Strand theater at Ellsworth, Mrs. I. W. Pettingill, proprietor; the theaters of the Acme Amusement Company, John Goodwin, proprietor; and Music Hall, Lewiston.

Guy M. Farmer, who has been manager of the Palace theater, at Bangor, for several months, has given up his lease of that theater.

John Goodwin, general manager of the Acme Amusement Co., with houses at Hallowell, Kennebunk, Kennebunkport, and Vinal Haven, announces that he will open summer theaters in Winthrop and Belgrade on June 15, using Universal service.

I. W. Pettengill, of Island Falls, has taken on Universal service once more.

C. E. Howe, of Rumford, has opened a show in the towns of Andover and Canton, one night a week in each town, using Universal service.

C. E. Lindell has started in a moving picture circuit of towns in Washington county, showing in a different town each evening.

A mammoth electrical sign announcing the feature photo-play offered each day has been placed over the entrance of the Empire theater, Portland. It is about six by twelve feet, while the illuminated letters are about a foot and a half deep and can easily be read for several blocks.

Manager Charles M. Stern of the Universal Film Exchange, is fast becoming an expert bowler. As yet he has not gotten into the hundred average class but his intimate friends, who have been watching his performances, say that he is rapidly acquiring a form that will land him in the top notches in a very short time.

Your correspondent is rejoicing in the birth of a ten and a half pound son and doesn't care who knows it.

Wallace W. Herne of Bangor, is planning to start a travelling moving picture show in this section of Maine within the next few weeks. Mr. Herne who comes of a theatrical family, the most noted member of which was James Herne of Hearts of Oak fame.

There will be a moving picture theater in a new block to be erected at Morrill's Corner, Portland, in the near future, directly opposite the big Six Links Building, recently completed.

The Theatrical Mechanics Association, of Portland, gave a grand cabaret ball at Pythian Temple, Friday evening, at which the first genuine cabaret performance ever given in Portland was featured. A splendid program was arranged with cast from Greely's and The Portland. The ball was given for the benefit of the local branch of the T. M. A

The Palace theater, Guy M. Farmer, Manager, Bangor, is now using United Film service.

The Thomas Musical Comedy Company is now appearing at the Bijou theater, Bangor, in connection with the moving pictures, mainly General Film service.

"As a Man Sows," the great Acquila production released in this country by Sawyer, Inc., and a subject which holds a record for booking in New York, is coming in for first money down in Maine. This attraction is handled by Earle B. Tinker of Ellsworth, Me., who also controls all releases of Sawyer, Inc., and of the Cosmofotofilm Company in that state.

CLEVELAND THEATERS THRIVE

Summer Shows of Pictures—Plans for Three New Film Theaters.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE growing popularity of pictures in Cleveland finds renewed evidence in the fact that the legitimate theaters for the summer season have adopted the feature films. The Hippodrome, the Opera House, Metropolitan, Miles, Priscilla, Liberty and Gordon Square all have "gone into pictures." The Hippodrome, Keith vaudeville house, Opera House and Metropolitan are running big productions; Lyman Howe naval pictures are now on exhibition at the latter. The others have switched from vaudeville to regular program releases.

While several of the smaller houses of the city have planned on closing for a short period of the summer months there appears to be continuous development of plans for new theater construction. The past week brought out three architects' plans for large moving picture theaters, to be erected by responsible business men. The Strand Company has arranged to remodel a part of the Erie building, Prospect avenue and East 9th street, to accommodate an 800 capacity theater. S. H. Stecker, well known business man, will erect a new theater at the junction of West 35th street and Pearl road. Jacob Babin, real estate dealer, has plans for construction of another downtown house, to be located in the rear of the new Cuyahoga hotel, now under construction, at East 9th street and Rockwell avenue.

JOTTINGS IN SOUTHWEST.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southwest News Service.

DOUGLAS was not shocked by "Hypocrites." An editor there says: "After seeing Annette Kellermann in 'Neptune's Daughter,' and Margaret Edwards in 'Hypocrites,' both within a short time, without showing signs of serious shock, Douglas may be safely classed as not belonging to the 'long-hair' type of city. The same photoplays have been shown in some of the small towns of the country with serious injury to the mental composure of the good people thereof. Not so here.

"'Hypocrites' was shown at the Columbia theater to a crowded house at 25 cents a seat. While there may be some divergence of opinion as to the moral lesson intended and the manner of portrayal, there can be no question about the artistic success of the production. It proves that motion photography is reaching out into the realm of real art. Some of the scenes reminded one of Maxfield Parrish paintings."

The Majestic at Douglas has reopened with vaudeville and pictures at ten cents. Manager Wright booked some bonafide bullfight pictures for the opening night.

The Royal at Bisbee is giving free trips to the San Francisco Exposition.

The Majestic at Douglas conducted a baby show contest using slides of the competing youngsters as a lure to increase attendance.

The New Mexican Department of Public Instruction hopes to brighten rural life in the state by means of moving pictures. It has issued a license to the Pathescope Company, which will try to place an outfit in each district in the state if the consent of the county superintendent can be secured for a demonstration to the rural school directors.

The New Mexico Board of Exposition Managers at the San Diego, Cal., fair reports that about 500 feet of pictures were made of the dedication of the New Mexico building. Twenty positive copies were sent out over as many different circuits in the United States. In addition, the Pathe, Hearst-Selig and Universal weeklies each took about 300 feet.

In connection with a special children's show of "Fantasma," the Elks theater at Silver City, N. Mex., had Mr. Jua Sonstegard King, a professional story teller, to illuminate the picture. Prices of 15 and 25 cents were secured for this attraction.

The Barnett Amusement Company has booked the V-L-S-E service for its theater at Albuquerque, N. M.

C. J. Birchfield, assistant to the general advertising agent of the Santa Fe Railroad, and Operator Reeves of the Essanay Company were near Santa Fe, where they got some remarkable films of trains climbing grades and some unusual views of the cliff dwellers. These were part of a 3,000-foot scenic being made in the Southwest.

MOVING PICTURES AS MISSIONARIES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Hawaii News Service.

DR. SIDNEY L. GULICK, noted missionary and educator, who with Dr. Shailer Matthews recently visited Japan in the interest of better relations between the Mikado's empire and the United States, offers a solution of the American-Japanese problem in Hawaii.

"I can conceive of no more important or effective method for Americanizing our Oriental populations than by the skillful use of the moving picture shows," he says. "If the sugar plantations should combine, they might employ an expert man, or two on each of the islands, who could visit the various plantations and villages, in turn, and in time completely transform the mind of the entire population. He should have courses of lectures and reels on American history—Colonial Times and Early Immigration; the War of Independence; the Civil War and its consequences; Recent Immigration, etc., etc. The education should also serve to acquaint the people with the principal events and meaning of European history—The Middle Ages; Feudalism; The Reformation; The Rise of Nations in Europe; The Rise of Constitutional Governments and Democracies—the history of Liberty.

"But even more than this should be done. The Life and Teachings of Jesus and the standard stories of the Bible should be displayed in such ways as to set forth the fundamental moral and religious conceptions of Occidental civilization.

"By the use of moving pictures (5 cents to adults and free to children) the entire Asiatic population would be unconsciously swept into the circle of our Occidental life. Parents would move along with their children in their acquaintance without history and ideals. The chasm between parents and children, now dreaded, and to avoid which the Japanese schools exist, would be largely overcome.

"The man to give these lectures should, of course, be bilingual at least. Adults who understand little English should be addressed in their native tongues—Japanese, Filipino, Chinese, etc."

HAWAIIAN JOTTINGS.

"The picture world seems to be asleep in Honolulu regarding music and the picture. The artistic pianist who can play correctly to the picture is a recognized musician and artist, classed as such both in society and the music world," says a correspondent of the Honolulu Star Bulletin.

William Fernandez had George Kleine's "Antony and Cleopatra" on a tour of Lihue, Koloa, Eleele, Waimea and other places.

The Maunaolu Alumnae used motion pictures at their concert at the Valley Isle theater at Wailuku.

Ye Liberty theater in Honolulu is running "The Exploits of Elaine" each Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday night.

THE MISSING MAN (Special—Two Parts—June 21).—On the trail of Burke, a safeblower, Detective Drydan tracks his man to Benson, Arizona. There, the sleuth learns from Mary, a maid at the hotel, that Burke resembles her missing husband to a remarkable degree. Joe Ivans, forest ranger, is taught telegraphy by his sweetheart, Betty. The latter is the daughter of the operator at Benson. Burke overhears a conversation between the sweethearts and thus becomes aware of the fact that a shipment of bullion is expected on the Fast Mail. Securing the assistance of two desperadoes, he arranges a holdup. The crook promises to meet his men at the spot where this is to take place. Betty, riding in the vicinity, learns of the plot. Climbing atop a telegraph pole, she taps the wire and flashes a warning to Joe, who is at the Benson station. Joe notifies the sheriff and both set out for the scene of the intended holdup.

The desperadoes discover Betty. The latter attempts to escape but is brought down by a bullet just as she reaches the railroad tracks. The Fast Mail is barely a hundred yards away when Joe and the sheriff appear. Taking in the situation, Joe throws his lariat. This encircles Betty's shoulders and the girl is yanked from the track just in time to save her from being ground under the wheels of the express. In the meantime, Drydan confronts the crook just as the latter is about to set out to meet his accomplices. Burke fights like a cornered rat. The battle ends when the crook crashes against the corridor railing. This gives way and the fugitive hurtles to his death. Joe and the sheriff capture the desperadoes. Upon their return, they find that papers discovered upon Burke, prove him to be Mary's husband.

IN HIGH SOCIETY (June 22). Bud awakens Ham to tell him how easy it would be to rob the guests at the masque ball to be given by Gottrox, the pickle king. Ham, however, calmly kicking his pal in the face, rolls over for another sleep. That night finds Ham and Bud approaching the Gottrox mansion on burglary bent. They find Golden, the Gottrox heiress, spooning with Dick, her sweetheart. Dick, furious at being disturbed, tries to assault Ham. The latter, however, knocks Dick down and walks off with the fickle girl.

Mrs. Gottrox is anxious to have her daughter wed Count Vodka, a social lion. The latter, however, is really a Raffles, as Ham presently discovers. The latter sees the Count rob Mrs. Gottrox of a diamond pendant. A few minutes later Ham steals it from the original thief. Bud, who sees this, eventually steals the jewel from his pal. Ham follows up his good work by stealing a few gems from Mrs. Gottrox while engaging her in a mild flirtation. He arouses her husband's jealousy and the latter determines to use Ham as a floor mop.

Deeply smitten with Golden, Bud presents her with the necklace which Ham had stolen from her mother. The girl recognizes the jewel and cries for help. While Bud is being manhandled by the guests, Gottrox attacks Ham and, knocking him down, whales away at him with both fists. With a yell Ham awakens. Bud, seated on Ham's chest, is securing revenge for the kick!

THE VIVISECTIONIST (Special—Two Parts—June 23).—The strange cries which come from the Jardine house cause Worth, a neighbor, to notify the police. Lila is sent to investigate. Posing as a book agent, she enters the place. Dr. Jardine, however, sees through her ruse. He explains to the girl that he is conducting some important experiments in vivisection and that the noises heard by Worth are made by the animals he uses in the experiments. Dissatisfied, Lila departs. That night, a cordon of police is drawn about the house. The watchers see an auto drive up. Two attendants carry a man from the machine to the house. Quietly making her way to one of the windows, Lila peers into the room. She sees a patient struggling in the grasp of a burly attendant. The latter succeeds in subduing the victim, who is placed upon an operating table.

Dr. Jardine discovers Lila's presence. He neatly brings about her capture and the girl is brought into the house. Lila then learns that Jardine intends to sever the right arm from the man who lies on the operating table and transpose it to the body of his brother, who had lost his arm in an accident. The operation is about to commence, when Lila draws her revolver and shoots out the light over the operating table. The shot is heard by the police outside and they hasten to the scene. Jardine and his assistants are captured. At the station house Jardine's victim proves to be Murphy, an escaped convict. The doctor had aided the man to escape with the sole idea of using him in his experiment. It was Murphy's shouts for help that had attracted Worth's attention. The convict is sent back to the penitentiary, while Jardine is taken to a cell to await trial.

HONOR THY FATHER (Special—Three Parts—June 25).—Although it means the mortgaging of their home, Roger Dayton's parents send him to law school. Selfish and ungrateful, the boy forgets all about the old folks after his graduation. Alma, whose husband is serving time, fascinates the young man. Roger's ability brings him an appointment as prosecuting attorney. In the meantime, a bad season ruins John Dayton. Their home is sold over their heads and the old people are sent adrift.

Roger is in ignorance of this. Then, one day, he finds his father in a police court, tried on the charge of stealing bread. Ashamed to go to his father's rescue, the cur hastens from the court. Mrs. Dayton is saved from starvation by old Maggie, a newspaper vender, who resides in the same house. Roger's mother, ignorant of her husband's whereabouts, learns of what has happened while selling papers outside the jail. Fate has caused John Dayton to be placed in the same cell with Fenway.

Alma calls upon her husband and tells of how she is victimizing Roger. Dayton hears the story and when his wife calls, imparts it to her. The two prisoners are discharged on the same day. Mrs. Dayton learns that Alma is preparing to flee. Rogers enters Alma's apartment in time to witness the struggle between the two women. Preferring to believe the adventuress' lies, he sternly rebukes his mother. Chance leads him to discover the truth. At the same time, Fenway enters. Roger learns that the latter is Alma's husband. At once his own worthlessness dawns upon him and he vows to spend the rest of his days in expiating the wrongs he had heaped upon his parents.

IN DANGER'S PATH (Episode No. 33, "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—June 26).—"Spud" Doyle and "Chicago" Tim escape from Warren near Hobart Tower. Giving Helen a description of the men, Warren requests her to watch for them. Helen sees the two on the following evening and wires word of their presence. The crooks, guessing her intention, jump aboard a freight train lying on the siding. Helen decides to go home on the freight. The relief operator gives her a train order fixing the meeting point between the freight and an extra, requesting her to hand it to the trainmen. The yeggmen see her about to get on the train. Fearing Helen will betray them, the crooks make her a prisoner and throw her into an empty refrigerator car.

The thought of what must happen if the train orders are not delivered makes Helen desperate. Using one of the meat hooks, she chops her way into the ice chamber and reaches the car top. Upon reaching the open, she recognizes the crossing which the freight is approaching as the meeting point. Running forward, she warns the engineer. The freight is halted in time to avert a crash. The crooks leap from the train and flee. The following evening, Helen and Warren meet the yeggmen. The latter defeat the detective after locking Helen in a shanty. Later, the telegrapher and Warren locate "Spud" and "Chicago" near the turntable. In the fight which ensues, the men tumble into the pit just as the yardmen, unaware of what is taking place, begin turning a big mogul. Helen rushes across the turntable to the motor house and shuts off the power just in time to save the helpless trio from being crushed to death. The yardmen appear upon the scene and rescue the combatants. The crooks are placed under arrest.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES, NO. 12 ("Mr. Jarr and Love's Young Dream"—June 21).—When Jack Silver, Jarr's young bachelor friend, comes into a big fortune the Cackleberry girls, visiting the Jarrs, at once draw lots to see who shall set their cap for the suddenly wealthy young man whom they had previously snubbed because he was poor. Gladys wins and Jack falls an easy victim to her matrimonial wiles. Irene becomes jealous of her sister's good fortune and intermingles a few sprays of poison ivy in the bunch of beautiful roses she sends her for the wedding. The box of roses is delivered to Mr. Jarr, who takes the expressman around to Gus's place, where he stands a treat. The box lid comes off and Gus and his friends all take long whiffs of the flowers and, of course, incidentally come in contact with the poison ivy. The same thing happens at home. The day of the wedding Mr. Pinkfingers, Jack's best man, has a dreadful case of "nerves" when he discovers the groom is sick abed with the poison, and rushing over to the Jarrs finds everybody except Mrs. Jarr has fallen victim to the mysterious disease. Gus and the bunch, their faces and hands swollen all out of proportion, start on a punitive expedition to Jarr's flat, for they think he has played a practical joke on them, but his appearance convinces them he is innocent. Irene arrives and is forced to confess her guilt. The roses and ivy are thrown out the window, landing on the head of Jabez Smith, Jarr's boss, and his fair young bride, Clara Mudridge-Smith. The bunch just leaving Jarr's home see the whole Smith party smelling the roses, and return home in unholy glee at the thought that "there will be others."

VICTOR'S AT SEVEN (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—June 22).—It all starts when Professor Alonzo White invites his wife to dine with him at Rector's at seven that evening. About the same time, Hughey White, tired business man, is switched by mistake to the same telephone wire with Fifi Fluter, a chorus girl. After a little flirtatious conversation, he invites her to supper at the same place at seven o'clock that evening. Both men order private dining rooms. Because of an error and change in head waiters, Mrs. White, a big, strapping woman, is ushered into Hughey's room, while the Professor gets the room where Fifi is waiting. Hughey is mistaken by the muscular Mrs. White for a masher and she has him put out. The head waiter explains the mistake and both go to Fifi's room. Seeing her husband there, Kate makes a rush for him, but he scampers into a private apartment belonging to Harry Horton and his wife. There he is discovered behind a screen and comes near being shot, but on explaining it was all a mistake, the badly scared man is invited to sit down and have a bottle of wine.

Meanwhile, Nick Hotstuff, Fifi's jealous lover, invites himself to Hughey's little supper in Fifi's room and proves a veritable spectre at the feast, making the affair very slow for Hughey. Later on Mrs. White interrupts a miniature cabaret performance, the Professor (now feeling greatly exhilarated from the wine) and Mrs. Horton are giving in the ballroom, and an exciting chase in taxis follows. Mrs. White is arrested for not having fare money, while the Professor gets mixed up with a burglar, and, being found with a sack of plunder in his bewildered possession, is likewise pinched. Meanwhile, Nick secures a terrible revenge on Hughey, which—after a series of embarrassing incidents—terminates in the whole bunch being taken to the police station. Explanations and humble repentance become general. Quiet is finally restored, and after imposing some goodly fines, together with much excellent advice, the magistrate unites in marriage Nick and Fifi, after which the various couples go away happy.

AN INTERCEPTED VENGEANCE (June 23).—When Jim Henson, bad man and rancher, falls in love with Bess, daughter of Willard, the Agency storekeeper, on the Blackfoot Reservation, he goes straight to her father and says, "I'm going to marry your gal—or bust you up in business!" Willard, who is a mild-mannered man, is brow-beaten into influencing the girl—despite her dislike for Henson, to consent to marry him. Like most men of his stamp, Jim Henson is quick-tempered, and discovering Bess has taken a liking to Colby, the new store clerk from the East, Jim is furious. He warns the Easterner to keep away from "His gal." Bess and the young Easterner fall in love, however, and decide to run away together. Henson is on the lookout, and catches them. He marches them back to her father and sends Colby a note saying he is coming to kill him at six o'clock that night. The Easterner is no coward, but he can't hit the broad side of a born with a pistol, so it looks bad for him. That afternoon a pony belonging to Gray Antelope, one of the Reservation Indians, breaks into Henson's grain field, and creates havoc. In an outburst of anger, the rancher raisis his rifle and kills the horse. Gray Antelope demands payment for the animal, but Henson sneeringly tosses him a dollar and rides away after shooting the Indian's hat off. Gray Antelope swears vengeance, calls the other braves, and the result is Henson is ambushed and captured. Bound hand and foot, he is tied by a long rope to the tail of a horse. The animal is lashed into a mad gallop and, watching their enemy being dragged through dust and over rocks, the Indians know their revenge is complete. Exactly at six o'clock the horse arrives at the agency store, dragging the body. Henson is dead, his vengeance intercepted by the vengeance of the Indians, and at last is seen Gray Antelope tenderly stroking the head of his dead pony.

WHAT'S OURS (June 24). At Hathaway & Eaton's, a big department store, Sylvia Chase applies for and receives a position at the glove counter. Mrs. Burke, wife of a millionaire, and a lady of philanthropic tendencies, who had once been a salesgirl herself, becomes interested in Sylvia, and the two become great friends. Burton Tremper, a young man with very wealthy parents living in Philadelphia, comes to New York to learn the meaning of the word, "work," and falls in love with Sylvia. Arthur Meadows, Tremper's friend, feeling the affair is only an infatuation, very kindly writes his aristocratic mother that she is in danger of losing her son to a salesgirl. Mother starts for New York at once to put a stop to the affair, but Sylvia has something to say about the matter herself, and politely but firmly announces she will reserve decision. After vainly trying to solve the matter to her own satisfaction, Sylvia goes to her friend, Mrs. Burke, and asks her advice. That wise lady sums up her wisdom in the simple words: "If he loves you, leave the decision to him, but don't let the world's foolish little barriers keep you from your own!" Cheered by the words and strengthened in her resolution to refuse to give up Burton, Sylvia goes back to her work with a light heart, feeling certain that her lover will make a true decision. Meanwhile, Mrs. Tremper and her son argue and argue, but all in vain; both are equally obstinate, and finally, after Burton states emphatically that he intends to marry the girl he loves and the money can go hang, Mrs. Tremper angrily disinherits him. He takes it bravely, however, for he has learned what it is to work, and with a determination to succeed in his chosen profession, that of law, he goes to Sylvia, tells her all, and secures the momentous "Yes" to his ardent proposal and the happiness which is theirs.

THEIR FIRST QUARREL (June 25).—At breakfast Mr. Newlywed receives a letter from an old friend inviting him and his wife to the station to meet his party, while they are waiting for the Limited. That is all right, but when Mrs. Newlywed notices a sentence in the note reading: "The beautiful Miss Darling—you remember her—is with us," jealousy almost chokes her. She asks her husband who "that person" is and both are soon in the midst of their first quarrel. What wonderful eye-openers these first quarrels sometimes are, and what amazing tempers the fair young bride and her loving, gentle husband, display. After the tornado of emotion has blown itself out, Mrs. Newlywed bursts out crying, calls her husband a brute, and announces her intention of going home to mother! She thinks that will bring him to terms, but to her utter surprise, he angrily avows his intention of helping her pack up right away; she can go as soon as she likes! He gets a railroad ticket for her, and insists she leave on the noon train, whereat another flow of tears follows. Mr. Newlywed, at the office, begins to feel sorry when the reaction sets in, and buying some flowers, he goes home to make up. Mrs. Newlywed, in the interim, has also decided she has been very foolish, but intends to retain her dignity, nevertheless. As her husband enters, she haughtily closes the trunk and pretends to be just starting for her mother's. He is very humble, admits he has been a brute and offers the flowers as a peace offering. But instead of coming into his waiting arms, she goes into another tantrum, which angers him so he throws the flowers on the floor and storms out. She lets him get as far as the study, then calls, and he turns to see her caressing his flowers. Apparently confused, she runs upstairs, and there Mr. Newlywed takes her—laughingly protesting—in his arms. They kiss and their first quarrel ends as all newlyweds' quarrels do—in better understanding of each other, and—love.

THE SILENT W (Special—Two Parts—June 26).—Florence Ray is urged by her parents to marry a certain wealthy Mr. Carroll, and apparently consents, but in reality plans an elopement with Ned, her sweetheart. Papa Ray writes a letter to Mrs. Osgood, the wife of a business connection in New York, who has never seen Florence, that his daughter will arrive on Tuesday to buy her trousseau. Florence leaves, as planned, but gets off the train at St. Louis, meets Ned and elopes. In Cambric, Ohio, the mother of another Florence, whose last name is Wray, receives a letter from Anna Bean, her married cousin in New York, inviting her on for a visit. Florence Wray goes, and arriving on Tuesday, is met at the sation by Jim Osgood, who mistakes her for Florence Ray. A policeman sees the meeting and takes particular note of the couple. At the Osgood home Florence sees the leter from Papa Ray regarding the other Florence and realizes the mistake that has occurred. She has forgotten her cousin's married name, however, so she decides to let the deception go on until she can locate her relative. Anna's husband, puzzled over Florence's non-appearance, meets the station policeman and it is decided that Florence has been abducted. Meanwhile Florence Wray is having a grand time shopping with Mrs. Osgood in a beautiful limousine. Mrs. Osgood discovers that Jim Osgood is falling in love with Florence and warns him that the girl is engaged. The next day Florence's conscience begins to trouble her and she finally confesses to Jim her deception. He is astounded at first—then very happy, for he can now declare his love. He does so and is accepted. On a visit to Anna, Florence learns to her utter amazement that her husband-to-be is Jim Osgood, the millionaire. Mrs. Osgood's gracious consent to their marriage is won and everybody is made happy by Florence's little deception and the "silent W," which played so prominent a part in the affair.

THE MAN WHO FOUND OUT (June 21).—The Man, while in a railroad coach, dozes and dreams that his wife is untrue to him. He wakes with a start and arrives home in a nervous apprehension, having been greatly oppressed by his dream. He construes everything his wife does into suspicious circumstances. Finally he throws open a door of the bathroom to find a man there. He heaps accusations upon his astonished wife than discovers that the man is a plumber doing repair work. The Man begs his wife's forgiveness, which she readily grants and he learns a lesson.

BRAGA'S DOUBLE (Special—Two Parts—June 22).—Dominica Menduna, the beautiful and unusual heroine of a series of startling adventures, has her own code of morals, elastic as to the property rights of others, rigid as to her own personal conduct. Emilio Braga, a saturnine-faced Argentino, is a criminal by instinct, training and desire. He sends Dominica, who is his companion and assistant, to the cafes to find a double for him that he may establish an alibi while he wreaks vengeance on his official and personal enemy, Legrand. Legrand is as unscrupulous as Braga, from whom he has been extorting money for former crimes. Braga plans to kill him but fails. Dominica finds the double in the person of Taylor, a mining man from El Paso, Texas, and the complications that arise give them both much to do, and Taylor an opportunity to show just what he can do in a rough and tumble fight in the cafe, where he is assaulted by ruffians, who mistake him for Braga. Dominica conceives a feeling for him that is just a little warmer than respect and Braga's jealousy is aroused. Dominica scorns Braga and leaves him in rage and disgust.

THE FABLE OF THE SEARCH FOR CLIMATE (June 23).—Once there was a poor Gloomer who had time-tabled himself all over the Globe, trying to find a climate that would enable him to rise each A. M. feeling fit as a fiddle. His private drug store was stocked with all the remedies favored by his friends at the club and yet, from month to month, his general health did not improve. He went to England, France and Germany to save his life, but what was food for the natives was Katzenjammer for the poor invalid. After weeks of complete saturation he was a faded flower. He arrived back in the land of dyspepsia and got ready to motor to the North woods. When the car skidded he went up in the air and alighted on a farm. After his leg was in splints at the Peabody farmhouse he felt shattered and called for rye or Bourbon, but Mrs. Peabody, local president of the W. C. T. U., told him he would feel better if he took a nap. Although deprived of the necessities of life, he was alive and chipper after a week had elapsed. No busthead in the morning and he felt like a bird all day. At last he had found the right climate. When it came time to pull back to the big town he hated to say goodbye to his benefactors and the invigorating ozone. Back at the club his pals took one peep at him and threw up their hands. They said he looked like another man. He said it was the climate. Then the Poor Man made an appalling discovery. He learned that while he was out in the tall grass he had mislaid his thirst.

A HOT FINISH (June 24).—The girl reads a magazine article on how to become an actor. She goes through all the actions described and her mother thinks she is crazy. Her father, however, takes her by the ear and sends her out for a can of milk. When she is out of sight of the house, she sits on a bench, takes her magazine and begins to read again. Presently she drops asleep and dreams that an actor comes to her home, she elopes with him and they become famous on the stage. She is rudely awakened by her father, who goes in search of her when she is long in returning. He tears up the magazine and she decides to become reconciled to farm life.

A DIGNIFIED FAMILY (Special—Three Parts—June 26).—Dan Carter, the undignified member of a dignified family, engages as principal in a prize fight and is ostracized by his family. He goes to the mountains, teaches school and falls in love with Ann Barth, a harum-scarum hoyden, illiterate and glad of it. His family comes to the mountains where Dan's brother Melville, sees Ann and the two fall in love. Melville repudiates her at the door of his father's home and Ann determines on revenge. She goes to a fashionable school where she gets a thorough education and becomes a society girl. Melville, not recognizing her, falls in love with her and the engagement is to be announced at a dinner. They appear at the dinner, where Ann, completing her revenge, throws Melville over and announces that she will marry Dan, the only man she ever really loved.

THE WEALTH OF THE POOR (June 11).—A poor man and his wife have a hard struggle to make ends meet. They have seven children and frequently find it a hard task to get food for them all. The poor man has a wealthy brother who has no children. He and his wife are very anxious to adopt one of the poor brother's children. He offers his brother a house, land and money if he will consent to give up one of the children. The poor man and his wife go through the children's rooms at night to see which one they will give up, but at each bed they decide that one cannot be spared. In the morning when they see all seven at the breakfast table they rejoice that they had not given any of them up. They decide that is their compensation for poverty.

A SPORT OF CIRCUMSTANCES (June 23).—The Rev. Zack Leigh is one of those ultra-dignified parsons whose daily exercise consists of turning the pages of religious pamphlets and woman suffrage propaganda. Lee Ryder is a jockey, whose cardinal occupation is evading his alimony-seeking wife; Mrs. Leigh is a fanatical suffragist, who likes to parade about occasionally with flags and banners decrying men. Mrs. Ryder, on a still hunt for her elusive spouse, happens into his room in time to find a telegram from the owner of Fire-Fly, a race horse, asking Ryder to hurry to Plumville and ride the thoroughbred in the big stake event of the afternoon. She decides to hustle to Plumville and get some money from her husband there. The Rev. Mr. Leigh is handed a letter from his wife to the effect that she intends to come home that day, and if he will meet her at Plumville they will take part in the suffrage parade. Off he goes to Plumville, arriving at the hotel simultaneously with Lee Ryder. Both are assigned rooms. Meanwhile an army of suffragists enters the hotel, their headquarters.

Wishing to look his best in the parade, Mr. Leigh sends his suit out to a nearby tailor to be pressed. He is in the hallway in rather undignified attire as some wandering suffragists are heard approaching. Into the jockey's room dashes Mr. Leigh. Ryder's jockey suit is sent to the room shortly after, and, thinking it is the costume the committee wishes him to wear in the parade, he hastily dons it. Hardly has he arrayed himself in the suit when Turbot, the owner of Fire-Fly, with other sports, rushes into the room. They pick up the unfortunate and uncomfortable minister, and carry him bodily to the track where he is thrown upon a horse. They are off! Around the track they speed! He is first! For the entire mile Mr. Leigh hangs this way and then that way upon the fleet animal. It is a wonderful exhibition of riding. He is returned a winner, and all sing his praises. Mrs. Leigh and Mrs. Ryder have taken up positions in front of their respective husbands' rooms. The latter attempts to embrace the minister, but he repels her with a dignified wave of the hand. Then he declares his identity. Then all proceed to faint.

THROUGH TURBULENT WATERS (Special—Four Parts—June 25).—The West is the stamping ground for Paul Temple and his thespian associates. He is talking with his sweetheart, Jane Dinsmore, as Alice Robinson. Jane's intimate friend, enters with a letter from an erstwhile associate, advising her to go to New York and accept a place in the chorus. A word from Temple, and Alice has made up her mind. She leaves for New York. Temple and Jane have been married some time, and are living unhappily, apart from the old folks. The former's reputation as a heavy actor is wide, but drink has degraded him. Subsequently, Jane dies, due to Temple's abuse of her. A short time previous to her death, Jane had sent a telegram to her father advising him of the wretched conditions under which she was living, and the information has prompted Dinsmore to go in search of her. Arriving at the Temple address, he is advised by the landlady of his daughter's demise and persecution. He swears to avenge his daughter.

Alice is contented with her place as a member of a cheap stock company. Temple, a dissipated person, has come to New York, and is engaged as the leading man in the company Alice is with. Alice is, of course, surprised to see him, but he mourns the loss of his "poor wife" and explains that, for professional reasons, he has changed his name to Delaney. Alice accepts his explanation. Attracted by her beauty, and recognizing in her much latent talent, Temple promises to make her a great actress and she, in turn, falls under his hypnotic influence. James Montrose, a producer, and Frank Wentworth, his lawyer, see the play in which Temple, now known as Delaney, is starring. They decide on him as their choice for their new Broadway vehicle, "The Lesson." Delaney is engaged, and through his influence, Alice is retained to play the ingenue lead. He goes through a sham form of marriage with Alice, with a man named Ford, hired to act as a parson. Night after night, Delaney coaches her, until Alice plays the part almost perfectly. Her big scene is in the last act, when she fires at Delaney as the curtain falls. All this time Dinsmore has been scouring the West for a trace of Temple, not knowing that he has changed his name.

The play is a signal success. The first night brands Alice as a star. By chance Dinsmore, who has come on to New York, sees a photograph of Delaney with Alice, and, after investigation, learns that he is starring in "The Lesson." He thereupon writes a number of notes to the star threatening him. The receipt of these letters has begun to undermine the nervous system of Delaney. To add to this source of discomfort and worry, Alice, having come upon Delaney and Ford when the latter was demanding the rest of the money for performing the mock marriage, discovers that she is not really married to him, with the result that she expresses the wish that real bullets be in the stage revolver at the performance at the theater that evening. After several notes have been sent, Dinsmore conceives a plan by which to avenge the death of his daughter, and forges a pass which admits him back of the stage in the theater where Delaney is playing. He replaces the blank cartridges in the revolver with real bullets, with the result that Delaney is shot to death by Alice. She is arrested, and held on the strength of a statement by the maid, who heard her express the wish that real bullets be in the revolver. Dinsmore, reading of Alice's arrest in the paper, calls Wentworth, now handling Alice's case, on the telephone, and, without disclosing his identity, confesses he was responsible, Alice is released. Dinsmore, realizing that there is now nothing more to live for, commits suicide. Wentworth, having long since shown affection for Alice, is now accepted by her.

THE BREAKS OF THE GAME (June 26).—Usually there is little time for sentimentality in the newspaper office, but Bob Carpenter, the star reporter, and Marjorie Vale, found a little now and then between assignments. Marjorie refuses to take his suit seriously, however, until Bob has put over a "scoop" on the contemporaries in the city. Bob happens into the police station in time to get a tip from Ah Sing, a stool pigeon, to the effect that a gang of opium smugglers are scheduled to land a quantity of the drug that very night. He and Arthur Vale, Marjorie's brother, also on the paper, accompany the police to the pier where they embark on a police boat. Herself curious, Marjorie strolls into Chinatown to see the excitement and is trapped in an opium den by San Fong, who uses Lou, an underworld character, to entice her to the place.

The police boat follows the course directed by the stool pigeon and the officers see several cans lowered into the water from the port-hole of an incoming steamer. Men in a launch come alongside swiftly and draw the cans into the craft. The police boat gives chase, and soon the smugglers are being pursued through dark alleys near Chinatown, the police boat having failed to overtake the fugitive launch. In the meantime, Marjorie, now conscious of danger, loses the mannish spirit which has characterized her in the newspaper work, and the woman in her is apparent. A secret panel is moved and she finds herself in a compartment elegantly furnished with hand embroideries, and rich ornaments. She pushes aside the hangings and gazes into a marvelously fascinating oriental room.

Into a door the Chinese rush with the officers and Bob Carpenter following closely. Carpenter assists the officers capture the smugglers and catches sight of San Fong (for it is his house) as he is about to work the lever of a trap leading to a secret room. Carpenter leaps upon him and they roll downstairs together into the room where Marjorie is. Bob explains that he has the biggest story that has broken in months and Marjorie remembers her promise.

ROAD O' STRIFE, NO. 12, "The Sacrifice" (June 21).—Alene's apparently inevitable fate is a crushing horror to Daisy. Besides this, Daisy realizes that Robert Dane's whole life is centered upon Alene and will be utterly blasted if she suffers the terrible penalty which the law has imposed. Unable to endure the suspense alone, Daisy goes to Dane's lodging house late in the night preceding the day set for Alene's execution, and finds him staggering with weakness from the wound inflicted by the night watchman, but triumphant at having solved the mystery of Gilbert Jerome's death. What one of the Biggest Exchanges says about the

STANDARD

The Master Model

The Greater New York Film Rental Co. of N. Y. City, headed by Mr. William Fox, needs no introduction to the exhibitor. Read the following letter, dated June 4th, 1915, from the hand of their Mr. Louis Rosenbluh, Vice-President and General Manager.

"We take great pleasure in informing you that we are still using the STANDARD machine which we originally purchased in 1909, and we can truthfully state that this machine is giving us as good service today as it did when it was originally installed seven years ago.

"We would not care to be without this machine for the reason that this machine will carry through film of any standard size, no matter what its condition. Particularly is it good for first run film, as the emulsion does not stick to the springs.

"The cost of maintenance is so small; in fact, it is rarely out of order. If we can use any more of these machines will be glad to let you know."

Do justice to good films and get the most out of poor films by installing the American Standard MASTER MODEL, the best projector made. Full particulars will be mailed to you upon request.

ments after detectives arrive to arrest Dane for the theft of the silver cup. Vainly Dane tells them of his discovery, but they regard his story as the wild fancy of a disordered mind, and refuse to permit him to appeal to the Governor. Dane makes a frantic effort to escape, but is overpowered. While the officers struggle with Dane, Daisy turns off the light, and flees down the fire escape, taking the silver cup and flask of water from the mineral spring. She is pursued, but eludes the detective by clambering aboard a passing freight train. Daisy enlists the sympathy of a brakeman, and is permitted to make the trip to the State capitol on the top of a box car.

Arriving in the capital at dawn, Daisy locates the residence of the Governor, but realizing that ordinary means would not gain her an interview at this hour, she breaks into the house, purposely making noise enough to arouse the inmates. The Governor listens to her story with incredulity, directs that she be turned over to the police, and Daisy realizes there is but one course remaining. In half an hour Alene will be executed, and Daisy believes that Dane will not live afterward. She carefully explains Dane's contention that the poison which killed Gilbert Jerome is contained in the metal of the cup; that this unknown poison is neutralized and even made a beneficial tonic when acted upon by the minerals contained in the water of the spring beside which the cup hung, but is deadly when these neutralizing minerals are not present. She fills the cup from the flask of mineral water and drinks, without harm, but a cupful of water from the Governor's own carafe proves Dane's theory true, and Daisy has given her life that those she loved might live. As Alene is led from her cell to the scaffold, word comes that the Governor has granted a reprieve.

WITH THE HELP OF THE LADIES (June 22).—Chief of Police Miles is indignant at the newspaper attacks and his inability to capture the purse snatchers infesting the town. He ponders, and a great idea arrives. He takes Green, his lieutenant to his home; they dress in female attire, provide themselves with hand bags and sally forth to await the visit of the purse snatchers. Two new cops, Mike and Tony, are pacing their respective beats when the chief and lieutenant arrive. Hogan, the purse snatcher, pounces on the hand bags of the two "ladies" and is off, but when the "ladies" try to give chase in fashionable dresses, the result is deplorable.

They yell for Mike, who enlists the aid of Tony, and they make a grand sprint after the thief. The purse snatcher with the two bags in his hands, runs into Mrs. Miles, who is returning from a meeting with a party of friends. She grabs the villain and she and her friends hold him until Mrs. Miles recognizes her gowns on the strangers and tells Mike, who promptly tells them both with his club. It is not until they are bundled off to the station and their hats and veils removed that their identity is discovered. The situation requires some explanation from the chief, but he feels so good over the capture of Hogan that he promises his wife some new gowns to replace those destroyed in the adventure.

FATHER SAID HE'D FIX IT (June 22).—Mrs. Mattie Wash objects to the attention Deacon Dark's son pays to her daughter Lynthia and tells him so in no polite language. On father asking the reason of his depression, Luke tells him that Mrs. Wash said that his son isn't good enough for her daughter. Deacon Dark promises his son that he will teach her their position and fix things for him. On arriving at the widow's home, he finds instead of a stubborn opposition, the widow in a most flirtatious mood, and instead of fixing it for his son, he sets to work to win the widow. The young couple are watching through the parlor window and see the widow nodding "yes." They are very happy until Luke finds out and tells Lyn that father says "it can be fixed." They are desperate and plan an elopement. The deacon tells the widow that under the circumstances they must elope and to keep the secret from the young folks. The elopements are accidently planned for the same night. When they all meet at the parson's, the young folks forgive the old folks and there is a double wedding.

THE LIFE LINE (Special Two Parts—June 23).—Mary Marsh, a stenographer, is employed by Rolf Howard, a bachelor of forty. He becomes interested in Mary as a peculiar specimen of humanity, and though at first he is only indulging in a whim, he soon comes to see the beauty of the girl's soul in its rough setting. He decides to try an experiment upon her—to endeavor to lift her to an appreciation of higher things, and gives her books. These perplex her, but she has enough insight to see a glimmer of their meaning. Mary is not bad, and she has successfully resisted the advances of Tom Moran, a married man from the race tracks, who is infatuated with her beauty.

But Mary has a brother, Dick, who is willing to endanger her in his efforts to win Moran's friendship, with the hope of gaining tips on the races. Mary has agreed, and has strung Moran along, but with Rolf's many kindnesses, she begins to feel the pangs of conscience. She determines to give up the life of frivolity she has been leading, and instead of going to one of the frequent dances, she remains at home to read Rolf's books. In the midst of Mary's determination to be worthy of Rolf's interest, Dick rushes in, panic stricken. He has stolen a thousand dollars from Moran and has lost it on the races. Mary is filled with terror. Unknown to her, the theft was all a part of Moran's schemes. He had led the boy on to take the money, and had given him a false tip. While Mary is seeking some means of escape, Moran comes in. He threatens Dick with imprisonment unless Mary yields to him. He gives her until the next day to consider. That night Mary goes to the office and forges Rolf's name to a check for a thousand dollars, and mails it to Moran, begging him to accept it in place of herself. But Moran discovers the forgery, and now holds a greater power over the girl. He writes her, demanding that she come to him in the evening, threatening exposure if she fail. Rebelling at the very thought of Moran, Mary goes to save her brother.

Rolf, concerned by Mary's absence from work, goes to her rooms, where he finds Moran's note. He follows her, and is barely in time to save her from the bully. Then Moran turns to Rolf, holding out the check, accusing the girl. Rolf takes the check, looks it over, puts on his glasses for a closer examination, then calmly tells Moran that it is his check and his signature. At the little apartment, Mary and Rolf find a note from Dick. He is going away. Then Rolf turns to Mary. "I have thrown you a life line," he says. "I only ask that in the future you be the woman God meant you to be." Later, in his office, Rolf finds a vastly different Mary. Then Rolf realizes what she really means to him. And Mary is more than willing to be "the woman God meant her to be" —Rolf's wife.

THE DREAM DANCE (Special—Three Parts—June 24).—Young Leon shows great talent as an artist, and is sent to Paris by his parents, the Duke and Duchess Cazenave. The art master sees in Leon a painter of great promise, and advises him to paint landscapes in the Pyrenees. There Leon paints a portrait of Mignon, a little Gascon maid. He falls in love with her, and they are secretly married. Leon sends his painting to the Salon des Arts in Paris, and leaves Mignon to attend the exhibition, but promises to return. He swears her to secrecy regarding their marriage. Leon's painting wins first prize at the exhibition. His fellow students decide to celebrate and lead him to the Moulin Rouge, where he meets Pepita, a dancer. He falls in love with her, and forgets Mignon. Pepita soon has him completely under her spell and he paints a life-size portrait of her.

Meanwhile a son is born to Mignon. Her father returns from service in Algeria, and when she refuses to divulge the name of the child's father, tells her to go to Paris, and not to return without her husband. Mignon leaves and finds Leon in Paris with Pepita, and in her innocence believes him when he tells her to go back home, and that he will follow in a few days. Back in the Gascon home Mignon's father softens when he gazes at her child and receives her kindly. Pepita, by her extravagance, soon has Leon in debt. The duke learns of his infatuation and threatens to disinhert him if he does not renounce Pepita. Leon refuses to do so and his father leaves in a rage. The months pass by. Leon is finally ejected from his apartments and all his effects are seized, with the exception of the picture of Pepita, which he hides. When Pepita realizes that Leon can no longer give her luxury, she spurns him. Pepita soon has another admirer, the Count de Lorme.

One night Leon again visits the Moulin Rouge. His former friends now ignore him, and he ruefully thinks of the past. A waiter shows the Count de Lorme to the same table. When Pepita comes out on the stage to dance, she sees the Count and Leon. Not fully understanding Leon's look, she tosses a rose to the Count. He raises it to his lips; Leon, seizing the rose from the Count's hand, dashes it to the floor, and slaps the Count across the face. Instantly the place is in an uproar, and Leon is ejected. Pepita also suffers for her past actions; the manager discharges her and the Count refuses to have anything else to do with her. A few months later, Leon is very ill. His landlord comes to collect the rent, and is alarmed at Leon's condition. Leon tells him of the story of his downfall, and rises to curse the picture of Pepita. He falls back weakly, and the landlord goes out to get some wine for him. Leon has a wonderful dream. The picture of Pepita comes to life, and lures him on in a wild vampire dance. Finally, as he is about to clasp her in his arms, she darts back into the frame. Leon is sitting motionless in his chair. There is a knock at the door. A little child sticks his head in. Behind him is the ever-faithful Mignon, who has again come to seek her husband. They try to awaken Leon, and discover that he is dead.

HER ANSWER (June 25).—Victor Sherelan has been the blot of one woman's existence. Grace Morgan is about to marry him, knowing nothing of Madge, the woman he has wronged, when an appointment comes to him as manager of the Philippine branch of his corporation. Grace hesitates to marry him immediately because of an invalid mother to whom she owes everything. The mother overhears the young people discussing her, and resolves to remove herself from her daughter's path to happiness.

Victor and Grace go to the theater. Madge, forced by hunger to steal, enters the Morgan home. She is traced there by a detective who has been watching her, and cannot escape. Just as she desperately seeks refuge in Mrs. Morgan's room, the latter whispers a prayer and raises a revolver to her breast. Madge is between two fires. Downstairs her pursuers are hammering at the door and she cannot turn back. She snatches the revolver from the hand of the bewildered mother and implores protection. The detective finds the revolver, however, and is trying to discover who owns it, when Victor and Grace return from the theater. A policeman downstairs explains the situation and Grace hurries upstairs. She has already promised to give Victor her answer before they part for the night. Coming into her mother's room and seeing the revolver, Grace realizes what her mother meant to do. Innocently asking who the strange woman is, Grace exposes her and the detective drags Madge out. In the hall below Victor is staggered to see Madge brought from above. He is about to denounce her for what he thinks has been her exposure of their former relations, but as she does not see him, he lets her pass. Madge knows now that she can never leave her mother and sends down her answer to Victor. She will not marry him. Bitterly disappointed, Victor goes out.

JUST LIKE KIDS (June 26).—Mrs. Murphy dolls her little daughter up in her clean white dress, with a stick of candy in her fist, and sends her off to play. Mary, sitting on the curb, is accosted by Jakey Schultz, who wants a piece of the candy. When Mary refuses to share it, he takes it from her by force. This attracts Mrs. Murphy's attention and she charges down on Jakey and beats him up with her broom. His cries bring Mrs. Schultz to the rescue, but she is no match for the Murphy woman, so she goes home and gets her husband. Between them they are licking Mrs. Murphy. A neighbor woman sees the scrap going on and she hurries to the building where Murphy is at work and informs him that the Schultzes are beating up Mrs. Murphy.

Murphy rushes to the battlefield and the tables are turned. Schultz and his wife hobble home where they proceed to nurse their wounds. Schultz gets reinforcements from the pinochle players at the summer garden. The fight is renewed and the Germans jump on Mr. and Mrs. Murphy. Murphy gets away and returns to the building where all hands drop work and return to the rescue of Mrs. Murphy. The scrap gets to the attention of the police and they are all about to be arrested when they spy little Mary and Jakey, who were the cause of all the trouble, on terms of loving friendship. The humor of this strikes the chief of police, and he turns the whole crowd loose.

HIS FATHER'S RIFLE (Special—Three Parts June 17).—Kirke Warren paints jungle beasts in their native state, and his dearest possession is a rifle, with the initials K. W. on the stock, and which weapon once belonged to his father. Higgens, Kirke's servant, is given a morning of relaxation by his master. Higgens enters the tent for some fishing lines, sees the rifle and resolves to take the gun with him on his morning's expedition. James Birch, a well-to-do African farmer, and Elsa, his wife, are happy in their jungle home. Birch leaves for a day's hunt in the jungle. Higgens' morning expedition has proven unproductive and he has but one shot left. As he stands in the woods, he sees a leopard enter. Higgens creeps forward with his gun raised. Birch is seated on the other side, behind a clump of bushes. Higgens shows excitement and fires at the leopard. Birch is in direct line of fire, and is shot and killed. Higgens, in pursuit of the leopard, discovers Birch's prostrate body. He drops the rifle and exclaims: "I must have done this." He then leaves the scene, letting the rifle lie on the ground.

One of Birch's native servants enters the woods and finds the body of Birch. The native shows the empty rifle to Mrs. Birch. He points to the initials on the stock of the gun. In the meantime, Higgens returns to Kirke Warren's tent and finishes packing equipment preparatory to their returning home. Kirke misses his father's rifle, and shows great regret at its loss. A year passes by, and Kirke Warren, the artist, meets Elsa Birch, the widow, in a ballroom. There is a mutual attraction and later Elsa invites Kirke to her house party. At the week-end party given by Elsa, the men plan a lion hunt. Kirke shows an interest in the expedition, but tells Elsa that he has no rifle. Elsa tells him that she will loan him one. Kirke enters the room and finds there his father's rifle. Elsa appears in the doorway. She sees Kirke's wonderment and stops. She realizes that she has at last found the owner of the empty rifle, and the supposed murderer of her husband. She plots what she believes will be a just punishment to a murderer. Elsa gives whispered instructions to a servant and says: "Tell him nothing regarding the rifle. Contrive to empty it and give him a belt filled with cartridges too large for the gun."

The men start forward on the wild animal hunt. Elsa wonders more and more as to the justness of her proposed revenge, and finally conscience stricken, resolves to try and avert a tragedy. Kirke encounters a lion. He raises his gun, pulls the trigger and the weapon fails to explode. The beast attacks Kirke and there is a desperate struggle. In the meantime, Elsa is unable to find the hunting party. She becomes lost in the jungle and there is discovered by a band of Zulus, who take her prisoner. Kirke and other members of the hunting party return to the Birch home. He indicates to the lady guests that his wound is not serious. Kirke resolves to ask of Elsa an explanation of why the cartridges were too large for the rifle given him. He asks for her and learns that she is missing. Kirke leads a party, including Higgens and others, in search of Elsa. They

RED SEAL PLAY

"THE ROSARY"

Adapted for motion pictures by Edward E. Rose from his wonderful drama of the same name and featuring Miss Kathlyn Williams with a strong supporting cast. Released Monday, June 28th.

A Selig Red Seal Play released directly to Exhibitors through V-L-S-E, Inc., and branch exchanges. A story of heart-felt interest sincerely endorsed by those of every religious faith. Released Monday, June 28th.

"THE MILLIONAIRE BABY"

It is the consensus of opinion among film reviewers that "The Millionaire Baby," picturized by Gilson Willets from the famous novel written by Anna Katherine Green, is one of the strongest film dramas of mystery, adventure and intrigue ever released. Mr. Harry Mestayer takes the leading role and is supported by Miss Grace Darmond and a versatile company of players. The question is: "Who Stole the Millionaire Baby?" Did Valerie Carew, former burlesque queen, prompted by mother love, abduct her own child? Did Marion Ocumpaugh, caught in the net of intrigue, cause the disappearance of little Gwendolyn? Did the scheming Dr. Pool finally accomplish his avowed purpose? Did Justin Carew, father of the child, take her in charge? The problem is satisfactorily answered in this gripping Red Seal Play released directly to Exhibitors on Monday, May 31st, and now proving the one big drawing card in the best theatres.

"THE CARPET FROM BAGDAD" RELEASED MAY 3rd IS PROVING HARD TO BEAT

Other Red Seal Plays Coming:

"The Ne'er-Do-Well," by Rex Beach.
"The Crisis," by Winston Churchill.

Viola Allen's Genius Makes "The White Sister" A Living Work of Art

"The White Sister" is more than a photoplay.

The genius of Viola Allen has lifted this wonderful drama into a thing of art, throbbing with life and action. Her mastery of expression has brought out the dramatic situations with a realism so intense that hearts throb and hands clench with a responding sympathy.

Imagine a young officer and a princess, bound by an infinite love, brought suddenly to the realization that they are forever separated.

The officer is reported slain in battle. The princess, overwhelmed with grief, takes the veil. After five years the officer returns to look for his betrothed. He comes suddenly face to face with her in a convent in the garb of a white sister.

Their hearts surge with a wonderful joy at the reunion. Then comes the terrible realization of a separation in life, a separation more terrible than death, that paralyzes all hope and leaves their hearts blanched.

None but a genius can reproduce such a situation. This is what Viola Allen's genius has done for "The White Sister." It has made of this greatest work of F. Marion Crawford a thing of life that grips the spectator with breathless interest.

This six reel Essanay feature can be booked through any of the V. L. S. E., Inc., branch offices.

strike the trail of the Zulus. A battle results, and many shots are exchanged. Kirke and his comrades rush upon the natives after they have exhausted their ammunition, and Kirke's empty rifle, used as a club, saves the day. Kirke finds Elsa and liberates her. At the Birch home, Kirke later, is recovering from his varied experiences. He asks Higgens: "What have they done with my father's rifle?" Elsa overhears the question, and asks Higgens, "What is the terrible mystery connected with this rifle?" Higgens breaks down and he confesses to Elsa that he was responsible for the death of her husband. Elsa tells Higgens that it was an accident and that he was not to blame. Elsa takes the rifle to Kirke and lays it carefully across his lap, showing tenderness toward him. Elsa tells Kirke: "You must rest now and when you are stronger you shall hear the true story of the empty rifle." A look of happiness lightens Kirke's face.

A TRAGEDY IN PANAMA (June 16).—Joe Green, stricken with fever while in the Panama jungle, is deserted by natives, and is cared for by Grace McGuire with whom he is living. While Green lies mortally ill, Grace McGuire's mind reverts back to other days when she succumbed to temptation and left her loving husband to elope into the wilds of Panama with another.

Mike McGuire has never forgotten the despoiler of his once happy home. He has searched for many months for the man who stole his wife. As Grace is caring for the stricken man, her husband armed with a revolver appears in the clearing and vows vengeance on the home breaker. He appears on the scene and seizes his unfaithful wife. Simultaneously, Green half rises in his death agonies, seizes a revolver and fires at McGuire. His bullet goes wild and strikes Grace.

THE ANGEL OF SPRING (June 19).—Betty, a young society woman, marries Jack, a manly young fellow but a bookkeeper. Betty is supremely happy but early reveals her dislike for babies and her horror of becoming a mother. But the time comes when she must enter the "twilight sleep."

During the "twilight sleep" a beautiful spirit, "The Angel of Spring," comes and takes Betty's spirit with her. The angel leads her to nestlings, to jungle mothers and their tenderly-nursed young and to other babies of the springtime. Back in the home they hurry the newborn baby from the room before the young mother can awaken; fearing the effect upon her already disordered mind. However, the lesson taught her by "The Angel of Spring" has wrought a great change in Betty, and when she awakens she longingly stretches her arms for her own little one.

BIOGRAPH.

THE CONDEMNING CIRCUMSTANCE (June 21). Theda Valencia, a woman who has had a love affair with Charles Hall, a prominent bachelor, reads a newspaper account of his engagement to Mae Allen. She sends him a note threatening to give Miss Allen his love letters to herself, and he comes to plead with her. "If you send those letters I will kill myself," he says, on hearing that she is determined. "You can't frighten me with that revolver," she replies scornfully. Her Japanese butler overhears these words; and later, when his mistress is found shot, with Hall bending over her dead body, he repeats them to the police. He does not know that his mistress has secretly taken the pistol from Hall's pocket and killed herself because her physician has told her that she has an incurable malady.

May Allen visits her fiance in prison and, believing him innocent, resolves to discover the truth. With a detective, she visits the dead woman's home and after a vain search for clues, is about to give up in despair when she sees the butler using a vacuum cleaner to take up some torn bits of paper. Demanding to see the rubbish which has been swept up during the past few days, she is led to the basement, where, after a search of the cleaner, the torn bits of the doctor's letter are found. On the back of the reconstructed letter is a note in Miss Valencia's hand, addressed to Hall, stating her reason for ending her life. On reconsidering, the dead woman had destroyed the note unsent, not dreaming that, by so doing, she would endanger the man she loved. But for the providential discovery of the torn letter he was doomed. Hall and his sweetheart are quietly married after his exoneration.

THE WIVES OF MEN (Special—Two Parts—June 22).—When it became evident that the construction work was going badly because discipline had relaxed under the blast foreman, who was a hard drinker, the chief engineer was summoned from the Eastern office to take charge. On his first day he had a set-to with the foreman and discharged him. The brute went home, maltreated his wife and crippled son, and drank himself into a stupor. Cautioning the boy to secrecy, the wife went to plead with the engineer for her husband's job. The engineer's young bride sided with her, and the foreman was ordered to report for work. But the generous action merely served to augment his hatred of the engineer. One day the engineer's wife, her heart touched by the fortitude of the crippled boy, took him to the hospital. The doctors gave hope, and in time he was discharged as cured. Some time later two little strangers came to camp—one in the engineer's home, the other in the ex-foreman's lowly shack. But with the first came the Angel of Death, and when the mother asked for her baby the engineer feared for her life should she learn that the child was dead. The nurse suggested a wildly impossible scheme, and in desperation the man caught at the idea. He implored the humble mother, by her gratitude to his wife, to let her have her baby. But at last she consented. Her husband placed a horrible misconstruction upon her visit to the engineer's home, and, wild with drink, went in search of the man, armed with a revolver. In a lonely place he came upon him, standing beside his disabled motor car. He raised the weapon and fired. Then he reeled backward in death—for a second shot had sounded from the hillside, where crouched a workman, who had a grudge against the ex-foreman. The wife, following with fear in her heart, arrived too late, and broke into uncontrollable grief—for she had saved this poor clay. Gently the engineer led her away to his home where his young wife was crooning happily over the child. With a great yearning the real mother reached out to her baby, but drew back in time. She had paid the price of gratitude.

HER CONVERT (June 24).—The old inventor's daughter is a mission worker. She makes a convert of a young crook and eventually becomes engaged to marry him. But her father does not approve of him, and shows him the door when he learns from a detective the record of his daughter's suitor. The inventor's plans are stolen by an unscrupulous manufacturer, and the crook volunteers to recover them. He breaks into the man's office and opens the safe. The manufacturer enters and surprises him at work. He dives through the window, followed by a shot. Some minutes later he staggers into the girl's home and restores the plans to her father. The bullet has found its mark, but he is not wounded, thanks to the little book she gave him, which he has been carrying in his breast pocket. His daring action in recovering the plans wins the old man's confidence, and he reaps the reward of his efforts to go straight. The plans are accepted by another manufacturer, and the inventor's labors are crowned with financial success.

FIGHTING BLOOD (June 25—Biograph Reissue, No. 3).—An old soldier on the frontier instils the fighting blood into his children by regular army drills. The oldest son has a sweetheart in a settlement not far away, and is going to visit her when his father brusquely orders him to stay at home. An altercation follows, as a result of which the soldier thunders: "You go out of that door tonight, and you go for good." His wife intervenes in vain, and the boy goes. Returning, he finds the door closed against him, and is convinced that his father really meant it. Wandering on his horse, he sees an Indian war party making for the settlements, and realizes that danger threatens his sweetheart. He rushes to save her and, having taken her to his father's cabin, rides furiously away to summon the patrolling soldiers. Back at the cabin, his father and several neighbors make a determined stand. The Indians ride the death circle about the cabin, drawing nearer and nearer until, at last, firebrands are applied to the cabin. The little garrison has to contend with a new enemy, the women dashing buckets of water from their scanty store upon the flames. A heap of dead men and horses encircles the cabin. But still the redskins draw nearer. The boy reaches the soldiers and leads them to the rescue. Just as the last defenses are being swept away by fire, the besieged garrison hears the bugles. When the father learns that his son has saved the settlements, he embraces him.

THE GIRL HATER (June 26).—Ralph Morgan's great desire is that his son shall marry his young ward, but John declares: "I won't marry her—I hate girls!" His father schemes with the housekeeper to bring the two together, and when the girl returns from boarding school, where she has been declared incorrigible, he "punishes" her by making her help with the housework.

Under the housekeeper's domination, with his approval, the girl is little better than a slavey; but Morgan cautions the woman not to "overdo" it. She does go too far, however, and John, the girl hater, comes to the rescue of beauty in distress by taking the girl away and marrying her. His father, who has watched his every move, waits until the knot is safely tied and then explains. John, aghast, stammers: "I—I forgot myself!" But it is too late.

A MIX-UP IN MALES (June 17).—"I will motor home about midnight. Be sure to be home to meet me." The foregoing note was received at dinner by Pop Rounder from his wife, Henrietta. So when Jim, another club member, suggested that they have a little party with his friends at the cabaret, Pop accepted with the provision that he be started homeward before the stroke of twelve. Cabaret life, however, agreed so well with Pop that at 11.30 it was necessary to force him into his automobile. Over this he protested with such vehemence that Jim went out to hire a couple of huskies to escort him safely to his domicile. In the meantime Pop, deprived of his guardian, returned to the cabaret.

Jerry, a much buffeted about fellow, to escape the police who are pursuing him because of a petty prank, jumps into the machine just vacated by Pop and dons the owner's overcoat and cap just as the huskies arrive. Jerry is mistaken by them for old Rounder and carted off to Pop's home, where he is tucked into bed. Henrietta arrives home with her two daughters. But not until all heads are on the pillow does she learn that a strange man is in her room. Awakened by her screams Jerry dashes from room to room to escape. While this excitement is going on Jim discovers Pop in the cabaret and after lecturing him, 'phones Pop's butler, who advises that Henrietta has returned and is then in her room with her husband. Amazed at this statement Pop and Jim dash to the scene, accompanied by two policemen. When they arrive the house is in a turmoil. Jerry finally manages to escape by a jump from the veranda and a leap upon the seat of a flying motorcycle, while Pop makes peace with his wife.

A DAUGHTER OF THE NILE (June 7).—Stanley Claverton, son of the secretary of the interior, is given a dinner by his father in honor of his entrance into diplomatic circles. At the dinner he hears of a famous Egyptian woman named Anainoe, who is better known as "The Sphinx," and he longs to meet her. She recently arrived from Egypt. Of the large number of prominent men at the capitol who have fallen for her charms Troubetskoi, the Russian Ambassador, seems to be deepest in love with her and has become her favorite. The next day Stanley sees her riding by in her carriage and is more deeply affected by her beauty. Madga, the sister of his chum, Sherborne, is getting more attached to Stanley and invites him to an impromptu dinner that evening. He is about to accept her offer when her brother informs him that he has secured two invitations to "The Sphinx." He decides to go with Sherborne but promises Madga that he will write and explain. His visit to "The Sphinx" only adds to his growing love for her.

The following day he receives a commission from the secretary of state to represent this country in Egypt. He is handed important papers to deliver to the Khedive. On his way to Madga's home to keep the promised call he sees "The Sphinx" in a passing auto. He hails a taxi and gives instructions to the driver to follow the car ahead of him. He forgets about Madga and when he arrives at the home of "The Sphinx" he hands his card to the servant who informs him that the madame is not at home. Greatly depressed he leaves, but meets on the steps the Russian Ambassador who enters the house with a latch key. Gradually the Russian Ambassador is being forgotten by "The Sphinx" in her new found love for Stanley. In order to forget his sorrow, Stanley prepares to go on his journey but before he leaves his friends take him to dinner at a restaurant where he again meets "The Sphinx" and Troubetskoi. The Russian Ambassador becomes very angry, and after dinner Stanley, under the pretext of going home, hides outside. "The Sphinx" observes him, and leaving Troubetskoi, goes to Stanley asking him to accompany her home and to protect her from the Ambassador. Stanley acquiesces. Troubetskoi writes to the father of Stanley and tells him that his son is consorting with "The Sphinx." The father orders his son to cease his association with "The Sphinx," but he disobeys, and accompanies "The Sphinx" to a Charity Fete which she promised to attend, and it is here that "The Sphinx" learns that Stanley is casting aside a girl for her. "The Sphinx," feeling sorry for the girl, is already beginning to act strangely to Stanley, and his father urges the secretary of state to have his son sent on the commission at once.

Stanley receives word that he must leave inside of twenty-four hours. Being passionately in love with "The Sphinx," he decides to give up his commission, and with this end in view he goes to the diplomatic club to seek the secretary and resign his commission. Here he meets the wily Troubetskoi who after having drank to the success of Stanley in winning the hand of "The Sphinx," drugs him and steals the important papers he has on his person. Troubetskoi informs the club attendant that the youth is drunk, and to have him sent home in a taxicab. On the way home he regains consciousness, and later he appeals to "The Sphinx" who tells Stanley to hide behind the portieres when the Russian Ambassador, whom she knows will come to her and use the papers as a means of getting her back to him, appears. It is not long before Troubetskoi arrives, and at the right moment, Stanley springs upon the Ambassador. Seeing that the youth is being bested, "The Sphinx" stabs the Ambassador with a jeweled knife. In answer to Stanley's pleas to flee with him, "The Sphinx" tells him that she never cared for him, and convinced that she is truthful, he leaves. On the train the next morning he reads of the death of "The Sphinx."

THE REMEDY (June 25).—Rosemary, feeding the chickens, meets Harry, who, with other boys, have a camp on her aunty's farm. He asks for milk, which aunty goes to fetch. Harry then tries to become familiar, and Rosemary pushes him away, where he tumbles into a crate of eggs. He is angered and tries to clean up things by throwing the eggs out of the window, which strike aunty as she is milking the cow. She then comes through the gate and gets more eggs in the face, which Harry throws out of the door. Aunty enters furious, and orders him out. Rosemary, remaining, tries to scheme how to get the milk to the boys. After aunty goes upstairs, Rosemary sneaks off to the camp. Aunty comes down, rushes out, and finds Rosemary with the boys. She tells her if she goes there again she will be sent home. That night the boys decide to serenade their landlady and Rosemary. They go, and aunty, in order to chase them away from the window, resorts to a pitcher of water. The boys, fearing they would get hungry, have taken a pie with them, and, after receiving the water, they fling the pie, which aunty gets in the face. She is so stunned that she barely reaches the bed before collapsing.

Next day Rosemary again is at the camp. Aunty now decides to have the sheriff remove the boys. She takes Rosemary with her, but while sending her for her wraps, Rosemary encounters Harry and tells him she will marry him if he will rescue her from aunty. The boys follow aunty and Rosemary and when aunty enters the sheriff's office, they take Rosemary out of the wagon, place her in the auto, disable the wagon so aunty can't follow, and drive off. Aunty comes out, sees her predica-

REX.

A MOUNTAIN MELODY (June 22).—Nancy Briggs and Mat Martin are sweethearts. George Denton is a chap from the city on an outing in the mountains and occupies a cabin just over the ridge from the cabin where Nancy lives with her father, Sid Briggs. One day when she is out with her lover, they hear violin music issuing from Denton's cabin, and Mat informs Nan that it is only the city chap playing on his violin. She is entranced with the music and to Mat's annoyance, she will not notice the music he endeavors to make upon his harmonica. She approaches the cabin and listens silently. Denton, within, catches her reflection in a mirror and a friendship between the two is formed. Mat becomes jealous and when he has witnessed several meetings between his sweetheart and the city chap, informs Nancy's father of what is going on. Nancy is in Denton's cabin listening to his music. She notices a picture of a woman and a child upon his mantel and, upon making inquiries, learns that it is Denton's wife and little boy. She rushes from the place in tears. Denton is at a loss to understand. Nancy returns to her father and refuses to explain her sudden grief.

The old man and Mat imagine they understand and Mat, the crack shot of the country, determines to have revenge. He stealthily approaches Denton's cabin, gun in hand and takes a shot at what he thinks is Denton within the cabin. He knows that his aim is unerring and having fired, turns and hastens away. His shot, however, has been aimed at Denton's reflection in the large mirror and not at the man himself. Conscience-stricken, Mat has visions of himself surrounded by the sheriff's posse and a rope around his neck. He returns to Briggs and his daughter. Nancy surmises what has happened when she sees the gun in his hand. They look up and see Denton coming over the ridge. Mat is overjoyed. His hands are not stained with blood after all. Nancy has learned her lesson, and Mat has no difficulty in rewarding the love of his mountain sweetheart.

NESTOR.

A PEACH AND A PAIR (June 22).—The pair are staying at a summer resort at the beach. They both "spot" the arrival of the "peach." Eddie attempts to flirt with her, and she is coy but willing. Lee, too, cannot make his eyes behave, and a breach is beginning to appear in their friendship. Eddie finds that the girl is in her room and 'phones up to her, inviting her to take a stroll on the beach. She asks him if he is the one with "the winning smile" and he tells her he sure is. She agrees to meet him outside. Lee, meanwhile, has bribed the bell boy to spy on the girl, discovers the arrangement and beats Eddie to the girl. When Eddie comes in looking for the girl he sees her and Lee strolling on the beach. He hires a boy to feign drowning and when Lee bravely tries to rescue him, the kid jeeringly swims off. While Lee is playing the brave rescuer, Eddie gets the girl and takes her off for a stroll. Both the boys try to get the girl to marry, but she holds off and finally leaves for home, each of the pair getting identical letters, telling them that the boy that arrives at her house first will receive good news.

There is a dash for the station, Eddie getting the lead by hiring the only auto in sight. Lee gets a motorcycle. There is a hot race between the two. Both catch the train and start on their journey glaring at each other. In a convict camp there is a row and convict 325 makes his getaway, catching the same train as the love-struck twins. The guards, seeing the convict catch the train, wire ahead to have him stopped. In the train, the convict removes the clothes of the sleeping Eddie and eludes the officers, while Eddie is taken for the crook. He escapes and in turn gets Lee's clothes. Lee is mistaken for the convict and Eddie haughtily denies that he is Eddie's friend. The melee ends by both getting free of the officer and with an even chance to reach the girl's house.

Through a ruse, Eddie gets there first and is asking for the girl when Lee dashes up. The maid tells them that the girl has gone and, on seeing the woebegone expressions of the faces of the "pair," hands Eddie a letter saying her mistress left it for the young man that arrived first: Eddie gloatingly looks at his rival while he opens it to read the blissful news, but his expression quickly changes when he receives a curt note saying she has gone to marry "a real man."

JOKER.

THE FOX HUNT (On the same reel with "How Billy Got His Raise," a story of which can be found on page 1846 issue of June 12. This was released June 7).—Horses, riders, dogs and Br'er Fox climb mountains, dash through sewers and have hundreds of screamingly funny adventures. The dogs finally capture wily Renard and then the fur flies!

WHEN SCHULTZ LED THE ORCHESTRA (June 26).—Shultz is wonderful as a violin player. That is, according to wifie, who raves over his soul-stirring tunes. When Shultz is offered the job to lead the orchestra at the Gaiety theater, wifie is overcome with proud joy, and urges him to accept. So he does. Leading an orchestra is a new experience to Shultz. The bright lights and pretty chorus girls affect his head. The leading chorus lady, in particular, attracts him. Now, it happens that this leading chorus lady, and the trombone player, are sweethearts. The latter soon resents Shultz's butting into his love affairs. When the show starts and Shultz flirts openly with his girl, the trombone player is mightily upset. He can hardly play his instrument. The manager is forced to quell the budding riot.

For a while the show moves along smoothly. Shultz's leadership is fine until he forgets all about conventions and climbs up on the stage to admonish the actress whose playing he dislikes. The manager naturally raves. But he is powerless. Finally Shultz's wife, hungering to witness her noble husband working at his grand job, comes to the show. From her seat in the orchestra row she witnesses with horror her hubby's action with the leading chorus lady. The peeved trombone player recognizes wifie with joy as she dashes wildly over the musicians and stage to reach her erring hubby. Things are then soon settled to the entire satisfaction of both the trombone player and the manager and poor Shultz gets his.

BISON.

THE TEST OF A MAN (Two Parts—June 26).—The Lake View railroad is building a spur. Sam Price is in charge of the work and as he is not giving satisfaction in his work is discharged by John Paxton, the superintendent. Paxton's daughter, Dorothy, and Jack Arnold, whose father has all his wealth tied up in a new invention to take the place of gasoline, are lovers. Dorothy persuades Jack to accompany her to her father's office to ask for her hand.

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

They arrive and Jack is having a hard time to get his courage up to the speaking point. Just at this time, Price comes in to ask about his discharge and gets in a fight with Paxton. Jack comes to his rescue and Price is thrown out. There is bad feeling between the two men. Jack's father is making a demonstration of his new invention when it explodes and his factory burns to the ground. Jack and his father are penniless. Through the efforts of Dorothy, Paxton puts Jack in charge of the new construction work.

Jack arrives at the front to find that a disastrous explosion has occurred. He wins the friendship of Bess White by his kindness to her father who has been injured in the explosion. He finds Burke, the foreman of the work, carousing and drinking and warns him that he will have to cut it out. Price has sneaked back to the work and he and Burke get together to bring about the downfall of the new man. They know that the powder supply is short and any accident to it will throw the work behind. The pair plan to wreck the powder house and get the new boss in it so as to eliminate him. By a clever ruse they get him to the house and, overcoming him, leave him tied up in the house with a lighted fuse attached to the powder. Bess White arrives in the nick of time and saves him, but the powder is destroyed.

Dorothy realizes that her lover's has been a "man's size" job and so she persuades her father to take her on a tour of inspection to see how the new man is coming out. Jack has secured another car of powder and his efforts have made such headway that the work ought to be completed some days before the contract is up. Price and Burke have gone to work for another road nearby under assumed names and one day they learn that the powder for the spur is in the yards. They manage to get the car on the Lake View tracks and set fire to a fuse expecting to blow the car up and block the tracks. One of the brakemen who have tried to stop the pair wires Jack of their dastardly work and he, realizing the danger to the upcoming passenger train containing his boss and sweetheart, grabs a switch engine and sets out in pursuit. He manages to catch the car and get it away from the passenger train, but in the resulting explosion is severely shaken up. Jack is now determined that nothing shall stop him and the party go on to the construction camp. The work is completed before contract time, and Jack is accepted by Dorothy Paxton.

BIG U.

THE TINKER OF STUBBINVILLE (June 24).—John Haskins has been married to Mary a trifle over a year. The stork is about to pay them a visit. John, always more or less addicted to drink, abuses Mary and loses his position in the town mill. George Haskins, brother of John, always loved Mary but stepped aside when he saw that she cared more for the other. But when the selfishness of John came to the fore and Mary was made to suffer for it, George quietly endeavored to bring peace to the household and his aid more than once kept the wolf from the door. Into their lives comes Will Harvey, a hunchback itinerant tinker. Business has been poor with him and the day he visits the little town his funds are at the ebb and he is hungry and footsore. From house to house he goes without making a customer. He comes to Mary's. She has no money though her one washpot is sorely in need of repairs. But the sunny smile of the wanderer brings gladness to her unhappy heart. She gives him food and in return he mends her wash boiler as he sits before the warm fire. John returns while he is there, and demands to know how she can pay for such luxuries. Mary tells him she has not paid in money but this enrages him the more, and he orders the "beggar" from the house.

The hunchback meets George on the street and from him learns the address of a place where he can find lodgings. That night George calls on John and Mary in the absence of John, who has again gone to the nearby saloon. When the latter returns home, much the worse for drink, George remonstrates with him, a quarrel ensues and John knocks George over the head with a chair. Thinking he has killed his brother, he flees into the hills. Mary goes out for help and in front of the small town hotel she finds Will, the hunchback. Will agrees to help her and returns to her home. He bathes the head of the injured man, and then goes for a doctor, paying for the latter's services out of his own pocket. The next day, George, having recovered, Will goes out in search of John. He traces him into the hills and finds him hiding in an old shack.

Will then tells him that George is not dead and urges him to come home. He demurs. Will then tells him the story of his own birth and how he had a drunkard father who abused his mother at the time he was about to be born. He tells of his birth as a hunchback, caused by his father striking his mother. The effect of the story on John is instantaneous and he confides in the hunchback that he expects to be a father. Together they return to the home. They find George in bed but not badly hurt. A reconciliation is effected and John vows to lead a straight life. Grateful to the hunchback, the family offer to make a home for him but he tells them he must go on. The last scene of the story shows the umbrella mender wending his way toward the next town.

THEIR SECRET (Two Parts—June 27).—"WANTED—Woman to take charge of a baby. Apply Mrs. William Lawrence, 34 University St."

This "ad." is answered by an elderly woman, Mrs. Gray, who finds a young lady, Mrs. Daisy Lawrence. Mrs. Gray inquires as to the baby's parentage, as Daisy looks very young to be its mother.

Daisy introduces Billy Lawrence, her husband, and volunteers the following explanation as to why she wants a woman to care for baby: Daisy says her mother (Mrs. Brooks) wanted her to marry a young man (Tobias Smith), who owned the adjoining farm, and who seemed to Daisy to prefer the village belle, Vera Lawton. Before the marriage, Mrs. Brooks thinks it is best for Daisy to complete a university course and sends her to the city.

After arriving at school, Daisy is neglected by the other girls on account of her lack of style and country-made clothes. Being left to herself a great deal, Daisy studies the girls very closely, and when alone imitates them. On one of these occasions Billy Lawrence is hidden in the tree above her. His loud laugh attracts her attention, and the acquaintance thus started, soon ripens into love, and the young couple are married.

Now, Daisy explains to the elderly woman, that as her school term is finished and she must go home, she wants some one to take charge of her baby, until she can explain everything to her mother. Billy, her husband, is to go on ahead, secure work on her mother's farm, if possible, and gradually win her friendship.

Everything is settled and Billy leaves for the farm. Meantime, the mother, wishing her daughter to have company on the journey, sends Tobias Smith to the city for Daisy. Tobias, being of an inquisitive turn of mind, inquires at the registrar's office of the university as to th progress made by Daisy while in the university. The registrar, learning Tobias is a messenger from Daisy's mother, gives him a report card. On looking at this, Tobias finds Daisy has been absent from school for three months. Tobias keeps his knowledge of this a secret from Daisy.

On their arrival at the farm, Tobias no longer has eyes for anyone but Daisy. Vera, angered at this, flies into a great rage.

Tobias proposes to Daisy, watched from nearby places by Billy, Daisy's husband, who is working on the farm, and Vera.

Daisy refuses Tobias. Indignant, he says he will make Daisy explain why she is absent from school for three months and shows her the report card. Tobias calls Daisy's mother. Daisy tells her mother she is married and introduces Billy. Daisy's mother, indignant, orders Daisy to leave home. Daisy sends a country boy to the village, telling him to get a baby

MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN

THE SOLAR-PLEXUS OF YOUR THEATRE

I AM the nerve center of your theatre, am the dollar maker, your box-office is the dollar taker.

To the live exhibitor, the real showman, to one who values perfect projection, marvelous perspective, wonderful color value, true tone, subdued light (restful to tired eyes), power economy and perfection, I am an absolute necessity.

Nothing in your theatre equals my money making power and permanent value.

Dissatisfied exhibitors, eye-tired patrons, projection experts disgusted with makeshift experiments, cried aloud for me.

Then E. R. Anderson perfected me and I AM HERE.

I am more valuable to you than a thousand "makeshifts."

I, who eat nothing, require no outlay for upkeep.

I ask no kindness, expect no rest. I desire nothing but work.

I, upon whom age and usage have no effect, clime and adverse conditions affect me not.

I am an absolute necessity for the reproduction of the motion drama, for not the twitching of a muscle, the twinkling of an eye or the high light of a single hair is missed by my marvelous power of reproduction.

I AM PROGRESS PERSONIFIED

I am picture-light, life, beauty, feeling. I am the result of years of experimental work and practical knowledge combined.

The brains of America's greatest screen expert and Europe's chemical genius, am I.

Numerous imitators have I, but no competitors.

I represent the maximum of perfect picture reproduction at the minimum of cost.

I INSURE YOUR BOX OFFICE INCOME FOREVER

I AM THE MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN

My price is 75 cents per sq. ft. I have two brothers; one at 50 cents and one at 35 cents per sq. ft.

THE 18-CARROT MYSTERY (June 24).—Mrs. Gotta Millun has a daughter, Lillian, who is "coming out" Extensive plans are being made for a big reception in Lillian's honor. The mysterious Lady Baffles gets wind of these preparations and also the fact that many valuable gifts are expected to be presented to the daughter of the house. Mrs. Millun calls on the sleuth, Detective Duck, and engages him to be among the guests at the affair to keep his all-seeing eyes on the valuables. At the big affair, Duck appears among the guests in various disguises. From a point of vantage he keeps an eye on the jewel-case in which the collection of glittering presents are taken up. By a trick, known only to herself, the mysterious Lady Baffles gains entrance to the mansion. Her keen perception soon tells her that Detective Duck is present. She appears before him disguised as a radiant beauty. He loses his head, proudly showing her the collection of valuables under his charge. But her attempt to make a get-away with them is nearly her undoing. Duck recognizes Lady Baffles. Well knowing what he is up against, he sounds the alarm. Although the jewel casket is recovered, the wild chase through the mansion comes to naught. Lady Baffles baffles them all.

Detective Duck points out that the jewels are still safe. The guests depart, and the good hostess retires, as Detective Duck thought. He is surprised at the hostess' appearance beside him again in the dead of night. His soul would have froze if he had guessed that this apparently genial widow was the clever mysterious Lady Baffles in disguise. His conceit is tickled at the flirtatious manner of this supposed hostess. Lady Baffles proposes they crack a bottle together. She sends him down to the cellar for one, promising to guard the jewels until his return. As Detective Duck is going to the cellar his habitual suspiciousness grips him It is well it did for he narrowly saves himself from a yawning trap. In dread alarm, he rushes back. He is just in time to glimpse Lady Baffles making her get-away with the casket of jewels. The alarmed occupants of the house rush in to the tune of Duck's six-shooter. But all too late. Too late? No! For when the chuckling and mysterious Lady Baffles opens the jewel casket in the security of her apartment, what did she find? A beautiful string of frankfurters, and also a note reading: "Wear this string of jewels, for my sake. (Signed) Detective Duck."

And the real hostess, and her beautiful daughter? Duck fairly sweats under their whipping tongues. Then, to their astonishment, he produces the jewels supposedly lost.

LEARNING TO BE A FATHER (June 26).—Captain Silas Tugg, of the schooner Helen, is a hater of women and all their doings. He has forbidden his mate, Tom Burns, to marry. Tom tells his sweetheart of his captain's crustiness. Tugg won't listen to a word of their marriage, nor allow sweethearting on the vessel; The second mate, Jim Fing, a married man with three young children, is not afraid of Captain Tugg. He brings his wife and family aboard on Sunday. Mrs. Fing, in her matronly way, promptly places the children in the most sacred place in the cabin, gives her baby the most sacred thing of all, the Sextant, to play with, and proceeds to clean up the cabin. Captain Tugg comes in roaring wildly, tries to get rid of Mrs. Fing, but is himself captured by the baby. Finally he calls the cook, and astonishes him by ordering to prepare all sorts of sweetmeats for the children. The cook is horrified at the change in his master, and attempts, with dire results, to take the baby away from the captain. "Mind the pots; babies are not in your line," says the captain.

His mate, Burns, sees this and calls his sweetheart. "What a pity the skipper hasn't a child of his own," says the mate. Influenced by this, Captain Tugg secretly goes to a foundling establishment, and, after ramming his way through, left with a fourteen-months' old baby. Knowing nothing of babies, the captain gives the new caller his own room, and orders the cook to do his level best to provide dainties. The baby absolutely refuses to do anything but squall. A council of war on the part of Captain Tugg and the cook results in nothing but the cook finally losing his temper. Captain Tugg then consults his second officer, the married man, who promptly provides first aid for a hungry baby, in the shape of a warm bottle, which is performed in the admiring presence of the captain, the mate, the cook and three sailors through the skylight above. The baby, once asleep, Captain Tugg goes into the cabin, still marked from the visit of Mrs. Fing and her babies, picks up the Sextant, the most cherished emblem, and gives to baby in token of complete surrender. He then proceeds to an employment office and engages a middle-aged woman as nurse. The nurse promptly takes possession of the ship.

At this point, Edith Wild, the mate's sweetheart, makes it a point to come to the captain and put it up to him that she will not allow Burns, the mate, to sail on a ship so strangely inhabited. This maneuvering worked, and the captain finally consults the cook, whose idea is: "Get rid of babies and the woman—old times are best." The nurse overhears this and protests for her protege, and the only way that the captain sees out of it is to marry the nurse, which he promptly does. The cook, to get revenge, then takes the part of the mate and his sweetheart, and when the minister comes aboard to marry the captain and the nurse, with the baby in the nurse's arms, Wild and Edith also step in as bold as brass.

LAEMMLE.

A BOOB'S ROMANCE (Two Parts—June 23).—The boob is working in a country grocery store. One day a farmer gets in an argument with him. Words lead to a fight and the farmer chases the boob out and up the street. In his endeavor to escape he jumps into an auto driven by a girl from the city who lives near the store. The girl assists him to escape. In the girl the boob sees the girl of his dreams, but in him the girl sees merely a boob. A traveling show comes to town and advertises for extra people for their show. The boob applies and gets the job. After several blunders he gets his part and comes out on the stage. The girl and her father are in the audience and see the boob make an ass of himself.

A fire breaks out in the theater during which there is a stampede for the exits. The girl is left in the burning theater. Her father tries to save her but cannot face the flames. The boob rushes in and saves the girl's life. Shortly afterward, the girl and her father leave for the city and leave a note for the boob. The girl tells him that if he ever comes to the city to be sure and call upon her. Enclosed in the note he finds a check from her father telling him to use his own judgment in disposing of the money, but he would suggest that he use it in getting an education. The girl in the city grows tired of society life and longs for a real man. The shallow life and selfishness of the people she comes in contact with disgusts her.

The boob has taken the girl's advice and secured a college education. He returns to her rejuvenated and she is very much surprised at the change in him. The boob has indeed become another man. With the development of his mind, his character and even looks have changed. In him the girl sees all that she has been wishing for.

ELEVEN TO ONE (June 27).—Frank Crane is to be tried on a charge of murder. Among the men summoned for jury duty is Thomas Haig, a family man. Haig and his wife have just received a letter from their daughter, who is an actress and has been away from home for some time, announcing her arrival next day. He rages at the fate that draws him away from home at such a time. Frank has told the facts of his case to his lawyer, which were that while passing through the street he saw two men fighting, one of whom was shot. He tried to aid him and accidentally picked up the gun he had been shot with when a policeman appeared on the scene and arrested him for murder.

The trial drags its wearisome way and finally the jury retires for a verdict. There is a difference of opinion among them and as several of them desire to be released from duty to attend their personal affairs, they return to the judge with the statement that they can't agree. The judge angrily orders them to go back to the jury room and stay until they have reached a verdict. They go back and Haig alone holds out. While they are arguing, Haig sees two of the jurymen deciding how they will vote by flipping a coin. He decides to leave his decision to Fate and flips a coin, which falls heads, making his verdict "guilty." The girl has arrived home and springs the surprise that she has promised her parents. It is that she is married. She tells her mother that her husband will call on them soon.

The jury have declared the prisoner guilty and all leave for their homes. Haig comes home, finds his daughter and is told of her husband. The girl shows them a picture of him and it turns out to be Frank Crane who has been convicted on the turn of a coin. Haig is remorseful and next morning confesses all to the judge. The judge issues warrants for the jurymen and is giving them to an officer, when the real crook comes in and confesses. As the picture fades, Frank and his wife are bidding each other a sad farewell, not knowing of the happy events which are transpiring in their favor.

MISMATED (June 21).—King Baggot is a clerk in the shoe department and his sweetheart, Jane Gail, is a clerk at the fancy china counter. The day starts with customers buying shoes. King leaves to wrap up packages when in comes a dainty lady, reading the morning paper, behind which she is hidden. King decides to start a flirtation. Jane, taking the whole situation in, decides to worry King. The lady customer, tired of waiting, goes, leaving her newspaper. Quick as a flash, Jane takes her place, unseen, by King. He returns and the fun begins. Soon people arrive to buy china. The floor walker grows angry at his unsuccessful attempts to find Jane. Fearing the fun is going too far, Jane tries to get back to her counter, leaving the slipper and a customer card. Then King comes to try on the shoes, but he finds no lady, only the card which he takes with a slipper to the package boy.

An old hack driver comes to buy shoes. Jane's slipper is given him by mistake while his shoes go to the society lady. Complications arise. The society lady, upon receiving the man's shoes, starts back indignantly. The hack driver sees the joke and back he goes to the shoe department. Noon hour arrives and Jane borrows an odd shoe from the landlady and returns to work. By this time the society lady, hack driver, floor walker, and King are trying to settle matters. Their attention is called to Jane's mismated shoe. The package boy disappears out of sight, and Jane begs King to forgive her.

LARRY O'NEILL, GENTLEMAN (Two Parts—June 24).—Sloane, a retired multimillionaire, disputed the contentions of Van Dyke that clothes and money makes the man, and upheld his views that any man with ordinary intelligence can be made a man of culture and education. To prove his argument, he takes a man from one of the mills of his friends. Larry O'Neill, tall and powerful and young, swung his heavy sledge with powerful blows. Sloane guessed he would do. And so, after a little parley, Larry sat on the edge of a chair in Sloane's mansion that evening while Sloane explained the proposition. And so it came about that Larry was dressed in the latest cut of clothes of the best materials and became Mr. Lawrence O'Neill, with iron and steel interests. He made a hit at the club at the start. Larry made a greater hit at Mildred Harmon's reception, putting Van Dyke and one or two others of the club to rout in the race for Mildred's favors. But he kept his head, and conducted himself altogether in such a way that old man Sloane was proud of him and bore him away to the regret of everybody but Van Dyke. But Larry had started something. It grew and ripened until it was an every day sight to see Mildred and Mr. O'Neill in the park on their horses.

One day while aeroplaning, Larry had a chance to protect Mildred, and, under these romantic circumstances before he thought, grabbed and kissed her. Panic-stricken at the enormity of his offense, Larry fled as fast as possible, but Mildred didn't seem to think it was such a terrible thing and from the way she smiled, the coward might have had another, if he hadn't run away. Larry sat in his room, thinking hard and lecturing himself. "A conscience is a terrible thing to have to live with—sometimes," he said. "I am a blackguard and a four flusher. It was fun while it lasted, but the masquerade has gone far enough. I will go and tell her who I am and then go back to the anvil."

Larry went back to the rolling mills, but one o'clock in the morning used to find him poring over a book on the manufacture of iron, though at times Mildred's face would appear on the page and blot out the words. And one o'clock often found old man Sloane thinking of Larry as he sat in his big, dim library, just as it found Mildred curled up in her big arm-chair in the firelight, looking with wide eyes into the dying embers. But on her face there was a smile. The hard study began to tell. Pretty soon Larry was telling the foreman how to do some things, and then he invented a process that made the grayheads in the carpeted office sit up and take notice. Within a year it was "Supt. O'Neill." Then followed a note from Mildred. And Larry made a bold stroke for an interest in the firm, and got it. With it all he got the girl of his heart by proving himself a gentleman.

CONSCIENCE (Four Parts—June 25).—George Grant has invented a device which is being financed by his partner, John Benson, who receives an offer of $200,000 for the patent rights of the valuable invention. The offer is accepted with Grant's approval. Grant enters a barroom where an old man reprimands Dave Wilson, a young man out of employment, for wasting his time in barrooms. Dave strikes the old man, and Grant interferes, giving the young man a black eye. Benson sees the encounter and Grant returns to his home office with Benson. As Benson is leaving he meets Dave, who tells him he has been persuaded by his mother to apologize to Grant. The apology is accepted. Then Grant suddenly drops dead. Dave hears a police whistle blown outside, and runs into the next room where he crawls under the bed. Policemen and members of Grant's household arrive and discover Grant's body. One of the policemen telephones to the police station, and Detective Doyle is assigned to take charge of the case.

Dave is present when Doyle arrives on the scene of the murder, and explains to Doyle how Grant dropped dead. Meanwhile a policeman finds a pistol in the yard, and hands it to Doyle. Benson telephones from his home that he wishes to speak to Grant. Doyle answers that there has been an accident and he had better come over at once. When Benson arrives Dave urges him to tell the detective that Benson knew of Dave's mission to the house, but Benson answers, "I know about the fight, and I know nothing about the apology." Dave collapses and is dragged off to the police station. The scene then shifts to the courtroom where Dave has been tried for murder and the jury have found him guilty. Shortly after Dave is electrocuted.

One year later James Sprague, the criminologist, is visiting his old friend, the warden, and is shown the reforms the warden has made in prison life. The warden believes in the golden rule, and between working hours the men are allowed their freedom and are treated as human beings. The prisoners are shown playing baseball, and are given manual exercises. During the game the warden tells Sprague that he is glad capital punishment has been abolished as many an innocent man had been electrocuted. The warden then shows Sprague a photograph of Grant's home, declaring that he doesn't believe that the man who was electrocuted for killing Grant was actually guilty. Sprague is interested in the case, and departs with the photograph in his pocket. We next see Sprague at Grant's home making a close examination of the room in which Grant was killed. He looks out of the window into the yard where he sees a boy in a swing. He chases the boy out of the yard, gets on the swing, and concludes that Grant was shot by the murderer swinging himself to a height on a level with Grant's window which would account for the revolver picked up in the yard subsequent to the murder. Meanwhile Benson's guilty conscience has made him a nervous wreck. He goes to his home, where he has another vision of Grant, and shoots at the spectre with his revolver. The servants rush in, and the butler revives him with a stimulating drink.

Sprague consults Detective Doyle, who asserts that Grant's murder was a case of murder for revenge, and in his subsequent investigation learns of Benson's strange attack of nervousness. Under the pretense of wanting to make a business contract, Sprague makes the acquaintance of Benson. He bribes the butler and maid servant to get themselves discharged and the next day he installs servants of his own choice in Benson's household. Sprague's wife is engaged as the maid servant. The butler and Sprague's wife, abetted by a detective, act so strangely and get Benson into such an extremely nervous condition that when Sprague calls on him to close the proposed contract he begins to suspect that he is being spied on, especially on being asked whether he is interested in the abolition of capital punishment. Sprague then relates to him the peculiar case of Dave Wilson in connection with the murder of George Grant, which increases Benson's apparent nervousness. Meanwhile, Detective Doyle, who is in the yard, fires off a revolver, at a given signal from Sprague. Benson becomes hysterical and confesses that he committed the murder. At the close of the picture, Benson is seen in prison stripes in order to emphasize that while Dave Wilson had no chance of redemption, Benson, through the abolition of capital punishment, would at least be given a chance.

GOLD SEAL.

UNDER THE CRESCENT (Second Episode "The Cage of the Golden Bars." Two Parts—June 8—The first episode of this serial was published on page 1504 of the May 29 issue).—Stanley Clyde is thrown into prison because he knows the secrets of the Moslem rulers. After sentence of death has been passed upon him, the mob threatens his life and Prince Tousson, for his own reasons, removes him to the palace dungeons. He is placed in a cell adjoining the one occupied by Zohra. They communicate through an opening in the wall. The Prince endeavors to keep his wife a prisoner in the harem. She rebels and escapes, to learn that Clyde and Zohra are prisoners, and that the Prince, her husband, is the father of Zohra's child. Zohra reveals to her that all are condemned to death. The Princess pleads with the Prince to set them free. Instead, he proceeds to taunt her with their sufferings and discloses to her papers which are an Imperial order for a massacre of all Christians. The Prince threatens to dispatch them within the hour. By a ruse the Princess procures the papers, outwits the Prince and leaves him a prisoner upon his own house-top, while she liberates the condemned at the point of a pistol.

Assuming disguises, they flee from the palace grounds and mingle with a mob entering the mosque, where a fanatical gathering against all Christians is being conducted. They are pursued by the Prince and his guards on horseback, and, as Clyde endeavors to prevent the frenzied mob in the mosque making a sacrifice of Zohra's baby, the Prince overtakes them and endeavors to seize his wife. The princess shoots and wounds him. In the ensuing confusion she and Zohra procures the horses of the escort, and, leading an extra one, dash up the steps of the mosque, through the mob, and bear down on them in time to rescue Clyde. The Prince follows them.

THE BLACK BOX (Episode No. 14, "A Bolt from the Blue"—Two Parts—June 7).—Sanford Quest rescues Lenora from the burning bridge where she has fallen in trying to warn him of his danger. Meanwhile Craig arrives in New York and is closely shadowed by the police. His niece, Mary, a girl of about seventeen, is worried because her uncle seems troubled. At last Craig decides to escape from the detective and he and Mary climb down the fire escape and get away unnoticed. After Lenora has recovered sufficiently to make the trip possible, Quest's party leaves New Mexico for New York. At the station, as they are about to board the train, Quest receives a telegram from the detectives in New York, announcing that Craig and his niece have disappeared, leaving no clues. Meanwhile, in New York, Craig and his niece find a new hiding place. Quest and his party reach New York safely.

The time which John Craig has set for his confession arrives at last. In the cheap boarding house where Craig and his niece have found refuge, the suspected man hands the little girl a paper and tells her that she will be cared for, and now he must go to keep an appointment with Prof. Ashleigh. A few moments later a detective breaks into the room and finds the girl alone. The plainclothes man takes the paper from her and reads the following document, duly sworn to by a notary public: "I, John Craig, being about to receive punishment for my sins, hereby bequeath to my niece, Mary Carlton, all money and properties belonging to me on condition that she never speak the name of Ashleigh, nor associate with any of that name. (Signed) JOHN CRAIG." The detective is much interested and decides to take Mary Carlton to headquarters. Meanwhile, Sanford Quest has obeyed John Craig's wishes and gathered his people in Prof. Ashleigh's study to hear the suspected man's story.

Suddenly a commotion is heard in the hallway. They all rush out to find that Craig himself is standing there, while his niece is trying to get past the detective on watch at the door. Quest and Inspector French instantly seize the suspected man and drag him toward the study. For some time a severe electric storm has been raging outside. As Quest's party turn back into the professor's study there is a sudden flash of blinding light in one of the windows.

An instant later a shot of white flame spreads over the table around which the party had been sitting two moments before. Instantly it is gone, leaving table and chairs a charred mass of wood. There is a moment of paralyzed consternation, then Quest rushes to the window. From under the window he takes a disc of some strange metal and discovers that it is connected by wire with the table and the chairs. Instantly the entire thing is plain to him. Craig has played them another trick. If the party had been sitting around the table they would all have been electrocuted. Quest is furious. Craig refuses to make the confession which he had promised to give at this time. Quest decides to take the man back to his own study and to try electro-thought transference. Craig is placed in front of the mirror and Quest brings his mind under hypnotic control. "Tell me what you did with the Black Box," commands the criminologist. Slowly into the mirror fades a vision of the interior of the professor's study. Craig is discovered with a small black box in his hand. Suddenly the scene fades out. Craig has fallen forward in his chair. Quest and the others rush to him, but the man is dead, and all chances of solving the great mystery seems lost. They must begin all over again.

NOT A GHOST OF A SHOW (June 19).—Howell and Rant, wishing to produce Shakespeare, advertises for amateur talent. They make up their cast with a laundress, a waitress and the grocer boy. Rehearsals almost wreck their boarding-house, but are duly put through. Three weeks later, the company disbands for lack of funds, and the players start to foot it back to their former jobs. Howell and Rant receive a telegram from the theater in the next town, stating that the house is sold out for "Hamlet' the following evening. Forced to fulfill the engagement they recruit a company, which is even more of a misfit than the first one. The performance ends in a riot, and Howell and Rant are ejected from the house.

RELIANCE.

THE HOUSEMAID (June 16).—Carson, a wealthy widower, is determined that his son shall marry a society girl, Blanche Willard. Bob, however, has fallen in love with May, an attractive maid in the household. Suddenly, the elder Carson decides to marry again. He brings Lucy, his new wife, home, and she antagonizes her young stepson. Bob refuses to marry Blanche. The stepmother discovers his affair with May, and there is trouble between the father and son. Carson, Sr., tries to buy May off. Angered by this and by Bob's indecision—he being under the domination of his father—May flees the house. Bob soon decides that he is wrong in yielding to his father. He leaves home and becomes a taxicab chauffeur. Seeking everywhere for May, he is unable to find her. Carson, the elder, begins to distrust his young wife, who has become infatuated with an artist. One evening, Lucy makes an appointment to meet the artist at a certain cafe. It so happens that May is employed at the same cafe as cashier and Bob's taxi stand is outside. Bob meets May, pleads his case, and she promises to see him later. In the cafe, the girl sees Lucy and the artist. Thinking that this is her chance to get even with Carson, Sr., she calls him up and tells him that his wife is dining with another man. The next instant she regrets her act as unworthy of Bob's sweetheart. She tells Lucy and her escort what she has done and promises to save them. Hurrying the artist outside, May puts him into Bob's taxicab. Then she persuades Bob to go into the cafe and seat himself at the table with his stepmother. The angry husband arrives—to find his wife dining with his son. The artist disappears for good. Bob and Mary are forgiven, and their marriage receives the endorsement of both Carson, Sr., and Lucy.

FALSTAFF.

EBENEZER EXPLAINS (June 18).—Ebenezer Jay, Justice of the Peace of Peach Hollow, is a famous man in his home town. They tell a lot of stories about him there. But the best one of all Cy Peters relates in this way: "Eb had got back from the city and was yarning to us about this Chester gal—Cherry Chester, she was called. She was an actress. She'd followed Eb everywhere and had given him her picture. He showed it to us. Then Bill Cannon, who clerks at the Mansion House, butted in to say the gal was stopping there and had played at the opery house the night before. Well, Eb was pretty much taken aback. And just then the woman herself come down the street. He took her to his office to tell her that she must keep away from him in the future, or he'd have the law on her. Next minute, her husband busted into Eb's office like a cyclone. But he come out again quick enough, all bunged up. That feller and his wife kept running till they reached the train—and we haven't seen them since. Eb don't talk much about it. He's too modest." But despite the unanimous evidence of Peach Hollow, there's not a word of truth in the story. Eb never met Cherry Chester in the city. He bought her photograph himself, and induced her to visit his office on the plea that she would have to get a license for her dog. Her husband's excitement was all due to fear of losing the only train to New York that day. But the way the village folk construed the thing was lucky for Ebenezer. For now they're planning to run him for legislature, and he regards it as a stepping-stone to Congress.

LITTLE HERMAN (On Same As Foregoing).—Little Herman, a queer-looking magician, juggles cannon balls, ducks lamps and a variety of other articles in a surprising and terrifying fashion. He even shoots himself out of the mouth of a cannon, and then shoots himself in again. This stunt reminds us of the man who jumped into the bramble bush—but Little Herman is more wonderful even than he.

ers for a living. The old man is a good grandfather, but he has one fault—he cannot cook meals fit to eat. Fortunately, Bud is treated to cookies by a lady customer. He dreams of the cookies all night. Bud had looked forward to being a dyspeptic. But now he sees a chance to escape. He lays siege to the lady, takes her on outings, and all told, is such a sweet child that she grows to love him dearly. At last, the artful youngster prevails upon the lady to cook a dinner for him and his grandfather. She serves them up a meal "fit for the gods." These, at least, are grandfather's words to the lady when he tells her that, for Bud Blossom's sake, he can no longer go on living alone. So grandfather and lady are married. Bud Blossom grows up strong and healthy, and immensely appreciative of all the good things he has to eat.

WHERE BREEZES BLOW (June 20). Trixie is anxious to enter the bathing girls' parade and win first prize, but she has no bathing suit. Both Elmer and Chester are stuck on Trixie and they both race to a store to secure a classy suit for her. Chester gets back first with a striking costume, and Trixie is delighted to such an extent that when Elmer arrives a few moments later, she gives him the cold shoulder. Elmer, much dejected, wanders off alone to console himself. It happens that Fay and her sweetheart, Perk, have come in from the country to see the ocean. Perk has left Fay alone for a few moments and is amusing himself tossing rings at one of the beach concessions—the object being to win a pair of hose for Fay. Elmer sees Fay and he flirts, then gets acquainted and finally presents her with the bathing suit and suggests that she enter the parade and win the prize. This idea appeals to Fay, who is a bit peeved at being neglected by Perk. She dons the bathing suit and it fits her so neatly that she appears to be the most attractive girl on the beach.

Chester sees her and falls immediately. He turns Trixie down and tries to win Fay but is greatly disappointed upon learning that Elmer is the lucky man. Chester has now lost out all around and, being at heart a villain, he tries several mean tricks to prevent Fay from winning the contest. He fails. Fay is presented with a check—the first prize. She and Elmer set out to have a good time. In the meantime Perk has missed his sweetheart. He meets her with Elmer and Fay introduces Perk as her fiance. Perk assumes authority and takes possession of Fay, also the check. Elmer remonstrates, but to no avail. Perk walks off with Fay. Elmer meets Chester and they patch up their troubles and combine forces with the intention of beating up the country guy. They attack Perk, but he saves them the trouble of giving him a beating by gently tossing them off the pier into the ocean.

BEAUTIFUL LOVE (June 27). Fay, a young lady of modern inclinations, is rapidly becoming successful as a lawyer. She is in love with young Archibald, whose stern mamma is strongly opposed to the match. Mamma demands that Archibald marry Francis, a wealthy female bond holder. Francis holds a mortgage on mamma's home and being of a villainous nature, she has demanded that mamma give to her the hand of Archibald in marriage, or else she (Francis) will foreclose said mortgage. Mamma has consented to this and preparations are made for the wedding.

Archibald is frantic. He sends a hasty message to Fay, who rushes in her machine to Archibald's home just before the ceremony. Archibald is let down from his window by a ladder and he and Fay escape. Mamma and Francis discover the elopement, and, getting into a powerful touring car, they give chase. An accident happens to Fay's machine. It rolls off the road and dashes down the hill. The accident proves a God-send to the true lovers because the runaway machine comes to a full stop in front of the minister's house. The pursuing car has had to follow around the road and arrives too late. Fay and Archibald are married.

A DEAL IN DIAMONDS (June 22). Jack, though impecunious, is a star boarder, and an ardent suitor for the hand of Flossy. He is about to win her, when Harry, possessed of a huge bank roll, comes upon the scene. Harry immediately becomes a rival suitor, scattering money in lavish entertainment of capricious Flossy. It is Flossy's birthday. Harry sends a huge bouquet of flowers. Harry, bemoaning his lack of dollars, is standing in front of a jeweler's store, gazing at what he would like to give Flossy, when a woman drops a case containing an expensive brooch. Harry returns it, but in the excitement he keeps the richly lined case that contained it. For fifteen cents, Harry buys a tawdry duplicate of the jeweled brooch, intending to give it to Flossy. But—his rent is overdue. The landlady duns him and Harry, seeing the $100 tag on the brooch case, loans a roll of bills and takes the brooch as his security.

Harry tells Flossy that the brooch is a piece of his family's treasure, and asks her to wear it to a ball to which he is to take her. But the landlady, discovering that the brooch is brass, throws it into a coal scuttle where Sophie, a maid, discovers it. At the ball that night, Flossy haughtily tells Harry that the brooch is lost. Meanwhile Sophie, the maid, adorns herself with the imitation treasure, and some of Flossie's party clothing. Who should come in while she is thus attired but Jack going unaccompanied to the ball. Sophie, being champion dancer of Kitchen Maid's Local No. 42, jumps at Jack's invitation to go with him to the affair. Harry is terror-stricken at the loss of the brooch. He decides to offer to purchase it from Jack, rather than tell him of the loss. When Harry gives Jack $50 for the worthless trinket, he (Harry) thinks he is escaping luckily. Jack contrives to exchange partners with Harry. Jack exhibits his "roll" and he and Sophie ride gayly away in a taxi, leaving the bemuddled Harry behind, with Sophie and the brooch of brass.

PEGGY LYNN, BURGLAR (Two Parts—June 21).—By the death of her father, Peggy Lynn is left an orphan. She enters the home of a band of crooks, under whose evil influence she lives for fifteen years. In all this time she knows no friend except Andy, a hunchback, who grows to love the very ground that Peggy walks on. The thieves decide that Peggy must earn her keep, so she is sent to rob the home of Terrill, a young millionaire, believed to be out of town. Peggy enters Terrill's home. There she finds the young man critically ill and alone. A doctor, who had pronounced the case smallpox, had been struck by a lightning bolt. The servants, at mention of the dread disease, had fled. At once Peggy forgets her mission of crime. Her only thought is to bring the young man back to health. For two weeks she battles the malady. She wins. Terrill is himself again, believing all the while that Peggy is a nurse sent by the doctor.

Peggy returns to the thieves' den. The crooks had committed a big robbery and fled. Peggy enters the house just as the police come. With stolen goods all about her, she is arrested as a criminal. At her trial, Terrill, whose life she saved, comes to her aid. By his testimony and influence, Peggy is acquitted. There in the crowded court room, Terrill declares his love. Peggy declares herself unworthy and refuses him. Meanwhile, Peggy's criminal companions decide again to rob the Terrill home. Peggy, at great risk, runs to warn Terrill. She comes upon Big Lew, the

ONE WOMAN'S WAY (June 23).—Joe Phillips' sight has completely failed him. There is only one chance—an operation, the cost of which is $500. In a brave effort to secure the money, Grace, Joe's steadfast wife, takes a position in an office. Grace's beauty smites the office manager, and he showers her with unwelcome attentions. The young wife fears to offend him, however, for she may lose her position. She telephones her husband she must work at night and goes to dinner with the manager and some of his friends.

Intoxicated, the manager offers $500 to any woman who will swim in the cafe fountain. The vision of her blind husband comes to Grace. She plunges in and claims the money. She tells Joe the company is paying for his operation. It is successful. Joe goes to the president of the company to thank him. That individual, in blank amazement, tells Joe he knows nothing whereof he (Joe) speaks. Then Joe intercepts a letter from the manager to Grace. In a flash, he thinks he sees it all. He accuses Grace of infidelity, and compels her to invite the manager to come to see her at their house. The manager arrives. With drawn gun held in his shaking hand, Joe is about to murder him, when he hears the manager begging Grace to kiss him. He hears, too, the manager say that never yet has Grace been willing even to give him a kiss. Then Joe sees things as they really are. They fall into each other's arms.

THE SHADOWGRAPH MESSAGE (Two Parts—June 23).—Howard Ward, handwriting expert, succeeds in having Blackwell convicted of forgery by means of flashing the forged signature and specimens of the prisoner's handwriting on the wall before the jury by a small projecting machine, the courtroom being darkened for the purpose. Blackwell is sentenced to twenty years, and before being led away he springs before Ward and swears to square accounts with him. On the way to the penitentiary there is an automobile accident and Blackwell escapes. He makes his way back to the town in which Ward lives. On the night of his return, Ward and his wife are spending the evening with friends, and Jean Cardova, Ward's deaf and dumb assistant, is in charge of the Ward's little girl, Hilda. He has been amusing Hilda by throwing pictures on the wall with his projecting machine until the nurse comes to put her to bed. The nurse then goes out for the evening and Jean sits in the bedroom next the nursery reading.

Blackwell enters Ward's home through a window and makes his way upstairs to the bedroom. He binds Jean and throws him behind the curtains in the bedroom, then conceals himself behind the curtains of the crib in the nursery. At the friends' house, Mrs. Ward becomes uneasy and persuades her husband to take her home. They make their way to the bedroom, but find everything apparently all right. Mrs. Ward then goes to the nursery. She is confronted by Blackwell, who tells her he will shoot the baby if she screams, and she is frightened into unconsciousness. Jean manages to free himself of his bonds, and as Ward stands in the upper hallway he flashes a warning, by means of the machine, "BACK. BURGLAR IN NURSERY. GET GUN. COME BY WINDOW." Ward runs swiftly downstairs, secures a gun, climbs a pillar to an exterior nursery window and shoots Blackwell. Blackwell is only injured but in a struggle between him and Jean he is killed.

DOMINO.

THE SOUL OF PHYRA (Two Parts—June 17).—Phyra is a virgin reserved for sacrifice in an Indian Temple. She meets Capt. Brenner of the English Army, and he persuades her to flee with him and marry him. This flight is accomplished at great danger to them as the Indians lie in ambush and make a desperate fight before the girl can be removed to a ship sailing for England, as Capt. Brenner is returning, having been transferred home.

On arrival in England, Phyra is welcomed into society. She and her husband are very happy. Back in India the Hindoo priests, by an occult process, summon the soul of Phyra and threaten her husband unless she returns and fulfills her alloted mission. She is alarmed and does so, leaving Brenner a note informing him they will be united forever in another plane. She returns to India, is burned on the funeral pyre, and her soul ascends to Paradise. Meanwhile Brenner has gone to the dogs. The Scotland yard detectives are unable to locate his missing wife and Brenner is drinking heavily. One day in a club he is drinking when Phyra in Paradise beckons to him, as the girl has read in the Brahmin Philosophy that one soul which beckons another from Paradise will be obeyed. Brenner is shown to die in the club, and his soul ascends and mingles with that of Phyra.

KAY-BEE.

THE SECRET OF LOST RIVER (Two Parts—June 18).—Pierre Vignol, an artist wintering in Arizona, is bitten by a snake. He is taken by his friend, Tom Hornby, to Padre Francisco, who prescribes for the bite. Pierre, at the request of Tom, returns to his cabin and Tom takes care of him. Later Tom discovers a tube in Lost River. This proves to be a painting and Pierre takes it to Padre Francisco. The Padre reads him an interesting history of Fr. Bartolomeo, founder of the Mission, and of how the painting came to be discovered in Lost River, for it had been thrown there by a monk when the Mission was attacked by the Indians, owing to the abduction of the Chief's daughter by a villainous Spaniard. Tom takes the painting to New York where he sells it and gives the money to the wife of Tom, who has been too poor to bring her and the baby to Arizona. The story ends with the reunion of Tom, his wife and baby and the artist's rehalilitation in the mind of Tom who had for a moment doubted his honesty.

THE COUNTRY GIRL (Two Parts—June 15).—The Country Girl lives in eighteenth century England. Her old guardian keeps her in seclusion on his country estate, meaning to marry her. She grows to womanhood without ever having seen any young men. When Phyllis is eighteen, the Squire takes her to London, where she is to be made his wife. His sister, Alithea, goes with them. The Squire intends Alithea for Sparkish, a boon companion of his. In London Phyllis meets Belville, a handsome youth. They fall in love. Alithea is attracted to young Harcourt, and the idea of marrying their aged suitors becomes unendurable to both the girls. The Squire schemes to break off the affair between his ward and Belville. At his dictation, she writes her lover a note, telling him that she detests him and hopes she may never see him again. But at the last moment, she substitutes another note she has written, urging Belville to have a minister in readiness so that she may escape and marry him. The Squire delivers the letter. On his return, Phyllis pretends to him that it is not she, but Alithea, who loves Belville. The Squire, overjoyed, writes Belville his full consent to his marriage "with this lady," and Phyllis, disguised in Alithea's mantle, hat and veil, is the bearer of the note. Thus, she keeps the tryst and she and Bellville are married. The old Squire has no choice left but to realize that youth must wed with youth. He consents to the marriage, also to that of Alithea and Harcourt.

IN THE VALLEY (June 18).—Pauline, a mountain girl, wearies of the monotonous life in the wilds. She persuades her mother to let her go down into the valley to try her fortunes in a factory town. Pauline, fresh, pretty and energetic, has no difficulty in getting work. Before long, she meets Mrs. Grosvenor, a society woman, who invites her to her home, and makes much of her. The girl is enchanted with her new life. Pauline is included by her rich friend in an automobile party, of which the owner of the factory, George Waterman, is a member. Though the girl is too innocent to see that Mrs. Grosvenor is in the confidence of Waterman, a man who is fascinated by every pretty face he meets, she has strange misgivings after she has accepted the invitation. As they are about to start, she seems to see her mother standing in the cabin door, calling to her. Pauline refuses to go. Waterman drops his veneer of gentility, showing all too plainly his brute nature. The girl makes her escape back to her old home. There she is wooed and won by an old sweetheart, with whom she lives happily all her life.

UP FROM THE DEPTHS (Four Parts—Reliance).—Revivalist Davids persuades Daire Vincent to elope with him. Within the year, inspired by his associates to seek a field of greater grafting possibilities, he deserts her without having made her a wife, and goes to New York, where he meets with great success. Daire has a child, and, after many failures, becomes a dance hall singer to support it. In New York she is approached by Davids' confederates who ask her to help them in raiding the Mozart dive in which she works. She thus discovers Davids present whereabouts and activities, and, taking her child, confronts him.

Davids' young wife is dying, childless. The sight of his own son, whom he cannot claim, stirs him deeply and with a regenerating effect. The wife dies. Davids, insistently urged by the Purity League to do this, makes a raid on the Mozart. He is wounded. Father White, a slum worker, striving for Daire's spiritual uplift-ment, hears her life's story and intercedes with Davids to legitimatize the child. Davids and Daire go through a marriage ceremony. Later each is shown rising from the depth to a fuller and better knowledge of life.

HER SHATTERED IDOL (Majestic—Four Parts—June 10).—Mae Carter is the ward of Col. Aitken and the financee of his nephew, Robert. They plight their troth and after a lot of teasing on the part of Mae, Bob succeeds in giving her an engagement ring. While Mae and Bobby are out riding one day the shoe of Mae's horse becomes loosened. She calls for Bob to exert his masculine strength and jerk the shoe from the horse's foot to save the horse further pain. After several unsuccessful pretenses to release the shoe they go to a blacksmith. Mae discovers in the blacksmith a man of extraordinary strength. He jerks the shoe from the horse with one pull, and thereby wins the admiration of Mae. That night Mae dreams that she is the cave woman of Robert, a cave man. While eating shrubs she is attacked by another giant cave man and about to be carried off when a rescuer appears, and he proves to be none other than the blacksmith. In the morning she pays a visit to his shop and takes a snapshot of him, much to the distress of Robert.

She breaks off her engagement with Robert and is about to elope with the blacksmith when her uncle, having dealt with many women in his time, and knowing feminine ways better than Bob, concocts a scheme whereby he will induce the two to live at his house for a month to find out if they still love each other, at the end of which time he promises to consent to the marriage. The girl gives an engagement party and his conduct makes her see how impossible a match would be between the two. Thoroughly disgusted, she breaks off her engagement and returns to Robert. A marriage between she and Robert is arranged by the Colonel for the following day, and the blacksmith learning of it becomes jealous. When the ceremony is about to take place, the blacksmith comes to the house and steals the bride and plans to take her to a neighboring town and marry her himself. He gets away with her and after many hair-breadth escapades he finally gets caught in the quicksand with the girl but is released by Robert, and the marriage takes place.

BRAND PLOTTERS (Two parts—June 14—Ideal).—By a series of maneuvers, Black MacQueen and his band of outlaws get into their control Melissa Lee, the daughter of the village storekeeper, whom MacQueen loves, Simon West, a rich adventurer who had come to the West with the intention of putting the town of Misa on the map, and "Bucky" O'Connell, the Irish Lieutenant. Realizing that MacQueen loves Melissa, Boone, one of the outlaws, sends a note to her in the Indian cache where she is guarded over by a squaw, telling her he will aid her to escape. The note falls into the hands of MacQueen, who shoots Boone in the act of fleeing with the girl. Jack Flatray, the sheriff, who also loves Melissa, finds West and O'Connell, releases them, but is himself caught. His sentence to die is suspended only by the promise of Melissa that she will marry MacQueen. MacQueen breaks faith with Melissa and imprisons Flatray. He escapes, however, and meets MacQueen and his bride on the edge of a precipice. The men fight, and MacQueen falls into the seething water and is drowned.

THE NEW PHOTOGRAPHER (Superba—June 15).—The Way Up Film Company send their company south to make a picture "Agnes' Awful Adventure." The actors wait impatiently for the new camera man, who in reality has gone to sleep on the way. He is discovered by an amateur photographer, who takes the camera and his letter of introduction and goes to the studio where the actors anxiously await him. Of course, the amateur turns the camera backward when he should turn it forward, and he feels called upon every now and then to rescue the heroine from the clutches of the villains. When the film has been developed in the north, where it was sent for finishing, the officials are called to witness it. The picture is awful, they discover, and with the president's wire to the waiting company in the south, the would-be photographer is sent head first out the window.

THE TURNING POINT (Empress—Two Parts—June 16).—Robert Van Pelt's attitude towards his wife changes from that of indifference to mistrust on his seeing, one night after she has spent the evening with a friend, her friend's brother, who has escorted her home, try to kiss her at the door. He does not wait long enough, however, to see his wife send the man away and when she enters the house, he tells her that it is time for a divorce. Thinking that he is much abused, he goes with a friend to a cabaret, and is much taken with a singer, whom he invites to call at his office. The woman calls next day, just after Mrs. Van Pelt has arrived to plead with her husband not to close down one of his factories, a proceeding which will result in much suffering by the men. The singer hears Van Pelt's curt refusal, and, seeing the true worth of his wife, enters the office after Mrs. Van Pelt has left and denounces the husband. Van Pelt goes home to find the superintendent of the factory there, also bent on begging for the lives of his men. The hard-hearted rich man is not moved until the maid rushes into the room with a baby she has found on the door step. The clinging arms and the helplessness of the child captivates him, and softens him, and he sends the superintendent away with the happy news that the factory is not to be closed, but enlarged, and he takes his wife again to his heart.

THE RUBE'S SLEEP PRODUCER (Luna—June 17).—Rube Huskins favors Bill, a good-for-nothing, for his daughter, Nellie, but she cares for Joe, a farmer. Bill calls to see Nell, and discovers Farmer Huskins demijohn of hard cider in the cabinet. Rube discovers that his drink has been tampered with, decides to catch the thief, and puts sleeping potion in the demijohn. A tramp finds the demijohn and takes it with him. Bill has been turned down by Nell, so he makes arrangements with a tramp to take Joe off and give him a beating. The tramp and his pal decide to take Nell, too, and hold her for ransom. They send Joe to Rube with a note demanding $500. The tramps and Bill sample the contents of the demijohn, and go to sleep. Nell escapes. Joe's horse runs away with him on his return with Rube. He is thrown over a cliff, but is not injured. Nell and Rube arrive in time to save him from the tramps, and Bill is disgraced forever.

HUNGRY BOARDERS (Starlight—June 17).—Heinie and his pal crawl out from the sewer from where they have spent the night. They decide that the world owes them a living, and go to find it. They bamboozle a boarding house landlady into giving them a room for which they promise to pay her that afternoon. They raid the kitchen for food, but are caught. Then they try to get away with a trunk filled with the fixings of the room. They are again captured and put to work in the kitchen, helping the cook. As usual, they start things which end in a smashup all around, and a gentle ride down the street with the officer of the law.

LILLY OF THE VALLEY (Premier—Two Parts—June 18).—Lilly's father meets his death, and the girl is left to face the world alone. She is taken by the superintendent of the mine in the village to his home to be the companion of his motherless little boy whom Lilly has rescued from a burning cabin, after the lad had been hid there by a revengeful mine worker who has just been discharged. Lilly's sweetness of disposition soon awakens love in the heart of the mine superintendent who hesitates to ask the girl to become his wife. His wish is fulfilled.

OUT OF THE SILENCE (Lariat—Two Parts —June 19).—Fred Madison, a drug fiend, who wants to overcome the pernicious habit, is accompanied by his wife into the desert of the western country. On their way to the sanitarium where a former lover of Mary is the doctor where Fred hopes to cure himself, they are lost. Fred, without his drug, becomes almost insane and wanders off from Mary to fight his battle out alone. During his absence Mary is nearly carried away by a drunken brute, but the doctor from the hospital, on his way to meet his old friends, finds her. With him and Mary, Fred goes to the sanitarium, and the close of the picture sees him cured and strong.

HORSE SHOE LUCK (United—June 20).—The restaurant keeper receives so much advice as to how to hang his horse shoe on the wall that he decides to throw it away. His wife misses it and advertises for its return. The patience of the long suffering restaurateur reaches its limit when horse shoes of every description come to his door, and the result is some unexpected receptions for the reward seekers.

THE ROSARY (Selig—Seven Parts—June 28).—Over in the Emerald Isles nestles a farmhouse and Brian Kelly approaches from school. Father Ryan, the parish priest, meets Brian and together they turn to Brian's mother. The reverend father tells Mrs. Kelly that her son wishes to become a priest, and the mother's joy is unbounded. Brian leaves the old farmhouse. Down in a romantic Irish glen there awaits the girl. Brian Kelly approaches and tells her that even though he loves her he has decided to give up his life for the church. They pass up the glen, hand in hand.

In a small town in Ohio, Father Brian Kelly cares for his flock. He receives a letter from Edward Wilton asking that Father Kelly confer with him regarding his son, Bruce. Father Kelly has a haunting memory of such a man, but cannot recall his identity. Nevertheless, he goes to New York City. He finds Edward Wilton on his death bed. Wilton asks Father Kelly to care for the education of his son.

Before Father Kelly can express his surprise, Bruce Wilton, aged eighteen, enters the room. Something in the boy's face recalls old memories to Father Kelly. The dying man hands the priest the medallion of the boy's dead mother. The picture is of the girl of long ago of Ireland. The scene shifts to the lower East Side of New York City. There the priest continues to minister to the unfortunate. He sends Bruce Wilton, who inherits an uncle's fortune, to college. Later Wilton becomes a prosperous stock broker in New York City. He receives a letter urging him to go West on a railroad deal. He also receives an anonymous letter informing him to use more care in his market deals as "you have an enemy who will not stop at anything to ruin you." Before Bruce Wilton leaves for the West, Kenward Wright, his closest friend, calls. Evarts, Wilton's private secretary, warns Wilton not to tell Wright that he is going West. Wright, nevertheless, traces Wilton.

Vera and Alice Wallace are happy in their cottage in the West. Vera and Alice meet Kenward Wright. Alice is infatuated with the man. Later Vera Wallace meets Bruce Wilton. They love each other and ultimately Bruce brings his wife to their new home in Eden, N. Y. Kenward Wright has never forgotten Vera. He wires to her that he is coming to pay the Wilton's a visit. Father Kelly has been conducting services in a tent and Bruce resolves to build a chapel for him. Kenward Wright comes to Eden. Father Kelly, in response to a letter from Bruce, arrives, and expresses his pleasure at again meeting his pupil and his wife.

Coincident with Kenward Wright's arrival at the Wilton home, comes also Alice Wallace, Vera's twin sister. Alice pleads illness and does not appear. Kenward Wright goes to Vera and kisses her hand. Father Kelly sees this action. A grave expression comes over his face. He senses danger to this household. During the scene of festivity at the Wilton home, Kenward Wright, with a wine glass in his hand, proposes Vera's health, and then as he sees Alice, the wine glass drops from his hand. Later, Kenward Wright, the man who deceived Alice, meets the girl. She implores Wright to marry her. He tells the girl to meet him that night and they will wed. He really resolves to escape. He tells Bruce Wilton that he has been called away. He leaves the house, but lurks nearby. Alice, waiting for Wright, hears his signal. She inadvertently tells Wright of Wilton's deal in Wall Street. "That was the information I wanted. Now I have the cards in my own hands," exclaims Wright.

Father Kelly discovers the deserted Alice, and mistakes her for Vera. Alice implores Father Kelly to help her. Bruce Wilton comes to doubt his own wife. He, too, has mistaken Alice for his wife and asks himself this question again and again: "Who was the man that met Alice last night?" Father Kelly, investigating, is told by Vera that the man came to her sister Alice and that Alice has fled from the home.

Kenward Wright ruins Bruce Wilton in the stock exchange. Bruce, now drinking heavily, again demands an answer from his wife, who tells him that Alice will answer him, but the answer is never forthcoming, for Alice has died in the hospital. Bruce receives word that "an enemy" has ruined him in Wall Street. Bruce draws a revolver and levels it at his head. Father Kelly enters and holds up his hand. Vera, the terror-stricken wife, tears the curtains from the window center. Behind this curtain is a stained glass window of "The Christ" crowned with thorns with a rosary in His hand. As Father Kelly points slowly to this, the revolver drops from Bruce's hand and he staggers through the window. Kenward Wright enters and goes to Vera. Father Kelly encounters Wright, with one hand he waves him aside and with the other he invokes a blessing on the stricken woman. A year has passed. Vera Wilton, separated from Bruce, is sewing for a living. She comes to Father Kelly's chapel. Bruce Wilton having escaped from the sanitarium where he was placed to cure the drink habit, comes to the Chapel of the Rosary and drops upon its steps. Kenward Wright approaches with two guardsmen from the sanitarium. They are searching for Bruce Wilton.

"Come Bruce," says Kenward Wright to the unfortunate man. As the two guards step forward, Father Kelly checks them. Addressing Wright he says: "Thou art the man." Kenward Wright, with a cry, falls on his face. "Yes, I did it," he says. "I was your enemy, Bruce." Vera appears, and Bruce falls on his knees before her. Father Kelly points to the chapel. Vera draws Bruce toward it, and together they go inside.

FIGHTING BOB (Rolfe—Five Parts—June 7).—News of the approaching death of the President of Lorento is received by "Fighting Bob" Rensaler at college in a letter from General Braga, an intimate friend of his deceased father, and further that Mendoza, the marshal, aspires to the presidency, and assisted by guerrilla warfare, intends to proclaim himself dictator, with the assistance of a guerrilla leader named Ladero. Dulcina Garnia, Bob's sweetheart, is beloved by Ladero. Manuel Garni, her guardian, has promised her in marriage to Laedro for assisting the revolutionists. Bob determines to give his aid to General Braga and, accompanied by his two chums, Cyrus Brown and Comin Hartley, he embarks on Brown's yacht for Lorento. Realizing that Dulcina will not marry him because she loves Bob, Ladero kidnaps her at the instigation of her guardian, intending to force her to marry him. When Bob has left Dulcina to visit General Braga, Ladero's men make away with Dulcina and confine her in a monastery.

Riaz, leader of the kidnappers, has gone to the Tavern Verduga, where Bob is in consultation with the general. Dulcina's maid finds Bob there, tells him of Dulcina's plight, and points out Riaz as one of the kidnappers. Bob and his two chums grab Riaz, take him to the yacht, and force a confession from him. Riaz escapes from them by jumping overboard. Ladero, receiving no news from Riaz, sets out with his men for the monastery. Riaz has secured a horse and intends to head off Bob. Ladero has found a priest who is about to marry him to Dulcina but she succeeds in secretly notifying the priest of her predicament and he aids her to escape. She meets Riaz, who forces her into a telegraph station, where the operator is drunk. Kicking the operator out, he attemps to assault Dulcina, who picks up a revolver and shoots him. Bob and his pals have reached the monastery, have a fight with the band of kidnappers, and Bob sees the priest who tells him of Dulcina's escape, and they set out to find her.

Ladero on his way to the monastery hears the shot fired by Dulcina and reaches the station as Dulcina is about to rush out. Bob meets the operator, disguises himself in his uniform, locates Dulcina, unseen by Ladero, overhears a message read by Ladero that the president is dead and for him to join Mendoza, and he sees him start away. Ladero has ordered his men to fire on the station. Bob's chums, hearing the firing, come to Bob's aid. Mendoza and Ladero's men attack Braga's forces in the city amid terrific gunfire of infantry, and the cavalry have a tremendous fight which ends in a complete routing of Ladero's supporters. When Bob and his friends are about to give up hope of holding off the outlaws, General Braga and his soldiers arrive to rescue them. Eventually Bob is proclaimed president for his services and is married to Dulcina.

SIMPSON SOLAR SCREEN

The Original Daylight Screen

Patented 1908

Aluminum is the only metal that is weather proof. It never tarnishes or deteriorates.

That is why the Simpson Solar Screen is the best screen for open air theatres.

It is seamless.

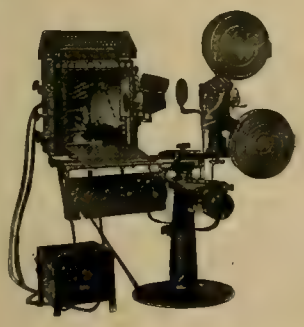
It Was Wisely Said
It Can't Wear Out



Fremont, Ohio,
Mar. 27, 1915.

Gentlemen:—We have used the Motiograph for some time and the machine is as good as new. We have spent a mere trifle for parts, compared to other makes we have had. It can't wear out. We would not be without the Motiograph for twice the price.

Very truly yours,
JEWEL THEATRE.
By F. L. Yerges, Mgr.

MR. BUYER:—Make a thorough comparison, part for part. Then you will be in a position to choose wisely and you will be sure of your choice.

The Better the Picture The Bigger the Profit

There are so many moving picture theatres that patrons can discriminate. They visit one in preference to another because it gives greater satisfaction. To make sure your pictures are accurate, blurless and clear, use

Bausch and Lomb
Projection Lenses

They are the scientific product of the greatest lens makers, illuminating the entire picture to the corners, bringing out every bit of detail.

Through any film exchange you can procure lenses such as we furnish for the regular equipment of Edison and Nicholas Power Machines.

What the Manager of the Beautiful Claremont Theatre Said:

NEW YORK June 8th, 1915.

Manager,
All Celtic Films, Inc.,
1400 Broadway, New York.

Dear Sir:-

On June 7th we showed the picture, "Rafferty Stops the War," in which Joseph Sullivan appears as "Rafferty," and I do not recall when any single-reel picture has so pleased our audience as did this one. Personally, I think it a first class production, full of good, clean comedy.

Very truly yours,
Fred J. Wollinger
Manager.

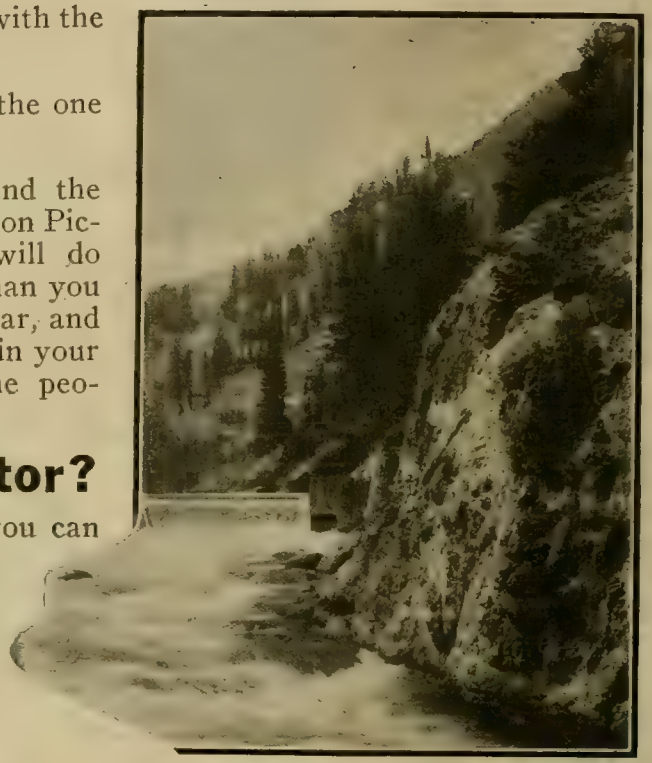
What Do You Do for a Living?

Whatever You Do, You Will Do It Better and More Profitably After Seeing the Golden West and the California Expositions

The best worker is the man with the best brain—

The brain that improves is the one that thinks—

Tour the great West, attend the National Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors and you will do more thinking in a month than you have done heretofore in a year, and you will be more successful in your business of entertaining the people—



Are You an Exhibitor?

It is worth your while, if you can possibly manage it to see God's Country and study what other Exhibitors have to show you—

No matter how great the sacrifice to get there, it will be worth it

Do You Plan to Build a Theatre?

The marvelous palaces of the San Francisco and San Diego Expositions surpass all others in form, in beauty of color. The Exposition is an education for the architect and for the man who has money to spend in building. To see the Exposition palaces, to see the theatres planned and builded by others will add infinitely to your own creative power and value!

An Amazing Demonstration

The Western Country is an amazing demonstration of the power of Yankeeland. It is a tribute to the courage and resources of a great people. You can get a wonderful education in your own line of work by becoming a guest of the Selig Exposition Flyer, which leaves Chicago, Ill., on Thursday, July 8, for a seventeen days' tour of the West and of California. Your wife and your children will also benefit. Educational facilities afforded on this tour are worth more to the children than a year in any college. It's a select party and a select trip. Write this minute for our artistic booklet which is free for the asking.

SMASHED!

EVERY conception of the term FEATURE has been revolutionized Thanhouserward. Powerful quality in one and two reelers forced a new shuffle of the cards—broke the spell of "forced length." I guess you know how exhibitors are jacking up their fronts with my regular releases! Why, they issue special hand-bills and heralds on them! It's because Thanhouser on a program makes it make good every time! They believe in me! They trust me! And there isn't a thing on earth that can make me forget that for a second!

"FEATURE" measures in quality, not footage! I have nailed that fact to the mast, and you can tag your future on to it! I could not to save my soul give you a more magnificent example to prove it than a picture entitled

"Which Shall It Be?"

Just read these lines:

"..... I will give
A house and land where you shall live,
If, in return, from out your seven,
One child to me for aye is given."

You remember that grand old home-circle poem! A poor family, seven children, with a cripple and a very bad boy among them, but bless those little kiddies, a mother's heart loves them all!

"Which shall it be? Which shall it be?
I looked at John—John looked at me!"

There's theme! There's pathos! You'll feature it and run it over and over.

READY SOON

We are talking about "THE BROKEN COIN," a marvelous serial; a fifteen-episode film that will CROWD YOUR HOUSE to capacity; — that will make you FRIENDS FOR YOUR THEATRES;—that has more brains, class and money back of it than any serial ever produced anywhere.

The scenario was written by Grace Cunard; the book was written by the Great American Novelist, Emerson Hough; the marvelous stage settings were arranged by that Prince of Directors, Francis Ford.

Every minute of every day the UNIVERSAL is doing big things. TODAY, NOW, YOU, MR. EXHIBITOR, are in a position to CASH IN on the big things on its REGULAR PROGRAM in a way that your competitor couldn't meet or take advantage of in a thousand years.

Successful exhibitors throughout the world will recall that Ford and Cunard produced "Lucille Love."

That in itself is sufficient indication of the CLASS of the UNIVERSAL'S GREATEST SERIAL, "THE BROKEN COIN."

Declare yourself in on the BIG MONEY. Write, wire, or phone the nearest Universal Exchange for your booking now. Take no chances! Do it now—within the hour.

"Graustark" and "Slim Princess" Will Bring You the Greatest Return for Your Outlay

Every exhibitor wants to get the greatest return possible for his outlay. The way to do this is to give your spectators only the best plays, plays that have proved to be unqualified successes.

The public is an absolute judge of what it wants. It is quick to detect the difference between a poor play and one that has quality, that human interest element that attracts and holds them. You cannot afford to show any photoplay that the public will not accept.

The only photoplay that pays is the play of quality, the one that pleases the public. That kind of a play will throng your theatre and bring results in box office receipts. It also will bring the spectators back again, assured that they will find a good play.

Essanay's six act feature, "Graustark," written by George Barr McCutcheon, is such a play.

Essanay's four act feature, "The Slim Princess," written by George Ade, is such a play.

These two plays have been tried by the jury of the great American public and they have withstood the test. They have rung true. Their tremendous success is known in every city. The exhibitors showing them have been filling their theatres to overflowing.

Book these plays through any of the branch offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc., and you will have no trouble in bringing out the crowds and getting the best result for your outlay.

PROGRAM

IN

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow"

More Than a Mere Triumph!

Again we have the extreme pleasure of calling your attention to another Famous Players achievement—Mary Pickford in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow." The tremendous success attained by this superb production immediately after its release again proved the sound judgment of the trade paper critics, which was as follows:

"In Frances Hodgson Burnett's creation of Glad, the inspired and inspiring heroine of 'The Dawn of a Tomorrow,' the Famous Players offered Mary Pickford a distinctive character of marked appeal. Miss Pickford might well be selected as the ideal interpreter of the little girl whose soul rises above the sordidness of the London slums. In the main, Miss Pickford has a part of large emotional possibilities, in some ways reminiscent of 'Tess of the Storm Country,' and she acts, as she did then, with force and sincerity."—MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

" 'The Dawn of a Tomorrow,' which was one of the most successful and far-reaching plays that ever saw the legitimate stage, is another decided triumph for the Famous Players. In interpreting the various human emotions, joy, sorrow, wonder, trust and indignation, Miss Pickford seemingly outdoes all past performances of recent date. All the settings are ingeniously realistic."—Motion Picture News.

"Mary Pickford's portrayal of Little Glad is one that will make a deep impression. The atmosphere of the picture is truly Dickensonian. Apple Blossom Court, a dirty alley in the East End of London, is a marvel of what can be accomplished in the way of realistic settings. Those who witness 'The Dawn of a Tomorrow' will want to see Mary Pickford in many more such roles."—N. Y. Telegraph.

We could cover many more pages with the other eulogies devoted to this production, but we will leave some of them to YOUR audiences!

The Tribune said: "Mr. Beban's acting of the Italian is really a superb bit of character portrayal."

Evening Mail said: "Caught the attention of Broadway. 'The Alien' is very much worth seeing."

The Herald Said: If there was a dry eye in the theatre it must have been a glass one."

Evening World said:
"Makes a strong appeal"

The Journal said:
"Huge Success"

New York Times:
"Lifts you out of the seat"

The Evening Sun said: "From end to end 'The Alien' is all real. The film story has been produced with such care and ability that it stands alongside the spoken drama as a compeller of tears and laughter."

BESSIE BARRISCALE

A Chorus Girl finds being good very lonesome work & when about to fall from the straight & narrow path, discovers, there is a Reward for the Virtuous

Bessie Barriscale

OF "THE DEVIL" & "CUP OF LIFE" FAME

THE REWARD RELEASED JUNE 24TH

JANE WALLACE, NICKNAMED "THE ICEBERG" BECAUSE OF HER REFUSAL TO JOIN THE GAY LIFE OF THE "GREAT WHITE WAY" WITH THE OTHER CHORUS GIRLS OF HER COMPANY, FINDS BEING GOOD VERY LONESOME WORK. TRIXIE, A VERY LIVELY CHORUS GIRL, TELLS DAN CONBY, AN IDLER AND CYNIC THAT THERE IS ONE WOMAN WHO REFUSES TO BE ANYTHING BUT GOOD. DAN LAUGHS AT TRIXIE AND TELLS HER THAT JANE IS FAKING, AND THAT THE WOMAN DOESN'T LIVE WHO WON'T TAKE THE PRIMROSE PATH IF SHE GETS THE RIGHT CHANCE. TRIXIE INTRODUCES HIM TO JANE THE NEXT DAY, IN ORDER TO GIVE HIM A CHANCE TO PROVE THAT HE IS RIGHT.

DAN TAKES JANE TO A CARBARET FOR LUNCHEON, AND RIDICULES THE STRAIGHT PATHWAY, ASKING JANE WHAT REWARD SHE GETS FOR BEING GOOD. JANE TELLS HIM "THE RESPECT OF OTHERS". TO PROVE TO HER THAT SHE IS WRONG DAN INTRODUCES HER TO SOME OF HIS ARISTOCRATIC FRIENDS, WHO SNUB JANE BECAUSE OF HER SHABBY CLOTHES. OTHERS DO THE SAME THING UNTIL JANE BEGINS TO WONDER IF SHE IS NOT WRONG. ONE NIGHT JANE IS LATE AT THE THEATRE, AND GETS A CALLDOWN FROM THE STAGE MANAGER, AND IS ALSO FINED. AS SHE STANDS IN THE ENTRANCE, TWO FLASHILY DRESSED CHORUS GIRLS COME ON, AND ARE PASSED BY THE STAGE MANAGER WITH A SMILE. JANE DEMANDS TO KNOW WHY THEY ARE NOT FINED ALSO, AND IS TOLD BY THE STAGE MANAGER THAT THEIR FRIENDS PAY HALF THE EXPENSES OF THE SHOW. JANE IS DISGUSTED AND DISCOURAGED AND TELLS THE STAGE MANAGER SHE IS THROUGH WITH THE SHOW AND LEAVES.

IN THE MEANTIME JANE'S SWEETNESS AND GOODNESS HAVE BEEN INFLUENCING DAN, AND HE IS CONVINCED THAT HIS OUTLOOK ON LIFE IS WRONG. HE IS WRITING JANE ASKING HER TO MARRY HIM, WHEN SHE COMES TO HIS APARTMENTS AND TELLS HIM THAT SHE REALIZES SHE HAS BEEN A FOOL AND IS NOW READY TO TRY THE OTHER WAY. DAN IS HORRIFIED AND AMAZED, AND TELLS HER THAT BEFORE SHE DECIDES FINALLY, HE WOULD LIKE TO SHOW HER A FEW THINGS ABOUT THE OTHER LIFE. HE STARTS OUT TO SHOW HER, BUT JANE'S SENSIBILITIES SEEM BLUNTED, AND HER DECISION HAS LEFT HER LIKE A WOODEN WOMAN. DAN SENDS HER BACK TO THE APARTMENTS ALONE TELLING HER THAT HE WILL JOIN HER LATER. WHILE THERE A DOCTOR COMES FROM ACROSS THE HALL AND ASKS HER HELP. SHE FINDS IN THE NEXT APARTMENT A WOMEN WITH A NEW BABY. SHE COMES BACK TO HERSELF AS SHE REALIZES THAT THE REWARD OF VIRTUE IS UNTAINTED MOTHERHOOD, AND WHEN DAN COMES, SHE LEADS HIM TO THE DOORWAY, WHERE THEY LOOK IN UPON THE BEAUTIFUL SIGHT OF THE MOTHER AND HER BABY. DAN TAKES JANE IN HIS ARMS AND HE SAYS SOFTLY, "I GUESS THAT IS WHY GOD INTENDED WOMEN TO BE GOOD, AND MEN TOO".

PRESENTS FOR ITS TWO-PART FEATURE

SUNDAY, JUNE 27

FRANCELIA BILLINGTON

Children of the Sea

A heart appealing drama featuring Charles Clary and Francelia Billington, with Miss Billington playing a double role.

CHILD COMEDIES. The unusual success of the Majestic Juvenile Company in child comedies, in which the little people play leading parts, has encouraged us to present a regular series of these pictures. We will be glad to receive comments and criticisms from exhibitors and picture patrons.

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

PIRATES BOLD (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, June 15. Another "kid" picture with the principal parts done by stars of the Majestic juvenile company, and telling of a narrowly averted catastrophe caused by unruly and romantic children playing "pirates."

THE WOMAN FROM WARRENS (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, June 20. A pleasing society story in which an unscrupulous young libertine is robbed of his victim by the wit of The Woman from Warrens.

WHERE BREEZES BLOW (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, June 20. Fay Tincher, the popular Komic star, is awarded first prize at the Venice Beach beauty show. A laughable farce is woven around the event.

THE ASH CAN (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, June 22. A child comedy by the Majestic Juvenile company. Little Dick, the detective, and his friends, receive a bad scare when the captive heroine disappears from the ash can.

THE MOTOR BOAT BANDITS (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Friday, June 25. Irene Hunt as the girl reporter aids the detective in running down a band of motor boat crooks.

CHILDREN OF THE SEA (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, June 27. Charles Clary and Francelia Billington in an unusual heart interest story. The fisher girl is saved from following the downward steps of her mother.

BEAUTIFUL LOVE (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, June 27. A farce comedy with a new idea, featuring Fay Tincher, Elmer Booth and the entire company of Komic comedians. In this story the relations of the males and females of society are reversed.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel
By Roy L. McCardell

William Russell's powerful acting, his remarkable strength and his forceful personality, have contributed greatly to the wonderful success of the American Film Mfg. Co.'s stupendous continued photoplay—"The Diamond From the Sky." The applause that greets the appearance of Mr. Russell in each chapter of "The Diamond From the Sky" indicates the popularity he has won. Every member of the cast interpreting this magnificent production is of the same high calibre—Lottie Pickford, Irving Cummings, Eugenie Forde, Charlotte Burton, George Periolat, W. J. Tedmarsh and Orral Humphrey.

Eight chapters of "The Diamond From the Sky" are now appearing. A new two-reel chapter is released each week. $10,000 is offered for a sequel to this great photoplay. Exhibitors: If you want an exceptional attraction with continued interest—constant box office receipts throughout the summer—book "The Diamond From the Sky" NOW! Wire, write or see the North American Film Corporation's representative at your nearest Mutual Exchange or write us.

"Marvelously beautiful. Truly a great picture," writes the Dramatic Mirror

The transcendent dramatic power of the story of a love that survives ruthless death—a love that goes down through the ages through re-incarnation, carrying in its death-defying sweep the souls of a man and woman who follow each other, to meet, to painfully suffer and be torn apart by death when earthly happiness is theirs. This mighty appeal is made soul-absorbing by that artist of the screen, Mabel Trunnelle, whose art stands forth with the fullness of dramatic beauty which a story by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and the direction of Richard Ridgely always provide. VITAGRAPH ONE, THREE AND SIX-SHEET POSTERS.

Another One of the Same Kind this Week

On behalf of my friends and myself I would like to thank the Vitagraph Company for having given us at last, in the "Jarr Family," a REAL comedy—that we can enjoy, laugh at and keep awake through. Every one of the Jarr pictures has been thoroughly enjoyable—many hearty laughs for the audience. THE VITAGRAPH HAS ALWAYS STOOD FOR THE HIGHEST AND BEST in moving pictures and in producing the "Jarr Family" has made another step forward. The public, when it finds out that it can be made to laugh, without seeing someone kicked in the ear or paralyzed by a brick, will go where they can see comedies like the "Jarr Family" and not the slapstick, which adds another terror to life.

Facts and Comments

THE National Convention of the Exhibitors' League is less than a month away. It may be said in sober truth that the future of the league will very largely depend upon the results of this convention. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has for years and years urged the exhibitors to get together for mutual benefit and protection. It will now devolve on the exhibitor to show that he is capable of understanding the advantages of organization and that he is capable of creating and maintaining such an organization. The coming convention at San Francisco holds out extraordinary inducements to exhibitors to attend and promises of attendance are coming in from all sections. Business of the utmost importance will come before the convention. Every exhibitor who has a large stake in the profession and who realizes the benefits of being united and strongly organized, both in the state and in the nation, ought to go out to California and take part in the deliberations and in the work of the convention.

IN DISCUSSING the dangers of depopulating the rural districts and the small villages a magazine points to the motion picture as a possible check. The lure of the city most of the time means nothing more than the love of amusement. The motion picture provides substantially the same films for both country and city. The motion picture, indeed, does far more than merely amuse the rustic population. It enlightens them. It furnishes that contact with the outside world the continued absence of which very often leads to mental depression and mental flatness. Rustic solitude may be the delight of the philosopher, but farmers and villagers cannot thrive on it mentally as a steady diet.

LET US applaud the stand taken by the state convention of the Pennsylvania exhibitors. They pledge themselves to fight censorship to a finish, though they have obtained substantial concessions from their late legislature. The generosity of some of the producers has provided them with funds which will enable them to conduct an intelligent and systematic campaign of education and when the next legislature meets they will be in a position to renew the fight with increased vigor.

THERE have always been producers who were anxious to co-operate with the exhibitor by providing him with advertising matter and similar aids. The campaign of helping the exhibitor is entering a new phase, in some quarters at least. The producers feel that the profits of their pictures depend in no small measure upon the skill and energy of the exhibitor who shows them to the public. It is, therefore, to their interest to surround the exhibitor with every possible advantage for a proper presentation. Hence, some of them have sent out experts, men who have made a distinct success in the exhibiting profession. These experts are at the service of any exhibitor who may care to use them. This is a splendid innovation and we may have more to say about it in the near future.

ONE of the most gratifying evidences of the kindly interest which the exhibitors of the country take in their favorite publication, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is their eagerness to assist us with suggestions. Not a day passes but we receive numerous clippings from papers, hints as to the timeliness of treating certain phases of the industry, either in the editorial department or in the news columns. If these letters are not always published the writers may be assured that we appreciate their counsels and that we take up every complaint about pictures with the producers directly. In most instances the producers are just as grateful for the exhibitor's suggestion as we are and wish they could get more of them.

JUDGE WHITAKER of the Supreme Court of New York, differing from Judge Davis of the same court, thinks that pictures dealing with the European war are not bound to respect the prejudices of hyphenated citizenship of whatever origin. The producer must be guided by his own sense of what is becoming and what is commercially profitable. Official interference rarely does any good.

"Jitneyism" in Exhibition

By W. Stephen Bush.

IT SURELY is not necessary for the Moving Picture World to say for the 'nth time that it is not opposed to a nickel as a price of admission, provided the show is not worth more than a nickel. I may add that a very decent sort of show may be arranged for five cents. There will always be five-cent shows and there is every reason to believe that they will continue to constitute the majority of such entertainments. All this is said by way of preface and to make it clear that what we have to say on "jitneyism" in exhibition is not at all inspired by an unreasoning prejudice against the nickel as such.

On behalf of many men in the industry and especially on behalf of hundreds upon hundreds of intelligent and progressive exhibitors I feel in duty bound to record a very vigorous protest against the nickel as a price of admission to the highest grade of show. By word of mouth and by many letters from various sections of the country it has been made plain to the writer that the evils of "jitneyism" in exhibition are a very real and a very grave menace to the industry and to the existence and further development of quality on the screen.

Here is what one exhibitor, a capable man running a first class theater, writes apropos of the "jitney" evil: "I enclose herewith a clipping and call your attention to the fact that not only a five-reel production is being shown for five cents (William Farnum in 'The Plunderer'), but Salisbury's pictures are being shown on the same program. This theater is located in the heart of the city opposite the state capitol. It boasts of an orchestra and 2,000 seats, about five hundred of which sell for ten cents and all the others for five cents. They show Metro, Fox and Kleine features—Ye Gods and Little Fishes! Leslie Carter in Du Barry at five cents, with other subjects thrown in to make a strong program; Mutual Masterpieces with Saturday Evening Post advertising billed as wonderful productions being shown here at the ——— Theater for five cents. One year ago in this city it was three reels for five cents—regular service. To-day a two-hour programe, including some of the country's best and biggest productions."

It is an axiom in motion picture exhibition that a big and expensive show offered for five cents will lead to destruction. No need to point it out again in these columns, which have always teemed with such warnings both in season and out of season. If a man is bound to commit suicide there is no way of preventing him. If only his own fate were involved we might view it with indifference, but the exponent of "jitneyism" in exhibition is hurting the industry generally. He wants to bring quality down to a permanent and immovable basis of five cents. He is not only rocking the boat, but tampering with the safety valve. It stands to reason that he cannot go on offering the highest quality for the lowest possible price. It is next to impossible to raise a house that has been on the five-cent level with a high class program back to the ten-cent level. If the public for a few months' time have been getting the best the market affords for five cents, why should they pay ten cents? Why, indeed? They may pay ten cents at a different theater, possibly built on the ruins of the house which carried "jitneyism" to extremes, but they will never honor such a house by tolerating a raise from five cents back to ten cents.

Whom then does this "jitneyism" gone mad hurt most? For the time being it may hurt the ten-cent house, which is managed by the man who is trying to maintain a fair admission price. In the end, however, it will hurt the producer and the exchange man far worse than it hurts the "nearest competitor."

One of our readers, speaking of the evils of extreme "jitneyism," says: "The manufacturers and the exchange men have the remedy. Why is it not applied? If they continue to permit short-sighted exhibitors to keep the motion picture in the 'jitney' class where do they expect to land? Why cheapen this business when this is the golden opportunity to put it on a high plane where it belongs? Champion this cause for the good of the entire industry and depend upon the real business men who are engaged in the motion picture business to help you in every way possible."

What sort of quality can you build upon a perpetual basis of five cents? Students of industrial and economic conditions in analyzing the motion picture field have time and again told the writer that the waste in this industry is stupendous. They say that even the best organized of industries cannot stand such waste for any length of time and no one will contend that this industry of ours is conspicuous by reason of its scientific organization. When the big companies with great reputations, with fine plants, with splendid forces allow their productions to be exhibited in nickelodeons they are deliberately digging their own graves. Perhaps the thought uppermost in their minds is to stifle competition. It is the old, old story. The financial graveyards of the country are dotted with the epitaphs of the men who have sought to stifle competition just in this manner.

The fine and useful art of producing motion pictures cannot be monopolized. It would be just as reasonable to attempt the creation of a monopoly in painting or in sculpture or in literature or in the drama. There positively is a radical and inherent difference between making motion pictures and making shoes or cheese. The purely commercial mind finds it difficult to grasp this obvious fact. The mere reckless expenditure of money does not insure success in this field. Brains, showmanship, a full comprehension of the importance of ART, an ability to gauge and to direct public taste are absolutely essential.

It is well known that the average cost of a good negative of four reels or more is higher to-day than it ever was. The ancient estimate of a thousand dollars for a thousand feet has been shot to pieces some time ago. The days of cheap production may return eventually when the market is well graded and a more scientific system of distribution is in force. Just now production is extremely expensive and likely to remain so for some time to come. In addition the cost of distribution is abnormally and disproportionately high. To dig a new channel of distribution is like tackling a virgin forest.

Can all this vast expense be carried on a five-cent price of admission? If the big exhibitor cannot see that the little fellow has a right to exist and is, indeed, necessary to a full utilization of the possibilities of the motion picture market let the producers at the top of the ladder teach him the lesson and keep him away from the nickel admission for the highest grade of motion picture entertainment.

Poetic Spirit

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHILE using the word "poetic" in its recent application to artistic invention and arrangement, there is here attempted no avoidance of its full meaning. "Poetry is a veil, rather than a mirror," says a noted critic. "Flowers it has that no forests know of, birds that no woodland possesses." It makes and unmakes our worlds and all that they contain. The poet is the inspired observer of all time, past and future, of all existence that ever was or can be conceived by mortal mind. For him there are no limitations of form and space, no subjects obsolete or impossible. "Whatever of life and passion the world has known in the Desert of Judea or in Arcadian Valley, by the ruins of Troy or Damascus, in the crowded streets of modernity, or by the pleasant ways of Camelot, all lies before him like an open scroll—all is instinct with beautiful life."

There is a phase of screen imagery akin to poetry, "a creative energy that is born of the soul in force and fervor, that has all the wonder of the prophet, and not a little of the consecration of the priest." There is a point where this phase fuses with the aesthetic, where these two unify in an entirely new method of expression, that of the screen, and yet remain true to the underlying principles of art. Through physical movement, through intelligent application of settings and lights, through sanctification of nature's sweetest moods, may be evolved a harmony of revelation that is at once a delight for the eye, a stimulus for the mind, and inspiration for the heart. At that particular point the author abdicates in favor of the director, who thereafter reigns supreme,—the autocrat of artistry.

The autocrat of artistry has his troubles. Even when he is entirely capable of entering into the spirit of this new art, he is all-too-often harassed by the commercial management, driven to complete his work in time for an arbitrary release. So many feet of film for so much money is the requirement, with all that goes to make that film a thing of beauty and joy forever as a side issue. This policy is the result in part of an old system of distribution, one which compels the exhibitor to eat everything on the bill of fare or starve. It is also partly to blame for the prosaic character of most releases, but the big fault in production lies in the system which has grown out of a superfluity of scenarios. A flood of them pours in from amateurs who read the "no-previous-experience-necessary" advertisements, and the director has to choose between these and the scripts from professional writers who reach down from some isolated height of literary obscurity to immolate their talents and pick up a little easy money.

If poets have one single distinguishing characteristic, it is that of sincerity. Even when they make a study of their own ideals and principles, or take pains to find what demands are made upon them by those to whom they sing, they do so to put emphasis in songs that come straight from their hearts. If prosaic photoplays have only one characteristic to distinguish them from stories containing a beautiful ideal, it is lack of sincerity. The sordid motive cannot be concealed. It deadens the whole product. The surest way to detect hypocrisy in this new and beautiful art of expression is to closely examine what the author has to express. Scenarios from those who try to squeeze the last drop of blood out of stale situations and plots are false offerings from apostles of nothingness.

Given a poetic theme of vitality, sympathy with its spirit, knowledge of photoplay structure, and an ability to communicate that knowledge in writing, the average director will find his scenario a source of delight and inspiration. Success can only be expected in this composite production when it is an art complete, not one incomplete. The autocrat of artistry may be able to accomplish wonders, but he falls down when called upon to imitate the forest bird's note on a penny whistle. Nor is it entirely up to him to carry forward the poetic spirit of a story. His is sensitive work, and he must have the cordial support of those who watch expenditure, generosity of conduct quite as well as of outlay.

Sometimes the autocrat of artistry is hampered by an experience purely theatrical and occasionally dramatic. It is quite possible that poesy and jingle are confounded in his mind, natural result of several years' apprenticeship to the stage. He may have lost all traces of natural endowment to grasp the almost intangible spirit of poesy. Then it is that his backgrounds possess not even a pilfered essence of artistry. Consumed by a desire to display his knowledge of stage mechanical operation, a slave of the property room, he loses sight of the fact that he, and he alone, must appeal to a sensitiveness, to a love of beauty and harmony that is almost universal among intelligent people, that even makes dull hearts beat high in response. When he receives the best that capable authorship has to offer, he demonstrates his own unfitness for his work unless he transmits the energy and beauty of it to his audience. He should do this and even more, even add to what is destined to become an instrument of universal culture.

There can be no spirit of poesy in a screen visualization that does not spring pure and undefiled from a big heart, one in generous sympathy with whatever contributes to world-over human happiness. This spirit is as delicate as the poet's own tender sensibilities. That it may persist in and pervade the completed product, it must be handled with high appreciation of its value. If it does not discover a great truth, its mission may be that of bringing truth to light, or that of helping to make a truth of restricted circulation socially appropriated. Its interpretation on the screen should be of beauty rather than of force. It should appeal rather than strike with hard blows. While science has enabled us to advance through knowledge of observed facts, the Spirit of Poesy has brightened our way, made us more tender and ennobled our aspirations. That spirit is perhaps best described in a tribute to Christina Rosetti:

"Still on our ears
The clear "Excelsior" from a woman's lips
Rings out across the Apennines, although
The woman's brow lies pale and cold in death
With all the mighty marble dead in Florence.
For while great songs can stir the hearts of men,
Spreading their full vibrations through the world
In everlasting circles till they reach
The Throne of God, and song becomes a prayer,
And prayer brings down the liberating strength
That kindles nations to heroic deeds.
She lives—the great-souled poetess who saw
From Casa Guidi windows Freedom dawn
On Italy, and gave the glory back
In sunrise hymns to all Humanity.

Stereoscopic Pictures Screened

Edwin S. Porter and W. E. Waddell Show Remarkable Three-Dimension Photography to Audience at the Astor Theater.

By Lynde Denig.

EDWIN S. PORTER, of the Famous Players, and W. E. Waddell, formerly of the Edison Company, showed something new in stereoscopic photography at the Astor Theater on the morning of June 10. The pictures marked a distinct advance over any of the kind made in the past, and many in the audience appeared to regard them as the forerunners of a new era in motion picture realism.

Edwin S. Porter.

Just how soon the invention will be used in the production of pictures for the regular market has not been decided, although Mr. Porter believes that the day of such a development may not be far off. Talking to trade paper representatives prior to the exhibition, he made clear his confidence in stereoscopic photography.

In a brief introductory address, delivered from the stage on behalf of Messrs. Porter and Waddell, it was announced that the long sought after third dimension in photography had been gained. Whereas breadth and height are registered in the customary photograph, depth, or a true perspective representing objects precisely as they appear to the eye, is necessarily lacking. Without going into the laws of optics, it may be noted that a stereoscope is a binocular optical instrument by means of which two pictures appear as one and stand out in relief. The problems facing the adapters of the principle to motion photography were two fold—that of throwing a picture on the screen which might be reflected to the audience in stereoscopic form and that of adapting the film used to a standard projection machine.

After experiments covering a period of nearly ten years, Messrs. Porter and Waddell have succeeded not only in producing a stereoscopic picture, but one that may be run through any machine in the ordinary manner. Until this had been accomplished, the invention (to be protected by a patent) was withheld as commercially impracticable. Obviously, the next step in placing the three-dimension picture on a marketable basis is that of making it visible on the screen to the naked eye.

Each member of the audience at the Astor Theater was provided with glasses, green for the right eye, red for the left. Any transparent material properly colored serves the purpose, so the expense of furnishing an audience with the required equipment need not be great. Holding these glasses before the eyes one gains a truly stereoscopic effect that is nothing short of startling in lifelikeness. The screen seems to be brought to within a few feet of the onlooker and the objects, animate and inanimate, stand out in correct perspective, quite as though the vision were centered on an actual room, a landscape, or whatever the subject may be.

Naturally, Mr. Porter does not care to divulge in detail the process by which he produces stereoscopic films suitable to standard projection machines. His explanation is confined to elementary laws familiar to any photographer. For instance he announces that "it is necessary to use two lenses in the camera, the pupilary distance apart being the same as that of our own two eyes." Also it is necessary that the right eye should see the right picture, the left eye should see the left picture, and that alone."

Considering the initial offerings from the viewpoint of the layman, in other words from that of the audience on whose favor the commercial success of three-dimension photography rests, it is enough to report the impressions left by the showing at the Astor. Imagine, then, a theater thrown into inky blackness. Each member of the audience is told to place the green and red cardboard mounted transparencies before the eyes, otherwise the picture will not be visible. Looking at the screen with the naked eye the rapidly moving pictures, inordinately large and duplicated in red and green, appear as meaningless and distorted as a nightmare. Merged by the colored glasses, the reds and greens are neutralized into an even tone and out of chaos, a duplicate of life emerges.

Three reels were presented, the first largely composed of rural scenes serving to show how stretches of country—hills, valleys, houses, the figures on a country road, may be brought into stereoscopic relief. The effect is marvelously real. Having illustrated the virtues of the process for exterior work, the latter part of the first reel and practically all of the second, were devoted to figures moving in studio sets chosen for their depth and richness. Marie Doro appeared in scenes from a picture yet to be released, John Mason played a number of passages from "Jim, the Penman," and other subjects were calculated to prove the adaptability of the process to all forms of motion photography. The last 1,000 feet presented Niagara Falls.

Judging from the first samples, it may be surmised that the inventors are meeting difficulties in catching fast action. The poorest scene in the exhibition was of an elaborate Oriental dance in which the performers were blurred and the film in its entirety shimmered, something like a reflection on a lake. Then there were other instances in which quick movements failed to register. If this is not an inherent limitation it no doubt will be overcome.

More important still, however, if stereoscopic pictures are to revolutionize photography and become a permanent institution, is the elimination of the need for colored glasses. These pictures would appeal first by reason of their novelty, then because of the wonderful effects obtained, and after that, when they had become familiar, there would be the same old demand for an interesting story. Directors of photoplays spend much thought in creating suspense, in stringing together a long succession of dramatic scenes that a spectator may be caught by the spirit of the action which for the time being seems real. There must be no break to spoil the illusion.

What, then, would be the consequence of removing the red and green lenses from the eyes while a dramatic picture was being run? Straightway the normal people on the screen would become colored hobgoblins and the consecutive impression of a work of art would be seriously damaged. Natural curiosity must prompt the average spectator to take an occasional disillusionizing glimpse at the screen with the naked eye, and if it did not, the task of holding cardboard glasses in place for half an hour at a stretch is not altogether comfortable. All of which is in no way a disparagement of the valuable contribution to photography made by Messrs. Porter and Waddell.

SUNSET DISPOSES OF TERRITORY.

Mr. E. Cory, general manager of the Sunset Motion Picture Company, which owns the Stefansson Arctic pictures, reports that he has disposed of considerable territory for those interesting views of the frozen north. Louis B. Mayer of Boston has taken the New England states; the Metropolitan Booking Offices of New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Baltimore, have the states of New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kentucky; Metro of Detroit, for Michigan; the Celebrated Players of Chicago, for Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin; and the Laemmle Service of Omaha, for Nebraska and Iowa.

SMALL TOWN GIRL LEADS CONTEST IN NEBRASKA.

The "Runaway June" contest does not close until September 30, but there are certain very definite indications as to what type of woman is most popular in a given State. Of course, before September the present State leaders in the contest may be replaced by others, but it is not likely that the average of public taste in the State will be altered. In many of the States, however, the contests in various theaters are so close that no State leader seems to be emerging. Miss Lottie Marguerite Bucklin at the present time is leading the State of Nebraska. She was nominated in the Empress Theater, Fremont.

Of interest to exhibitors is the fact that Miss Bucklin comes from a city of 8,718, thus demonstrating that the small city has just as much chance as the large city. It could not be otherwise, it may be noted in passing, for each balloting in a theater, whether large or small, counts one on the final result for the three women receiving the highest number of votes.

Looking Ahead With United.

What the Producing Companies Propose to Do to Keep Up the Standard of Releases.

WITH the beginning of the summer the producing companies of the United Program are taking on an added activity which insures even better short story films, of a high quality, for the United Film Service than in the past. Joseph J. Franz, formerly director of the Premier Company at the studio at Santa Paula, Cal., has returned to the studio after an absence of some time, and will continue his work of directing the making of two part dramas of Western life. Two other new members, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Garcia, have joined the company and will support Lillian Hamilton and Fred Church, the leading players.

At the beginning of the week Arthur Smallwood, president of the Smallwood Film Corporation, announced the fact that he had secured new studios for the Pyramid Company at Ridgefield Park, New Jersey. The studio occupies a new building especially erected for the purpose, and is one of the largest glass covered studios in the country. The stage is large enough to permit the setting of four large scenes at one time.

With the addition of Gertrude Bondhill to the Lariat Company at the Garden of the Gods studio, this company will deviate from its policy of making only Western two-part dramas, and will add Biblical and other poetical photodramas to its output. The studio is undergoing repairs. Mr. Thayer, the director, is adding a new and entirely adequate equipment, which will facilitate greatly the making of the kind of pictures it is his ambition to produce.

The Superba Company has decded to greatly enlarge upon the size and pretentiousness of their one reel comedies for the United by adding a large company of new players who will be chosen after trials in which they will appear in the "mob" scenes of the burlesques which Director Hutchison will put on in the future. Edith Thornton will continue to play leads, supported by W. E. Browning, Joe Burke and Max Uligh and the players who will be chosen later.

The new outdoor stage of the Empress Company at Flushing is enabling Joseph Levering to stage with great efficiency those two reel sociological and psychological dramas which are being written for his company by Rev. Clarence J. Harris. Under the direction of three directors, Frank Beal, Carl Levinus and Webster Cullison, the Ideal Company at Hollywood is making film history in their excellent dramas of domestic, heart interest and thrilling varieties. Edna Payne and George Larkin continue to carry off the ingenue juvenile honors, while Fred Hearne is developing remarkable talent for his individual type of acting.

MYERS GETS LETTER FROM THE TRENCHES.

Harry Myers, Comedy Director of the Universal Film Company located at the Coytesville studios, received a rather pathetic letter recently from one of the soldiers in the Allies trenches in Belgium asking him to forward some of his comedy pictures. Mr. Myers turned the letter over to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company with the result that a cablegram was sent to the London exchange ordering them to supply all such films gratis. A Powers projecting machine was procured and now when the first line men are relieved and are marched to the rear for the customary three days' rest, the monotony is relieved by these pictures and Mr. Myers will no doubt receive an expression of gratitude in the near future for the interest he has shown in the matter.

NEW PROCESS OF COLOR PHOTOGRAPHY.

The Brewster Film Company, with offices in the Singer Building, New York City, owners of the Brewster Camera Company, also with offices in the same building, a subsidiary of the parent organization, will divulge in a few weeks information on its new process for taking moving pictures in natural colors. A representative of the holding company said that this was all the data that could be consistently released until the validity of its patents has been established.

LARGE INSURANCE ON ROTHAPFEL.

Never before in the history of the motion picture industry has the worth of one man's genius and ideas been so remarkably demonstrated as in the case of S. L. Rothapfel who will be managing director of the new Rialto theater to be erected on the site of Hammerstein's old Victoria at 42d street and Broadway. Yesterday Edward Robinson, the general agent of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, delivered to the Rialto Theater Corporation a policy of $250,000 on the life of Mr. Rothapfel.

Another Lubin Studio

Big Plans for Future Demand Additional Space for Production Purposes.

IN ORDER to broaden the scope of its work and carry out the big producing plans ahead, the Lubin Company will open another big studio plant in Philadelphia within the next few weeks, to be known as Lubin Plant No. 3. The new studio is situated at 17th street and Glenwood avenue, a short distance from the Lubin main headquarters, at 20th street and Indiana avenue.

The new building is 75 feet wide, 300 feet long, and has four floors. It was formerly a factory and the Lubin Company is remodeling it from top to bottom. The roof has been removed and a huge glass top, with the necessary sides, has been substituted.

The top floor, which measures 75 feet by 300 feet, will be used as a daylight studio. On the third floor there will be three artificial light studios, while the first and second floors will be utilized for dressing rooms, carpenter shops, scenery rooms, etc.

When completed, the new plant will be one of the best equipped studio buildings in the country. All the very latest mechanical effects are being installed and the lighting equipment will not only be the last word along these lines but will include a number of new devices that have recently been invented by the Lubin engineers.

The present Lubin producing equipment now consists of two large plants in Philadelphia, another one at Betzwood, Pa., and additional studios at Los Angeles, Cal.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Atlantic City, N. J.; and Newport, R. I.

I. Van Ronkel, Chicago Manager V-L-S-E.

I. VAN RONKEL, manager of the Chicago branch of the V-L-S-E, is quite an "old timer," as time and film history are now reckoned. He has been active for more than a decade in Chicago motion picture circles, first as president and general manager of the American Film Service which he organized in 1905, and then as manager of the three Chicago offices of the General Film Company, with whom he remained until his present connection.

I. Van Ronkel.

Mr. Van Ronkel has been continuously engaged in the film business since the days when a dozen reels and a desk constituted a film exchange. He has been a participant as well as a witness in the rapid strides of the industry, and is therefore well equipped for his new undertaking.

Mr. Van Ronkel says, "I have noted with a great deal of satisfaction the retirement of inferior films and the introduction of the magnificent productions as represented by the features being released by the "Big Four."

"My highest ideals have been surpassed and most visionary dreams realized in the subjects now offered by the V-L-S-E combination. The high standard they have set will give the moving picture industry a new impetus. They will meet the demands of the critics who have been clamoring for more art in film production.

"I am indeed proud to be associated with the four companies in the V-L-S-E, for I feel confident that now most of the troubles of the exhibitors will pass into history."

OLD TOWN GETS STRAND THEATER.

E. E. Boucher, of Old Town, Maine, is building a moving picture theater in that place to be known as The Strand. It will have a seating capacity of 720 persons, and will represent when completed an investment of $10,000. The structure is to be opened in the latter part of this month. Afternoon shows will be given at 2:30 and evening entertainments at 7 o'clock. H. J. Thibodeau will be manager.

Producers Unite to Fight Censorship

All Prominent Film Interests Join Hands in the Fight Against Legalized Censorship.

REPRESENTATIVES of most of the prominent film producers attended a meeting held on the afternoon of June 14 in the projection room of the Big Four to discuss ways and means of conducting a campaign against censorship. The chair was occupied by J. Stuart Blackton, president of the Vitagraph Company, and the following film men were present: Paul Gulick of the Universal, Arthur James of the Mutual, H. E. Spalding of the Paramount, P. A. Parsons of Pathe, Frank Bannon of the Edison Company, W. R. Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation, H. C. Drum of the World Film Corporation, J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship, W. W. Irwin, manager of the V. L. S. E. in New York.

Mr. Binder made a report of his work against proposed censorship legislation in various states, giving in the course of his remarks full credit to "The Moving Picture World" for its valuable assistance in the promotion of an anti-censorship campaign. The next item on the program was the question of presenting the motion picture interests at a hearing before the Bill of Rights Committee of the Constitutional Convention at Albany. W. Stephen Bush, of "The Moving Picture World," read a letter addressed to him by the chairman of the committee, Louis Marshall, inviting the motion picture interests to appear and speak before the committee in the Assembly parlor at the State Capitol in Albany on Wednesday, June 16. It was resolved by the meeting to have all the producers represented at the hearing either personally or by counsel. It was also resolved to aid the industry in Ohio by taking the Ohio Censorship Law into the courts on the ground that the excess of the fees collected over the expenses incurred by the board made the law unconstitutional.

A committee of five was appointed to devise ways and means for conducting a strong educational campaign on the evils of motion picture censorship.

"Mother" Benson of Universal

"MOTHER" BENSON, or to be exact, Mary Elinor Benson, is without a doubt the best known and best loved "mother" on the screen. This little woman has as interesting a history as her charming person suggests.

She was born sixty years ago of American parents, who date their ancestry since 1620, and lived in New York City and Boston until she was sent to Hollywood, Cal., by the Universal just about two and a half years ago.

"Mother" Benson.

Although this delightful little woman has never been on the legitimate stage she has been very successful in pictures. Previous to her screen work Mrs. Benson was a teacher, lecturer, dramatic reader and a writer of repute. She is so interested in her work that it matters not what the weather may be, Mother Benson is the first one "on the job" every morning at the studios in Universal City. She is loved by every one commencing with the general manager down to the property boy. Every one has a nice word for Mother Benson and every one is assured of a bright smile when the little eighty-seven pound lady bobs her head with a cheery "Good morning."

But Mrs. Benson is a splendid actress, as those who have seen "Foundlings of Mother Time," "Her Adopted Mother," "On Desert Sands," "Her Bargain," "Martin Lowe, Financier," and "Their Golden Wedding," can testify. She usually plays the role of the mother and in "Their Golden Wedding" scores a distinct triumph. In this Big U feature "Daddy" Manley, the oldest actor in Universal City, and "Mother" Benson play the leading roles, and this is unquestionably the most charming film ever produced of this character.

Mutual Stockholders Meet

Meeting Held at Richmond, Va., for the Purpose of Electing Directors.—Rumors of Change in Management.

IN ACCORDANCE with the requirements of the law the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Mutual Film Corporation, working under a charter granted by the State of Virginia, was held on Wednesday, June 16, in Richmond, Va. For the past few weeks rumors have been flying about to the effect that there were to be many sweeping changes made in the management of the Mutual. Just what turn these changes will take will not be definitely known until the meeting of the newly elected board of directors is held. This event will not take place until Wednesday, June 23. It has been hinted strongly that H. E. Aitken, now president of the Corporation, will not be a candidate for re-election, and that an entirely new board of officers will be put in charge of the company's affairs and that a clean sweep of every department of the organization will be made.

On the other hand it is reported that Mr. Aitken expects to join other big manufacturers in the formation of a company for the purpose of making big features and that, with this end in view, he placed his resignation in the hands of the board of directors of the Mutual some months ago.

In conversation with a representative of the Moving Picture World regarding these rumors Mr. Aitken declined to affirm or deny any of them, saying that the action of the directors of his company would give the proper answer in due time. John R. Freuler has been mentioned as a possible successor of Mr. Aitken.

W. H. Osborne Writes Pathe Play

WILLIAM HAMILTON OSBORNE, author of the new Pathe serial, "Neal of the Navy," is one of the latest of the popular authors of the day to break into the moving picture field. "Neal of the Navy" will begin to run both on the screen and in newspaper columns about July 31.

Mr. Osborne is a native of Newark, N. J., and resides there; he is a lawyer by profession, and while it is true that there are a number of fiction writers and dramatists who have had a legal training, yet it is quite probable that he is one of the few lawyer-authors who keeps up the active practice of law. He maintains an office in Newark and another one in New York, being admitted to practice in both states. Fiction writing with him was an accident. Up to 1902 he had done nothing in that line. Obeying a sudden impulse he wrote a short story in that year, sent it to a magazine, and it was accepted. Since then he has had nearly four hundred and fifty short stories published by magazines, and has written four successful novels, "The Red Mouse," "The Running Fight," "The Catspaw" and "The Blue Buckle." The last mentioned story is the subject of a contract with David Belasco, who intends to stage it in the near future and "The Running Fight' has been dramatized for the screen.

W. H. Osborne.

"Neal of the Navy" is a story of advanture pure and simple, built upon novel lines, and with the United States Navy as a background. The hero is a lad who enlists as an apprentice seaman, who works his way up through thrilling acts of heroism to a commission; and the heroine, a girl whose life has been fraught with terror and persecution, falls naturally under his protection and that of the Government he represents. The story will be filmed for Pathe by Balboa and presented by a most excellent cast headed by Lillian Lorraine and Wm. Courtleigh, Jr. Arrangements have been made for the publishing of the story in many newspapers covering every section of the country, not only in the big cities but the smaller ones as well.

Universal Contest Decided

Ruth Purcell, of Washington, Is Picked as the Winner Among the Beauties—Girls Having a Good Time.

UNIVERSAL'S national beauty contest has been decided by the choice of Ruth Purcell, of Washington, as the most beautiful of a bevy of American beauties. Ruth is a stenographer, but it is rumored that she may not accept the position that goes to the winner because of her modest disposition.

According to reports the girls are having the time of their young lives. They are wild with delight over California and the pictures. Alberta Holcomb, of Atlanta, exclaimed "I would be willing to live in a tent if I could live in California." One girl will desert the special and stay there; one will return to live there permanently; another will get married and return and another is going to return and get married.

On Saturday, June 12, the party of sixty lunched at Universal City, were passed upon by the judges, returned to hotel and later attended grand ball at the Shrine auditorium. The winner led the grand march assisted by J. Warren Kerrigan, followed by Laemmle, Powers, Brandt, Rothstein, Caulfield and others, each with popular beauty at their sides. Sunday they appeared in pictures, then motored to the beach for a swim, which was followed by numerous other diversions. On Monday the girls were obliged to rest as many of them were completely fagged out.

On Wednesday the party continued on to San Francisco.

Jose Collins

THE latest recruit, and a very attractive one at that, to World Film stardom is Jose Collins, the very well-known and gifted light opera star, who will shortly be presented in a spectacular World Film production.

Miss Collins is the daughter of the famous Lottie Collins, who had a great career on the light opera stage in various parts of the world a score of years ago. Jose, therefore, inherited talent, and better than that has manifested it for herself on the British and American stages. In New York she is remembered for many recent successes in "Suzi" at the Winter Garden and at many leading theaters; "Vera Violetta," the "Merry Countess" are other successes with which her career has been identified.

Jose Collins.

As Geraldine Farrar is a conspicuous recruit from Grand Opera to pictures, so Miss Collins is equally as conspicuous in her transition from light opera, to work before the motion picture camera. She is vivacious and piquant in her work; is endowed with an abundance of personal charm, and enters her new field with a great stage reputation for one so young.

Jose Collins will, without doubt, receive a most cordial welcome from motion picture theater goers throughout the country. The mere sight of her name on a program irresistibly recalls memories of her mother's "Ta-ra-ra-ra-boom-d-ay" that everybody at one time would hum or whistle.

PICKER & BENNETT OBTAIN CO-OPERATION OF THE MINER ESTATE.

Messrs. Picker & Bennett, under whose management the Burland theater in the Bronx has achieved such a phenomenal success, have formed a connection with the Henry C. Miner Estate by which the latter becomes interested in their latest moving picture theater venture, located at Flatbush avenue and Cortelyou road, Brooklyn, with a seating capacity of 2,300. Henry Clay Miner has already made the application to the Board of Licenses for permission to build on this site. These associates have also in contemplation a mammoth moving picture theater on the East Side of New York, where the Miner Estate has large realty holdings.

Tom McNaughton

TOM McNAUGHTON, the famous English eccentric comedian, has become a photoplayer. This interesting announcement was made last week by the Lubin Company, which has secured the services of McNaughton for an indefinite period. The funny Englishman will make his screen debut with Marie Dressler in the Lubin feature comedy, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," written by Acton Davies, and now being produced under the direction of Howell Hansel.

Tom McNaughton.

McNaughton has achieved an international reputation as a comedian. He came to this country about eight years ago with his brother Fred to play a special vaudeville engagement of six weeks, and their eccentric act, with its burlesque boxing bout and duel, made such a hit that the brothers remained here for some time.

About five years ago Fred McNaughton returned to England, but Tom liked it so well in this country that he remained and went into musical comedy. He was with "The Spring Maid" for nearly three years, in which he originated the role of Roland the actor. It was in this production that he did his now famous recitation, "The Three Trees." Following "The Spring Maid" McNaughton was in "Sweethearts," "Suzi" and "Fads and Fancies."

With Marie Dressler, Billie Reeves and Tom McNaughton, Lubin has three valuable comedy stars. According to the Lubin management, other widely known comedy stars are to join the Lubin Company shortly.

Florence La Badie

FLORENCE LA BADIE, one of the greatest of all motion picture favorites, has made her most pronounced appeal through the medium of Thanhouser films. She played the heroine in "The Million Dollar Mystery" and more recently starred in "God's Witness," a four-part Mutual masterpicture. A slight girl, with long lashed, blue eyes, expressive dark eyebrows and an abundance of fluffy, light brown hair, she has in addition to her attractive physique a winning personality and undoubted histrionic talent. It was Edwin Thanhouser, now once more directing the affairs of the New Rochelle organization, who first enlisted Miss La Badie's services.

Florence La Badie.

Miss La Badie comes of fortunate parentage in so far as a theatrical career is to be considered. She was born in Montreal, of well to do and cultured French people and received her education at the Convent of Notre Dame in that city. She speaks both French and German fluently and expresses herself charmingly in English, her adopted tongue, and is widely read in all three languages. Personally she is fond of outdoor sports, likes boating and horseback riding and swimming best of all. Her fad is sketching her friends.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Vitagraph Attractions.

"THE MAN FROM THE DESERT," the Broadway Star Feature of the Vitagraph Theater program for the present week, is a powerful story of the curse of greed. It was produced by the Western Vitagraph Company under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon, and employs Myrtle Gonzales, William Duncan, George Holt, Otto Lederer and George Kunkle, in the cast. Of equal importance as a feature is the Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," of which Chapter VII, in two parts, is shown. Celestia endears herself to the inhabitants of the East Side of New York by saving the workers in a factory from fire. Three special Vitagraph pictures round out the program, and include a two-part comedy, "Insuring Cutey," with Wally Van, Nitra Frazer, and Albert Roccardi; Frederic Chaplin's story, "The Revolt of Mr. Wiggs," introducing Kate Price and Donald MacBride in a suffragette comedy; and Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in "Love's Way," a dramatic story of how the influences of a beautiful girl and thirty days in jail reformed the profligate son of a rich man.

John Barrymore at the Strand.

"The Dictator," the famous comedy-drama by Richard Harding Davis, heads the list of attractions at the Strand theater this week. John Barrymore, who was in the original cast of the piece, is playing the hero. Brooke Travers, in the screen version. The comedy is full of spirited situations, its scenes being laid in a small South American republic, and Mr. Barrymore is excellent as the young American who becomes a dictator. The picture was produced in Cuba and Central America, and the local color is correct throughout. The musical program is a varied and interesting one. The main feature is Murati's Operatic Ensemble, consisting of five singing artists, and including Charles Murati, the Italian tenor; Miss Marie Louise Wagner, soprano; and Nat Kafferty, baritone. The Strand Concert Orchestra, under the direction of Carl Eduarde, render a large descriptive overture.

Hazel Dawn at the Broadway.

Hazel Dawn, who has been induced to leave the legitimate stage permanently by the Famous Players Film Company, is appearing at the Broadway theater this week in a charming photo adaptation of Ronald MacDonald's novel romance, "Gambler's Advocate." Miss Dawn's characterization of "Clarissa," more than vindicates her selection for the star role, and the entire cast meets every requirement. Other attractions are The Broadway Animated News, several new comedies, and the Paramount South American Travel Series.

HARVEY JOINS UNIVERSAL.

John Harvey, Thanhouser director, producer of "The Patriot and the Spy," the four-reel Mutual Masterpicture that was rich in spectacular night photography and war scenes, severs his connection with the Thanhouser Film Corporation June 19 to direct William Garwood and Violet Mesereau of the Imp Universal, and will go to the Coytesville studio on Monday, June 21, to start under the Universal banner. Among Mr. Harvey's best known Thanhouser productions are: "A Dog's Love," "The Barrier of Flames," "Shep's Race With Death," "Shep, the Sentinel," "The Undercurrent," "A Newspaper Nemesis," "$1,000 Reward," "When Fate Rebelled," "The Skinflint," "The Guardian Auto," "The White Rose," "Center of the Web," "Fern Seed," "The Stolen Jewels," "Tracked Through the Snow," "The Message Through Flames," and he finished "Mercy on a Crutch," featuring Miss Helen Fulton and Wayne Eerie, this week. Mr. Harvey has specialized in handling big crowds and big dramatic subjects, and was the owner and trainer of "Shep," the most distinguished dog actor in moving pictures.

C. & M. COMPANY BUILDING BIG THEATER.

The C. & M. Amusement Company, of Marietta, Ohio owners and operators of the Hippodrome in that city, is building in Cambridge, Ohio, a $40,000 picture house to be known as the Strand. The theater is to be opened in the middle of next September. It will have a seating capacity of 800 persons. The structure will contain all the latest improvements. The C. & M. Company is composed of T. C. Weber, president; C. A. Frantz, vice-president; C. C. Middleswart, secretary, and O. J. Sybert, treasurer.

Boeseke Arrives From Coast

President of Associated Says That the Feature Has Seen Its Best Day.

MR. E. J. BOESEKE, president of the Associated Film Manufacturers, Inc., the combination of West Coast producers which is shortly to release a program of twenty-one reels a week, arrived in New York early last week. On his trip eastward, Dr. Boeseke stopped off at the larger cities and studied as far as his time would permit the local conditions.

"It was very evident," said the doctor, "that the feature has seen its best day, and that the public have turned again to the one, two and three reel offerings.

"The exchanges throughout the country are not in a position to meet this demand, owing to the fact that for the last year and a half they have been buying features exclusively.

"I had the pleasure of meeting several of the old-time exchangemen, and I was deeply gratified that they entertained views similar to mine, with but a few exceptions they voiced an opinion that in a short time high-class program films would be at a premium."

Dr. Boeseke is a man of wide interests. In addition to being the head of the Associated and President of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, he is one of the leading physicians of the Coast and has twice been Mayor of the city of Santa Barbara.

Ike Schlank Still in the Game

AMONG the prominent exchange men in the motion picture field there are none more worthy of the term "thoroughbred" than Ike Schlank, who ranks as a pioneer in the game. Mr. Schlank's complete knowledge of the business, which is the result of years of study, and his wide acquaintance in the field, coupled with a thorough understanding of the handling of exchanges, qualify him particularly as a supervisor of exchanges. Mr. Schlank's tactics are aggressive. They follow a complete familiarity with the exhibitor's daily growing wants, and the exchange manager's method of handling them. "These methods" Mr. Schlank says "have got to be varied according to the quality of pictures. The basis, however, is the same. The exploitation of one class of features may not call for the same action another deserves. Classification is essential. The exhibitor is waking up to the newer and greater possibilities in the field, and the demand for better programs is increasing."

Ike Schlank.

Before his advent in motion picture circles Mr. Schlank was connected with Martin Beck, the theatrical wizard, in the capacity of treasurer of the Orpheum's Western chain of theaters. Mr. Schlank's wide and varied experience with theater owners has gained for him an asset that is particularly valuable in the film business. His success, however, is too well known for repetition.

Mr. Schlank has been connected with several extensive motion picture interests in the capacity of exchange manager and has made many friends in the business. He expects to announce at a very early date his association with one of the prominent programs. He is one of the really live wires of the day. Personally he has deserved the friendship and confidence of some of the principal figures in the motion picture field.

DE BELLEVILLE IN "A TRADE SECRET."

Frederic de Belleville, who has just closed a successful season in "A Celebrated Case," has just finished his work in "A Trade Secret" for the Gotham Film Co., in which he plays opposite Betty Marshall, also well known to Broadway theatre goers.

De Belleville has been doing some hair-breadth stunts, such as wrecking automobiles, sinking motor boats, and in one big scene being blown up on a yacht.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS HOLD ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Big Meeting at Lansing on June 8—New Officers Elected.

CLOSE to two hundred exhibitors attended the annual convention of Michigan State Branch, No. 4, M. P. E. L. of A., at the Hotel Wentworth, Lansing, Mich., on Tuesday, June 8. The morning was devoted to registration and the payment of dues. The regular business of the convention started at two o'clock in the afternoon, with Peter J. Jeup, of Detroit, president, in the chair. Following roll call, which showed all officers present, excepting Secretary Orth, of Detroit, the president appointed A. J. Moeller, of Howell, to act as secretary pro tem. The reading and approval of the minutes of the last convention followed. Reports of the secretary, treasurer and auditing committee showed the association to be in good financial condition, with approximately $200 on the debit side.

The legislative committee reported that there had been no unfavorable legislation during the past session at Lansing, although many drastic bills had been introduced. It was owing to the activity of the committee, comprising J. M. Neal and other Lansing exhibitors, that the moving picture industry was saved several radical changes. A rising vote of thanks was tendered the legislative committee for its splendid work.

The convention proceeded with the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: President, B. L. Converse, Owosso; first vice-president, August Kleist, Pontiac; second vice-president, C. C. Newman, Charlotte; third vice-president, Joseph M. Neal, Lansing; secretary, A. J. Moeller, Howell; treasurer, George Thatcher, Bay City; national vice-president, L. R. Simpson, Bay City.

The association decided to advise with motion picture exchanges in an effort to bring about a standardization of the films supplied to Michigan exhibitors. The reports of the officers showed that the association was in favor of a better grade of pictures. Secretary Moeller said that the league had been instrumental in barring several films which had been considered obnoxious.

Bay City was selected as the next meeting place. Several important legislative matters will come up at that time as it will be just previous to the opening of the state legislature. Among them will be changes in the fire regulations, making them less stringent and yet retaining all protective features.

The delegates to the San Francisco convention of the National Association will be appointed by the new president. The association went on record as favoring an amendment to the National constitution that any person interested in moving picture theaters, whether he be also financially interested in an allied business or not, be eligible to membership. According to the constitution as it now stands, no one can belong who is connected with a film exchange or who is a manufacturer. Michigan wants the constitution so worded that "any person interested in a moving picture theater is eligible." Several instances were mentioned of men who owned a chain of theaters in Michigan but who were also interested in a film exchange, and yet under the constitution could not be accepted as members to the National Association.

Peter J. Jeup, of Detroit, has already signified his intention of attending the National convention at San Francisco, July 13 to 16. It is expected that there will be many others from Michigan. Mr. Jeup, by the way, was made a life member of the Michigan Branch, No. 4. It was tendered him as a token of appreciation for the splendid work he has done for the moving picture industry in Michigan since he has been associated with the business.

POST CONVENTION NOTES.

Jottings from the Reporter's Diary at Reading.

Harry Reichenbach at the clerk's desk in the Berkshire Hotel. Sauve, wide-awake and gently but firmly promoting Metro. Enter Marion S. Pearce, National League President, looking for room. Not a room left. "I will give you my room," quoth he of the rococo coiffure. Mr. Pearce protests. Harry insists. Ripple of applause from bystanders.

The name of the little chap from Altoona, giving such clever and laughable imitations of Charlie Chaplin, is William MacAteer. The Silverman brothers have discovered him and Jacob is his immediate personal custodian. He surely made a hit with the convention and with the public of Reading in general.

Jacob William Binder, the financial digger of the National Board of Censorship, and the man who torpedoed the censor bills, looked somewhat careworn on his return from the Pretzel City. He talked too much ancient philosophy on the train and then he had had a dreadful time locating a good restaurant.

Bennethum, Buttner, Schwalbe, Carrick, Spero and Segall, all of Philadelphia, were in the trip to the Pagoda 'way up on the mountain. The motorman stopped ten minutes beyond his schedule to wait for the end of an informal session in the mountain caravansary. Bennethum admitted he had been born in Reading. The view from the mountain's top was beautiful.

Rumors that some great capitalists of Eastern Pennsylvania will soon enter the motion picture field as producers. Some of their men were present at the convention.

The "Dutch lunch" was one of the strongest ever served in Berks County, which is saying a good deal. The Pittsburgh delegation led in the attack. No wonder they call Harrington "Fighting Fred."

CINCINNATI LOCAL JOINS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The movement recently inaugurated for the purpose of rehabilitating the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cincinnati, by leaders in and outside of the old organizaton, received an important impetus last week when the league voted unanimously to join other leading business and civic organizations of the city in becoming affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce. The league will retain its own individuality and organization, as a matter of course, like other business clubs which are affiliated with the chamber in the same way, but it will have such advantages and prestige as naturally go with official connection with the big, strong commercial body which represents the city as a whole. Work upon the building up of the new organization, which, as already pointed out, is expected to include nearly every exhibitor in the city within its ranks, is going rapidly forward, and before the summer is very old an entirely new line-up can be announced. An important feature of the league's connection with the Chamber of Commerce is that the united influence of that body may be expected to be with the league in such efforts as it may be able to make on behalf of the moving picture industry as against the restrictive agitation of various cranks and fanatics.

KLEINE OFFICES SHOW RECORD WEEK.

Despite reports of over-production and sluggish markets, the various George Kleine offices rolled up a larger volume of business for the week ending June 12 than ever before in their history. Figures from middle-west offices were exceptionally good and indicative of a general tendency toward better programs on the part of corn-belt exhibitors. All offices are registering heavy advance bookings for "The Spendthrift," George Kleine's latest feature scheduled for release June 21.

Ince to Entertain Newspapermen

National Editorial Association Will Visit the New York Motion Picture Co.'s Plant.

INCEVILLE is making extensive preparations to act as host on July 29 to 350 delegates to the National Editorial Association. Arrangements to entertain these distinguished visitors were completed last week with the Los Angeles Press Club, under the auspices of which the trip to the N. Y. M. P. studios will be made.

The men who will be entertained by the Ince forces represent the journalistic profession in all parts of the United States. They will arrive in Los Angeles on June 28, and immediately following their first business session on the 29th they will be escorted to the studios in the Santa Monica mountains. There, after being shown the manufacture of the motion picture in its various stages, they will sit down to a barbecue. This will be served within the famous Inceville mission. That structure is being elaborately decorated to befit the occasion and the waiters will be garbed as monks.

What will add an official touch to the event is the fact that Governor Johnson, Mayor Rose and Mayor-elect Sebastian will be present. Each will address the gathering. Rev. Baker P. Lee will talk in behalf of the Press Club and Producer-in-Chief Thomas H. Ince will say a few words for the company. A brass band and a Hawaiian sextette have beeen engaged to render selections. After the "feed," the editors will enjoy an entertainment to be furnished by Inceville talent. This will include exhibitions of horseback riding, steer roping and lassoing. Business Manager Eugene H. Allen, of the N. Y. M. P. Company is giving his personal attention to the arrangement of details.

Leonie Flugrath, Edison's Child Star

A STAR part that has been a sort of family heirloom, that of playing the child star in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" has yielded up to Edison one of the cleverest little leading ladies on the stage in the person of Leonie Flugrath, who is with that company again. For Leonie is the third sister of her family who has accredited herself uncommonly as the little rich girl, the other two having grown out of the part.

Leonie Flugrath.

At fourteen with a year's starring in a Broadway success, and nearly a "lifetime" on the stage, is something to be proud of, that is, if this little girl didn't have the levelest of heads despite its prettiness. But fortunately all the naive sweetly winning ways of the child still lingers about this small addition of a leading lady, and she frankly and refreshingly declares, in much the manner of a school girl, that whatever she has done, she "owes it all to her dear mother."

Up in arms when first on the stage, literally speaking, her first "speaking" part came, as a reward—and an allowance of nature—when she was four years old, when she created the part of Hal, the boy, with Faversham in "The Squaw-man," and played it for three seasons. Four seasons were then spent with Thomas Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle," and then with Edith Wayne Matthewson in "The Piper," in "The Burglar" and two seasons with Charles Cherry, also Richard Bennett in "Passersby," when she understudied her sister while "The Poor Little Rich Girl" was earning its Broadway commendations. At this time she also played in Edison films, doubling up in a way, for two years.

When the time came, in Philadelphia, she played the part with such ability and looked so much like her sister that the audience never knew there had been any substitution in the part. Little Miss Flugrath has just closed her season with that company after an over-country tour and is impatiently awaiting the production of plays in which she will figure prominently. Miss Flugrath's two other sisters, who starred in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," are, curiously enough, both now starring in motion picture film companies.

Arline Pretty

ARLINE PRETTY, a clever member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, was born in Washington, D. C., September 5, 1893. Her father, Edwin Pretty, of English descent, and her mother, whose maiden name was Ella Service, are Philadelphians, both having been born in the Quaker City, although they established a home in Washington. Miss Pretty attended the public schools of the Capitol City, where she began her schooling, finishing her education at a private school.

Arline Pretty.

Like numbers of young girls, who became fascinated with stage life and believe they have the necessary qualifications to become a Bernhardt or Maude Adams, when she made known her wish to become an actress, met with the opposition of her parents. Being of a determined nature, however, she finally prevailed upon them to let her try, with the result that she became a member of the Columbia Players, a prominent stock company of Washington. Among the most important plays in which Miss Pretty appeared in prominent parts, are included "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," "The Man from Home," "Green Stockings" and "Beverly of Graustark."

About two years ago, Miss Pretty was induced to accept a part to pose for the motion picture production of "The Old Guard," a one-act curtain raiser successfully used for years on the legitimate stage. Pictures appealed to her and she later joined a moving picture producing company which has a studio in Tampa, Florida, to play leads.

E. O. Child

ACTORS from the speaking stage are not the only theatrical people attracted to the motion picture art. E. O. Child, Pittsburgh Branch Manager of the V-L-S-E, prior to his two years of film experiences, was active in theatrical circles for twenty years. Mr. Child knows the business of amusing the public from the managerial angle and his knowledge is now a valuable asset to the exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory.

E. O. Child.

Two years ago he came into the film business by effecting a connection with the General Film Company. He had previously been associated with the theatrical business in the capacities of road manager, theater manager, and vaudeville agency director, and his sense of successful exhibition methods has been sharpened by meeting conditions in all sections of the country. Two years with the General Film Company has acquainted him with the particular needs of picture exhibitors.

Speaking with the accumulated wisdom of the thoroughly trained showman, Mr. Child says, the policy as laid out by the "Big Four" is as certain of success as its "square deal" system is refreshing.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

"The Best of the Trade Papers," Testified George Kleine.

IN the suit recently brought by George Kleine against Abraham Polacoff, in the New York United States District Court. before Judge Learned Hand for infringement of copyright on "The Golden Beetle," a cross examination of Mr. Kleifie by the attorney for Polacoff incidentally brought out some interesting opinions concerning the standing in the trade of the Moving Picture World.

It will be remembered from my letter of last week that the first print of "The Golden Beetle," imported by Mr. Kleine, was copyrighted by him at Washington, April 20, 1914. It was always the practice of Mr. Kleine to have his first print of a subject arrive in America at least six weeks before the remaining prints were due, so that copyright for any subject would be secured before the remaining prints arrived in bulk.

"The Golden Beetle" was first advertised by Mr. Kleine in the October 17th issue of the Moving Picture World, and this fact taken in conjunction with the date of securing the copyright at Washington, April 20, led the attorney for Polacoff into a snare.

It will be remembered that the unauthorized print of the film was seized by the United States marshal in August, 1914, and so the attorney for the defense thought he saw a good opportunity to prove that the print seized was not made from the same negative as the print copyrighted by Mr. Kleine.

The following cross examination of Mr. Kleine accordingly resulted:

Question.—Well, is not the Moving Picture World magazine the magazine wherein any and all films are advertised?

Answer.—Not necessarily. I will say that that is the best of the trade papers.

Question.—And if you did advertise any of your films you would advertise them in the Moving Picture World?

Answer.—Very likely, most probably.

Question.—And you regarded "The Golden Beetle" as an important film?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—And as an important film you certainly would advertise it in the Moving Picture World?

Answer.—There is a very strong presumption that it was there, if anywhere.

Those State Censorship Bills.

Concerning the Olson and Curran censorship bills, now before the Legislature at Springfield, very little has leaked out since my letter in the issue of June 5.

Nothing at all has been learned of the Curran bill. A dispatch from Springfield, June 8, revealed that the Olson bill had passed the senate by a vote of 38 to 1, the bill creating a board of censors to be appointed by the secretary of state, with the governor's approval.

The bill applies to the entire state, but provides that Chicago may retain a local censorship board which may reject films which have been approved by the state authorities. No pictures may be shown in Chicago, however, which have not been passed by the state board.

Thus moving pictures exhibited in Chicago will have to be censored twice and fees must be paid to the city and the state, if the Olson bill becomes law. Of this double censorship the Chicago Examiner says editorially:

It is not because the payment of double fees to these two official boards of censorship is grossly unfair that this city has a manifest right to protest against the proposed action of the Legislature.

It is rather because the adoption of archaic ideas of censorship would be a reactionary step that could not fail to hamper a real educational work in behalf of the rising generation. The intelligence of Chicago's citizens is too high to render censorship, except on strictly moral lines, either necessary or expedient.

The Case of "The Birth of a Nation" Goes to the Appellate Court.

Joseph J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation," was notified by his attorneys on Wednesday, June 9, that they had been served notice by the city of Chicago to appear before Judge William Fenimore Cooper, Thursday morning, June 10, when the city would file a bill of exceptions to the injunction granted permitting the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation," in order that the case might be taken to the Appellate Court.

On that date Judge Cooper, in the Superior Court, allowed an appeal to be taken to the higher court, ordering that the bill of exceptions be submitted to the attorneys of Mr. McCarthy for approval. It is expected that the Appellate Court will give an early hearing and render an immediate decision, but up to the present writing action has not been reported.

The attendance at the Illinois theater, where the picture has been presented since Saturday evening, June 5, has been of the record-breaking kind. Long lines have been standing outside the theater at matinees and nightly, notwithstanding that evening prices have been kept up strictly to the two-dollar mark, and the matinees to one dollar and under. No disturbance of any kind has occurred, and praises of the great spectacle have been heralded by the city press and the public.

Mayor Thompson is being criticized from many angles, one of them on account of the following criticism:

"Some of my friends who have seen it say that it ought not to be shown. There are several objectionable scenes. I understand that the assassination of President Lincoln is shown. I cannot understand how anyone can approve of that sort of a picture under any circumstances. Anything of that kind simply breeds crime."

For this the Chicago Tribune sharply took him to task in the following editorial:

We have conceded that this photoplay presents an intricate question and one which might govern public policy, but Mayor Thompson makes it apparent how blunderingly officialdom will approach and handle a delicate problem.

The fact that the assassination of Abraham Lincoln is represented with great effectiveness does not constitute a valid reason for forbidding the showing of the film. The emotion produced in the spectator who sees the acting of this tremendous piece of national tragedy is in kind, if of smaller force, that which filled Ford's theatre when the crime was committed. It is poignant, but to say that the sobered folk who yield to it have been under a crime breeding influence is to take a wild flight into the extravagances of unreason.

The question raised by "The Birth of a Nation" is simply and utterly one of public policy, to be determined either upon fact or upon the most intelligent presumption as to what would be found to be the facts. If the community were as intelligent as such a community ought to be, censorship would be an intolerable outrage upon it.

Intelligence does not need censorship. The greater the insistence upon censorship the greater the denial that the community has intelligence. We know that if moving pictures accessible to the immature, unreasoning, impressionable parts of the city portrayed the success of criminal acts, revealing their perpetrators in enjoyment of life easily made pleasurable, there would be an incentive to weak minds, and the public might suffer the consequences. The matter is one of public policy, and censorship, although in itself dangerous and abhorrent, is accepted as a necessary compromise.

But the question is always one of fact, and ensorship, being in itself a denial of intelligence, or an acceptance of the fact that ignorance is impressionable, frequently proves that it itself is unintelligent.

The assassination of Abraham Lincoln, in whatever form it is brought to the attention, causes a reaction of profound horror and sympathy and of regret. It was a great and consequential fact in our national history. It meant immeasurable woe to the south. Few tragedies in history have had such appealing circumstances and such great consequences. And to contend that a representation of it "breeds crime" merely shows to what extremes of unreason censorship can and will go.

Attorney Cusick, eastern counsel for the Epoch Producing Company, who was instrumental in bringing the contest against "The Birth of a Nation" to a successful conclusion for his clients when it was suppressed in Boston, and who is at present in Chicago, has predicted that the temporary injunction under which the picture is now being exhibited in Chicago will be made permanent.

"The legitimate producing companies are not opposed to properly defined censorship," Mr. Cusick stated. "On the contrary, they realize that they, as well as the public, are safeguarded by such supervision."

Chicago Film Brevities.

The library setting in "The House of a Thousand Candles," now being directed by T. N. Heffron at the Selig Chicago Studio, required a large force of skilled scenic artists and stage carpenters many days to complete. A strictly all-star cast is engaged in the production of this Selig Red Seal subject, which has been adapted from Meredith Nicholson's best novel. Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond take the leading roles, and are supported by John Charles, formerly leading man for Helen Ware; Edgar Nelson, who starred in "Along Came Ruth;" Mary Robson, daughter of the famous English actress of that name, and known as one of the most beautiful actresses in the profession; Forest Robinson, who made an unqualified hit in "The Fortune Hunter;" George Backus, who for years supported May Irwin; Effington Pinto, who was a leading spirit in the last Lambs' Gambol, and other leading players.

Frank Miley, owner of the Daylight theater, Saskatoon, Canada, was in the city last week and paid us a visit. The Daylight seats 750 people and charges an admission of 15 cents for six reels of Paramount and General Film Company's features. It has a four-piece orchestra. The program is changed twice or three times a week. "The Champion," "His New Job," with Charlie Chaplin, and "Wildflower," with Marguerite Clark, ran three days each, to good business. Mr. Miley stated that the Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark pictures are very popular in Saskatoon. The Daylight is closed Sundays, as all amusement resorts are closed on that day.

G. W. Ford, owner of the Grand theater, 652 E. 63rd street, this city, called last week. The Grand seats 350 people and charges an admission of 10 cents for six reels of features of the General Film Company's, World Film Corporation's and Box Office Attractions' product. Business was very fair Mr. Ford stated.

Harry Mestayer, who has been playing leading parts in Selig Red Seal photoplays in the Chicago studio, will leave next week for Los Angeles, to join the Selig Pacific Coast forces. Otis Harlan is expected in Chicago the current week to play leading character roles. Mr. Harlan's first appearpearance in Selig Red Seal photoplays will probably be in Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," which will be directed by T. N. Heffron.

The Photodrama Club of Chicago will give its first banquet Saturday evening, June 19, in the Savage room, the Kuntz-Remmler Co., 424 S. Wabash avenue.

Alfred Hamburger closed arrangements for the lease of the Easterly theater, now in course of construction at Diversey Parkway, Racine and Lincoln avenues, for a term of ten years. This makes the twelfth theater on the Hamburger chain of houses in Chicago.

The Strand Theater Co., at Orchestra Hall, has inaugurated a series of Saturday morning moving picture presentations, weekly, for the young folks of the city. The first presentation was given Saturday, June 12, lasting from 10 . m. until 11.30 a. m., so as not to interfere with the regular afternoon presentation for adults. "The Patchwork Girl of Oz" was screened and created much enjoyment for the youngsters. The admission prices were ten and fifteen cents. This is a new departure in screen entertainments in Chicago and must be credited to Director of Presentations Edward Q. Cordner. A large attendance marked the opening of the series. For the current week beginning Monday, June 14, "The Arab," with Edgar Selwyn in the title role, will be the main screen feature. The customary Strand topics and travelogues and the usual comedy are also on the program, with, of course, the inspiring music furnished by Director Dunham's fine symphony orchestra.

At the Studebaker, the first set of the China series of the pictures taken by the Dorsey expedition has entered upon its second week. The first week was very satisfactory in the attendance drawn by these educational pictures.

At the Fine Arts theater "The Heart of Maryland" has given way to the Lubin feature, "The Sporting Duchess," in which Rose Coghlan is the star.

"The Island of Regeneration" did so well during the first week's run at the Ziegfeld that it has been retained indefinitely.

The beautiful Colonial theater, on Randolph street, midway between Dearborn and State, is offering for the present week as a screen feature, "Fine Feathers," taken from Eugene Walter's successful play, with Janet Beecher in the leading role. In addition to this the Hearst-Selig Weekly, comedy pictures and a fine series of travelogues (booked by George Kleine) contribute to the high value of the program. The high class symphony orchestra accompanies the pictures. Norman E. Field, the well-known manager of this house, who has also had considerable experience in moving picture presentations, is the manager.

John C. McDonnell, chief of the fire prevention bureau, of Chicago's fire department, has declared (and will enforce) that all lithographs which have hitherto been placed in the vestibules of moving picture theaters, in movable frames, must be pasted against solid backs hereafter. Here is the official edict: "The practice of hanging or placing loose advertising matter, displays, or decorations on the front, in vestibules, and around front exits of motion picture theatres has become very common of late, thereby creating conditions which present a decided fire hazard and menace to patrons of such theaters. You are hereby notified to discontinue the practice."

I. Van Ronkle, Chicago manager of the V. L. S. E., Inc., paid a visit to Cleveland, Saturday, June 12, to meet C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager, together with Manager A. W. Gough, of Cleveland, and E. O. Childs, of Pittsburgh, to consult on matters of publicity, salesmanship, etc. An exchange of experiences by the managers of the Chicago, Cleveland and Pittsburgh offices, showed that business is at high water mark for the V. L. S. E., Inc.

Everyone who has seen "The Spoilers" will remember the remarkable realism of the mining village away in far Alaska, where the main incidents of that great photoplay were laid. It was quite surprising to many to learn that that village was really built and constructed in every particular on grounds now occupied by the Selig Zoo, Los Angeles. In my review, in this issue, of "The Rosary," reference is made to the truthful atmosphere of an Irish village, in which the chief character of the story was born and reared. I did not state there that this village, like the Alaskan village, took many weeks to build—about six months ago, on part of the twenty-two acres of the same Selig Zoo. After careful research and study, and after consultation with the most reliable authorities, the village site was selected and the work of remolding the scenery and of building the streets and houses was undertaken. How well and faithfully the creation of the village has resulted will appeal to every intelligent and competent judge who views the pictures. There is nothing irrevelant in any of the scenes, as will be testified to by all who have visited the rural districts of Munster and Connaught. This village alone cost a little fortune, and, while it is only a small incident in the making of "The Rosary," it will serve to illustrate that William N. Selig will not permit large expenditures to interfere with the realistic filming of his Red Seal product.

Quite a number of my friends, who read the Moving Picture World, have drawn my attention to the following paragraph in Motography, of the issue of June 19, and indignantly insist that I demand retraction: "Jas. S. McQuade of Our Village was hit by an automobile last week, we are told. He was not killed, however. We are sorry to hear it." No; No; my friends. That is from the pen of my friend Haas, dipped in the ink of his grewsome wit. I am glad I feel so well that I am able to laugh at it.

LUEDTKE PURCHASES THEATER INTEREST.

H. C. Luedtke, formerly proprietor of the Star Theater at Waukegan, Ill., has purchased the interest of Charles Staehl in the Columbia Theater, Kenosha, Wis.

DIRECTOR CHAUTARD SHAKING HANDS WITH HIMSELF.

Before leaving Europe, Director Emile Chautard, now with the World Film Corporation, had just released the first picture of a series entitled "The Adventures of William Tharp, Detective."

In this picture he has introduced his leading man shaking hands with himself. Here is shown the enlargement of a test Director Chautard had made of himself before taking the picture.

Director Chautard Shaking Hands With Himself.

We have already seen on the screen the same man playing two different parts in the same scene and talking to himself, but should any contact have to take place between the men it would then be necessary to introduce a double.

For the first time Director Chautard has succeeded in solving this difficulty and there is no doubt that he will avail himself of the effect produced as well of many other camera tricks which he knows, in one of his future pictures.

Doings at Los Angeles

THAT the growing industry is not on the decline, or is not being affected by the war is conclusively proven by the announcement this week of the intention of five of the sturdiest producing concerns to rebuild, and build, monster new studios on ground which has only lately been acquired, or is now being negotiated for. The Jesse L. Lasky Company, which makes forceful features with well-known stars, will soon start work on a big addition to their plant and studio.

Captain Wilbert Melville, general manager of the Western Lubin Company, announced this week that he had bought land adjoining the studio on Pasadena avenue on which would be built a mammoth concrete studio, with every modern convenience and equipment. The present site will be incorporated in the new lot. Everything is to be new and up to the minute, and no expense will be spared in making this one of the finest studios not only in Los Angeles, but in the United States. Captain Melville has secured the services of the man who is building the great Horsley plant down town, and who has some original ideas which he will work out in the new Lubin plant. There will be a large glass-steel studio proper, with dressing rooms on one side and scenic rooms opposite, with the property rooms and technical departments at one end and the laboratory at the other. The front will contain the executive building, offices and other spaces. The whole site is to be beautified and made permanently pleasant to the eye. All developing and laboratory work will be done on the premises.

If the above does not convince you that the films are here to stay, just "train your 42 centimeter sights on this big ship of prosperity": E. D. Horkheimer, who is here at the Balboa, while his brother H. M., is in the east, said, and also showed, that the company is spending many thousands of dollars in almost completely rebuilding and remodeling the present Long Beach plant. The studios have occupied two lots on one corner and two on another. Now the plant takes up two more lots on the third corner, and three more on the other. The main studio will be on one corner where the last three lots were bought. The two houses that were there have been moved across the street, and will be joined and fitted for the offices. Another part of the lot will be used for a big garage, for the company's dozen cars. In the rear will be a large storage building, and laboratory, dressing rooms, and spaces for various purposes. The lots cleared by the moving of the houses are being covered with a fine new stage, which will increase the length of the present one. At the rear the dressing rooms are being erected, two stories high. Part of this addition will be used for a property room and carpenter shop, with spaces for other departments. The new stage will be glass enclosed. So you see the Balboa will be here for next winter.

You know how fast a mushroom grows. Well, that is the way that the mammoth Horsley studios and laboratory has sprung up during the past few days. Last week there was not much there but a few stringers, a pile of cement sacks, and a husky army of artificers. Today Mr. Horsley entertained "Uncle Joe" Cannon, and the company of congressmen in the vast labyrinth of stages, dressing rooms, dark rooms and all the places that are to be found in one of the best and liveliest studios of 1915. The party enjoyed the Bostock arena and the studios in the morning, and in the afternoon they were taken for a trip through Universal City.

The fifth "knockout" of this series of progress announcements is that of the Western Vitagraph. The plant is to be moved from Santa Monica to either Los Angeles or some nearby locality east of the city, where the weather is not so damp and foggy. Manager W. S. Smith of the beach studios said last week that on account of the weather conditions and various other reasons, the Vitagraph was to remove inland. The present studios are far too small, and outgrown. The new place will be up to date in every respect.

Everything is lovely in the west. The electric arc lights have been wrapped in old rags and put in the attic of the glass studio. Every producer and player wears smiles and the camera man turns on without a grimace. Except for a stray fog bank, the weather has been absolutely all that could be desired, and work is now at its height, and still soaring. Since the hot weather has come, several companies have been noticed stealing away to the beach to do some "water stuff," but it is pretty safe to place a roll that they went down by the sea to count the schooners that pass across the foreground, and to swim by day and dance by night. But then they might as well have a little vacation between retakes.

At Santa Barbara, the Film Club has been reorganized with Ed Coxen as president; John Steppling, vice-president; W. H. Vaughn, secretary, and S. F. Jeurgens, treasurer. Last week a grand ball was given at the Hotel Potter, at which Lottie Pickford and Irving Cummings did "the tango in the diamond sky."

Violet MacMillan, who starred as the pretty little golden haired girl in the Oz fairy tale pictures, has joined the Universal as leading lady and is being featured in "Out of the Dark," under the direction of W. C. Dowlan, who is also playing the male leading part opposite the little lady.

Someone the other day said that they had received a letter from a friend back east who wrote "I wish I were in California now, because you westerners are having all the big doings out there; the Fair, the film makers, and now I read that the sixty beauties from the east were en route westward to visit you." It certainly is true that we are getting everything on the coast this season, and the sixty fair ones are now here and enjoying the hospitality of the frontier. The bevy of beauties arrived on the eleventh and were met at the outskirts of the county, about 70 miles out, by Universal officials, Mayor Rose and other prominent people. The party will be received at the depot by a throng of filmers, and escorted by music, will parade to the city, and later be received at a downtown hotel. The evening will be enjoyed in dances at the reception ball. The beauties are to be feted at the beach, and the exposition has already set aside a day for the Universal queens.

Willard Mack has arrived in town and is busy under the direction of Reginald Barker at the Inceville studios of the N. Y. M. P., in a story called "The Conqueror." Enid Markey, who played opposite Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," just completed, will act opposite Mr. Mack. Thomas H. Ince is now fully recovered from the automobile wreck and will be ready to personally direct Billie Burke when she arrives later in the season.

Sam De Grasse, our Mutual friend, received a warm personal letter from D. W. Griffith this week, in which the great producer compliments the work of Mr. De Grasse as the Chinese servant in the Mutual Master Picture "A Man and His Mate," from Durant's play of the same name.

Charles Eyton, manager of the Morosco Photoplays Company, has returned from a star hunting trip to the east, and although he has not announced any new ones, we know he has them stacked in the deck.

The Vitagraphers have been honored by the Venice amusement people, who have thrown open their mammoth dancing pavilion to the players one night every two weeks for the purpose of having a big jolly party. These western actor folks are doing all the fancy steps now, and you may expect to see some sort of a dancing picture pretty soon.

Because of too much laxity on the part of the gate keeper at the new Essanay studios, a lock has been put on a big new door, and no one can enter the studio where Charlie Chaplin is at work. We had to use a pass key, a "shelaleh," and a stick of dynamite to get into the sanctum sanctorum of the great pooh bah this week. Even Director Robbins at first said that positively no one was allowed in, but when he patted us on the shoulder he saw our deputy sheriff's badge, he had to give in and say that the World man should pass unharmed. The Essanay's ideas are certainly kept well secreted, and one would have to steal them in an aeroplane for the studio is on the summit of a vast mountain, the site of the old Majestic, later the Rolfe, producing headquarters at 651 Fairview avenue.

At last! The grand opening of the Selig zoo is at hand and the mystic hour when the wondrous gardens will be thrown open to the public approaches. This week the beautiful snow white gates which give one entrance to the place were christened. Miss Kathlyn Williams, our heroine of serial fame, popped a bottle of wine on the corner of one of the carved elephant's trunks.

Will M. Ritchey, scenarioist, who did the scripts for the "?" series of the Balboa-Pathe, has an assistant in the new scenario office. D. F. Whitcomb is aiding him in turning out stories for the four producing companies that are now working at the Long Beach studios. Mr. Ritchey left this week on a fortnight's vacation in San Francisco, leaving an address where he would NOT be in case someone wanted him. He needed the rest. Ruth Roland is also in the exposition city enjoying her two weeks' recreation after the completion of the big serial in which she and Henry King were featured. Mr. King is now busy as a director, working on "A Gentleman's Agreement," a moving picture within a moving picture, and quite novel.

Last Sunday night, while taking dinner at a downtown restaurant, film people were counted in an hour amounting to twenty-eight. One day while talking to Lloyd Brown, manager of Clune's Auditorium theater, film motorists amounting to fifteen passed our corner on Broadway. Still another time on Spring street we passed in three blocks ten prominent photoplayers, evidently shopping. In one of the large hotels the other day eight different producers and actors were seen, and at a theater the same night ten photoplayers were sitting enjoying the show. Most any day one can see from ten to fifty representative picture men in the Los Angeles Athletic Club. The following are members and residents of the big club: Carlyle Blackwell, Douglas Gerrard, Dell Henderson, Ford Sterling, Al. Kaufman, Donald Crisp, Mack Sennett, Charlie Chaplin, Harry Ham, Frank Elliott, Courtenay Foote, David Kirkland, Bobby Harron, and many others. This would indicate that the photoplayers are very much in evidence in Los Angeles.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, accompanied by his family, is in town to visit the producing headquarters. He will depart for the east in company with Manager Al. Kaufman, Mary Pickford, and the rest of the Famous Players as soon as the current picture is completed.

The Features Ideal Company is comfortably located in its new studio, the plant recently vacated by the Masterpiece, on Melrose avenue. Things are humming here now and everyone is busy as can be.

The Jungle Film Company, after a period of quiet, will resume production in a few days on another round of animal features at their Eastlake Park studio. Messrs. Rounan and Edwards are preparing to make a picture that will be a sure enough winner.

"Ham" comedies are getting to be funnier than ever, and Director Chance Ward has made a good one in "The Merry Moving Men," which will be released by Kalem on the 29th of this month. This studio is the only one out here which boasts of a woman studio manager, Miss Gibson having that office, and holds it efficiently, too.

Here comes a wireless from Santa Barbara. It says: "'His College Wife' is the third Beauty picture completed by Archie MacMackin. The story was written by Mr. MacMackin in collaboration with Wallace MacDonald, who is the new assistant director of this company. The Beauty is now specializing in clean, snappy comedies."

Helen Holmes, the hazardous heiress of the Kalem railroad series, is doing fine as a produceress, her latest efforts proving that she is quite capable of handling a train. In the picture which is released today, "In Danger's Path," Helen is the operator at Hobart Tower, and the part that she plays is no little thrilling one either. This is one of the last pictures directed by J. P. McGowan, who is now producing for the Lasky Company. When he went there to work the first day out he "wanted to know where the tracks were."

"The Cannon Ball" is the latest Keystone picture, and it is a knockout, according to advices received from Mack Sennet's headquarters. It simply out-Keystones any Keystone that was ever mortared together. In it a big concrete bridge is dynamited.

Still another director has taken the reins at the big Mutual plant. This time it is Jack Conway, who was featured in "Captain Macklyn," which was shipped east some time ago. He is doing "The Old High Chair," a heart-interest story.

When Universal City was built they said it was large enough, but now we notice an army of carpenters building a street of dressing rooms.

Fay Tincher, the comedy girl of Mutual fame, is "on the road"—in the Komic productions. The vivacious young woman is seen as a "knightess of the road," a common tramp riding aboard box cars and begging food by the roadside. It ought to be good.

David Horsley was chairman of the reception committee which welcomed Governor Whitman of New York this week, when the party arrived in the film capital. "Life's Mystery," the first MinA release made at the new Horsley studios, was released here this week and shown at a local house. The company is busy putting out pictures, and everything is running smoothly.

Hal Roach, who produced for the Rolin Film Co., has joined the Essanay as director and is busy making pictures at the summit studios of that company, working in addition to the Chaplin forces.

On the 29th, Inceville will entertain 350 delegates of the convention of the National Editorial Association. A unique feature of the entertainment of the scribblers will be the missionary barbecue, not so much samaritan as scenic, the eats to be served in the big mission set on the hillside at the mountain studio. The funny part is that the waiters will be dressed as monks to serve the viands. An official touch will be added to the events by the presence of Governor Johnson, Mayor Rose and Mayor-elect Sebastian.

A company of Big U players, under the direction of Oscar A. C. Lund, have come home after an interesting trip through the Yosemite Valley, San Francisco and the Mojave Desert, where they did scenes for "Just Jim," the first picture which Mr. Lund has made since coming to this city. The Kerrigan company, with Jacques Jaccard, are up at Hume, California, in the big tree forests, getting outdoor scenes. Jack is well again, but is only regaining his weight and power preparatory to a tentative trip to Honolulu and the Orient to do some big features.

At the Mutual studios there is being erected a big Mission church, the Alamo, which is to be made as realistic as possible. The company sent Director Cabanne and his camera man to San Antonio to study the old mission, taking pictures to bring back to aid the artificers in duplicating the old building.

CLARKE IRVINE.

KLEINE'S CANDLER EXHIBITIONS POPULAR.

George Kleine's custom of giving his productions their premier exhibitions at the Candler theater is proving a popular innovation with eastern exhibitors. His latest six-part film adaptation of Porter Emerson Browne's "The Spendthrift," which was presented at the Candler theater, Monday, June 7, brought many exhibitors in from neighboring states and resulted in many bookings being made by the Kleine New York offices.

"It is an ideal way to view a picture," remarked a Hartford, Conn., exhibitor who had come in to attend the Candler showing. "A bright, clean, beautiful theater, music and perfect projection teaches us what we can do with the right sort of feature in our own theaters."

WEBSTER A RECORD SALESMAN.

According to all available information a world's record in booking features was established last Tuesday, June 8, by A. M. Webster, booker for the New York branch of the V.-L.-S.-E. Mr. Webster on that date closed bookings for V.-L.-S.-E. features aggregating $3,870, and practically all of the orders were for immediate showing; none of them for exhibition later than July 5th. Previous to his present connection with The Big Four, Mr. Webster represented the General Film Company on the road, and more recently handled the booking of features in Syracuse, New York.

WORLD FILM OPENS THREE NEW OFFICES.

The World Film Corporation has opened new branch offices at Newark, N. J.; Memphis, Tenn.; and Oklahoma City. This now gives World Film a total of twenty-six offices in the United States.

Jamaica as a Producer's Field

Tom Terris, Back from Winter's Work in Tropic Isle, Found Beautiful Scenery, Hospitality and Ticks.

THE English actor, Tom Terris, who is so well known to both branches of the dramatic art by his interpretations of Dickens' characters, has been spending the winter in the Island of Jamaica and has brought back a number of multiple-reel offerings to be released in the early autumn. One of these is "The Pearl of the Antilles," written by himself from the play of his father, "The Sword of Honor." We may remark that Mr. Terris not only writes his own scripts, but directs and plays the leading man's role and then cuts his film.

Tom Terris.

He has been working very hard during the last winter in Jamaica in spite of ticks and the hot weather he encountered. But he is not lacking in enthusiasm. With Jamaica, its hospitality, its scenery, its picture possibilities, both dramatic and quaint, he is wholly delighted. Next winter he purposes to return and is having a studio and plant prepared in Kingston for the "Terris Producing Company," or as it may soon be called the "Terris Interstate Company," if a deal that has been proposed between him and another producing company is consummated. One of Rider Haggard's African stories and other subjects will be produced.

Of the quality of the scenery, the picture printed with this article will suggest more than words. But natural scenery is only a small part of the good things waiting the camera and imaginative director. The negroes, themselves, with their quaint ways, are an abundant source of good material. The strange baptismal ceremonies, held twice a year, Christmas and Easter, by the black Messiah, Thomas Bedward, when the sunlight over the top of a mountain brightens a certain holy pool, were caught by Mr. Terris from ambush behind a screen of cactus. He has also taken pictures in cabins, dwellings of wealth, on mountain and in valley, by the seashore and in the interior. He finds a never-ending richness, newness and beauty to picture.

Beautiful Scene in Jamaica.

It was often hot and now and then some of his company found it hard to keep going; but they were healthy and kept at it. The natives told him that he could not keep up his effort and that in a few weeks he would "crock" up; but he decided not to crock for them and didn't. With his party were his wife, Elaine Terriss, Alfred Hemming, Lionel Pape, Rienzi de Cordova, Rodney Hickok and Lida Hickok. They were in Jamaica from the first of February for thirteen weeks.

Coming back on the ship, the captain not only let them stage a fire on board, with his crew at fire drill, and smudge pots and burning tar paper, etc., but slowed down to get rid of vibrations and even changed the course to get a better slant of sunlight. All these things were quite extraordinary on board a big liner.

A Dog That Understands English

MOVING picture people both in and out of the trade have been very much interested during the past couple of months in watching the performances of an unusually clever dog performer that is working in the pictures. "Lady" is the canine in question and she is the property of H. S. Gatchell, of 215 West Forty-second street, New York City. "Lady's" most noteworthy work has been done for the Pathe Company in "The Exploits of Elaine," although she has also done some things well worth while in comedies produced by the Universal Company.

The dog is a thoroughbred collie and in offering her to producers Mr. Gatchell uses the introduction that she "understands and obeys every command given her in the English language." Tests to which she was submitted upon the occasion of a recent visit to the offices of the Moving Picture World proved that Mr. Gatchell's claims for his valuable pet are pretty well founded in fact.

"Lady."

Mr. Gatchell, of course, is the only person from whom "Lady" will take commands. Indeed, the stranger who attempts to even pet her without having been formally introduced takes a long chance of losing a part of his anatomy. So sure of her is her owner, however, that he very much prefers to put her into a picture scene absolutely without rehearsal. Mr. Gatchell merely stands by and tells "Lady" what the director has asked that she do—and her ladyship invariably does that very thing, in this respect surpassing the efforts of a large number of human picture actors.

When she visited the Moving Picture World offices the other day, "Lady" closed office doors, found hidden objects which had been described to her, and did other things of this nature which proved that her performances were not the mere routine "tricks" which are common to the so-called "performing" dogs. Upon command, "Lady" picked up a given piece of paper which was found out of place on the office floor and deposited it in a waste basket across the room.

Mr. Gatchell, fortunate owner of "Lady," until a few months ago was a locomotive fireman, living in Providence, R. I. "Lady" is the first canine he has ever trained and the training process, he says, has been the simple one of talking to the dog in much the same way that parents talk to their children—and, with kindly methods, insisting upon obedience.

THOMAS MacLARNIE WITH MOROSCO.

After twenty years of stage life, Thomas MacLarnie, the character actor of the stock company at the famous Burbank theater, Los Angeles, is having his first experience "acting on the dime."

"Acting on the dime," it might be explained, is slang for acting in pictures, and is derived from the fact that the actor has so much less space in which to perform than on the dramatic stage. His Chris. Ford, the uncle, in the Bosworth-Morosco production of the novel, "The Wild Olive," is another one of his clean-cut characterizations.

Chester A. Clegg, Field Manager

Leaves Universal to Take New Position at Chicago With United.

The United Film Service announces that Chester A. Clegg, former general manager of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. for Western Canada, has become field manager of exchanges for the United to cover the United States and Canada. Mr. Clegg has left Calgary, the headquarters of his former office, and will be located at Chicago, Ill.

According to the Calgary newspapers, who gave unlimited praise to Mr. Clegg's work in Canada on his departure, the New Universal exchange manager has had a career which eclipses even those miraculous stories of the rise of poor boys to fame from the pen of Horatio Alger.

Born at Frankfort, Kentucky, on July 20, 1883, Mr. Clegg stayed at home only until he was seven years of age, when he left the parental roof to fight the world for himself. St. Paul, Minn., was the scene of his first business enterprise. After many vicissitudes Mr. Clegg, while in Calgary, Alberta, signed a contract with the General Film Company to serve in the capacity of film exchange manager. This position he held down over a year, when he was appointed by George A. Magie, general manager of Western Canada, for the Universal Film Co., as manager of all the territory from Winnipeg to Victoria for that company. It is this position which Mr. Clegg leaves to become manager of exchanges for the United Film Service.

"Mr. Clegg is just the man the United has been looking for," says J. C. Graham, president of the United who recently appointed Mr. Clegg." "He is a hustler from the start to finish, and his varied experiences in the West, and his knowledge of territory made him a valuable man." Mr. Clegg can be reached at 17 N. Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Mawson Antarctic Pictures at Lyric Theater

Revival of the Experiences of Sir Douglas Mawson's Expeditionary Party Thrills Audience as Heretofore.

A FAIR audience greeted the opening of the Mawson pictures at the Lyric theater on the evening of Thursday, June 10. The usual enthusiasm exhibited wherever photographic illustrations of the mysterious polar regions are shown was not in any way lacking, and the comedy of the pictures brought out unwittingly in many ways by man and beast brought many a hearty laugh.

Dr. W. A. Hunsberger's graphic description of the trip from the time the party left Australia to the tragic end of the expedition was wrought with humor as well as pathos and added much to the enjoyment and understanding of the various scenes of the pictures.

It will be remembered by those who viewed these pictures at their first presentation in New York City that the photography is of unusual clearness and that the photographer, amid the most trying conditions, succeeded in securing scenes such as have never been photographed before. For instance, on one occasion he has performed the daring feat of swinging himself on a plank about seven feet from the prow of the "Aurora" as she plows through the ice fields, giving us as realistic an idea of the manner in which this dangerous work is performed by the sea captains who frequent these regions, as if we had actually been on the spot in person.

In view of the fact that an extensive review of the Mawson pictures appeared some little time ago in the columns of the Moving Picture World, it will be unnecessary to go into further detail of this truly marvellous realism brought back to us by what remained of the Mawson scientific research party.

WALTHALL AT ESSANAY STUDIO.

Henry Walthall, who is held by many to be the greatest photoplay actor, has arrived at the Essanay studio and begun work on one of the Essanay multiple-reel features. Edna Mayo is playing opposite him. Mr. Walthall will play both in the special features released through the V-L-S-E and in the regular Essanay program, the plays in which are released through the General Film Company. George K. Spoor signed up Mr. Walthall on a long term contract at one of the largest salaries drawn by a film star.

Mr. Walthall is well known to the photoplay public, especially as the leading character in "The Avenging Conscience" and "The Birth of a Nation." In both plays he gives truly notable performances. In "Beulah" his acting was the feature of the play.

Mr. Walthall was long under the tutelage of D. W. Griffith and has advanced steadily in artistic accomplishment and popular favor.

Rialto Theater Organist

Alfred G. Robyn, Well-Known Composer, Signs Contract with New Picture House Management.

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, managing director of the new Rialto theater, at Forty-second street and Broadway, New York City, has announced that he has placed under contract as organist for the new theater Alfred G. Robyn, the well-known composer and director.

Through his musical compositions and his direction of many symphony societies Mr. Robyn is probably the best-known organist in America. For many years he was director of the Apollo Club, Amphion Club and the Symphony Orchestra in St. Louis. He came east definitely five years ago to succeed Clarence Eddy as organist of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church in Brooklyn. This post he held for two years and is at present organist of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church in this city. As a concert organist, Mr. Robyn has been one of the features of artistic life in America. While he was in St. Louis he was credited with having dedicated more organs than any man in this country and was continually in demand for dedication exercises within 600 miles of that city. During the ten years of his directorship of the Apollo Club and the Amphion Male Chorus Mr. Robyn composed as well for Henry W. Savage the comic operas, "The Yankee Consul," "Yankee Tourist," "Princess and Beggar" and "Jacinta"; for Sam Bernard "All for the Ladies," and for Kitty Gordon and Oliver Morosco "Pretty Mrs. Smith." He also wrote the interpolated numbers for the comic opera, "Baron Trenk" for F. C. Whitney. His songs have had worldwide fame, principally "Answer" and "You," while his pianoforte compositions comprise the world-famous "Manzanilla," "Concerto in C Minor," "Quintette in G Minor," "Four Impromptus, Op. 38," "Menuetto," "Chansonette," and many others. His "Storm at Sea," composed for grand organ, is probably one of the best-known characteristic pieces in this country. Lately Mr. Robyn composed the music for the Lambs' Gambol at the Century Opera House and he is a prominent member of the Lambs' Club. He is at present also a director of his own school of music at 23 West Forty-second street.

Alfred G. Robyn.

Mr. Robyn is authority for the statement that in the new Rialto theater he will preside over the most wonderful orchestral organ that has ever been built in this country, the specifications for which are now being made under the direction of Mr. Rothapfel and himself. He has played on all the great church organs, notably the Stewart Memorial organ at Garden City and the enormous organ in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City.

MINA TO HAVE FOREIGN OFFICES.

The producers of MinA Films have plans under way for the establishment of offices in England, South America and Cuba.

Following repeated requests for the MinA output the producers made an investigation of conditions to ascertain the advisability of opening foreign offices, with the result that they expect to have new foreign quarters ready for business within the course of six weeks or two months.

The names of a number of film men, each well known in his respective territory, but which it is premature to mention, are under consideration for the management of these offices.

HAGERSTOWN'S NEW THEATER OPENED.

The Maryland & Palace Theater Company, Hagerstown, Md., recently opened its new theater, the Maryland, in that city. At the dedication ceremonies Mayor A. C. Strite and County Commissioner Henry Holzapfel spoke in praise of the city's new establishment. It cost $200,000 to build. Moving pictures and vaudeville form the program. The scale of prices are ten cents for matinees and ten and fifteen cents for evening shows.

South African Letter

BY THE time this reaches you I shall be in Kroonstad, an important town in the Orange Free State. The Theater and Film Trust is going to fight for contracts!

Recently the Trust addressed the following letter to showmen under ther control: "We are now rearranging our film circuits; and, with a view to reducing the expenses of the showmen (who have naturally suffered considerably owing to the rebellion and the war), we have decided to make an endeavor to induce all the showmen to agree to the inclusion of special features, costing over 4 pence (8 cents), in the circuit programmes, with a pro-rata increase according to the cost of such special features.

"At the present time you are aware that special features such as 'A Patriot of France' form a very heavy burden on the showmen, owing to a large proportion of the ordinary programme being absolutely wasted.

"Should all the showmen fail to agree to this amendment, then we propose putting all those who do agree on special circuits, so that we may release special features into these circuits.

"You will probably remember that at the Bioscope Convention only four people voted against this proposal; and it was afterwards ascertained that this was due to their not understanding the propostion.

"It was at that time decided by the Films Trust not to proceed with the proposal, owing to the difficulty of getting all the signatories; but, as we are now reframing our circuit, it gives us an opportunity of giving these benefits to all those desirous of taking them. We may say that the African Theaters Trust have agreed to have all their contracts amended, and that the Theater Trust's houses will be placed on circuits in which these special features are released."

To read the above it seems that nothing could be better; but at Cape Town the various bioscope proprietors voted dead against it.

Rumors have also been going around that the reason of their voting dead against the above proposals is that a new and independent film-renting concern will shortly be heard of. I am afraid it's a policy of the old "Wait and see," unless this company has control of large capital.

Evidently foreseeing that some day a new company might rise up, the African Film News of March, 1915, contained the following article which I quote in extracts.

"Competition—Is It Beneficial to the Showman?"

"The Trust is in existence two years. Order has been made out of chaos. Two strikes and a rebellion[2] have occurred; during this period the excellence of the Films Trust organization has been clearly proved.

"The proportion of shows which had to close through non receipt of programmes during this period was very small; trouble due to Railways.[3]

"'There are some independent showmen who argue that they are averse to a monopoly in the film-rentng business. The effect of competition can only be to increase the rate charged for film hire as a division of the business and an increased importation would bring about the followng wastages:

"A.—Increased cost of films in London.[5]

"B.—Wastage of films through duplication.

"C.—Increased amount of duty payable to the Government owing to increase in the footage imported.[6]

"D.—Increased running costs through duplication of organization for advising and distributing films, posters, etc.

"It is quite obvious that the fact of loading the film hiring business with these additional costs must eventually react on the showmen by bringing about an increase in the hire charges; or, failing this, one or other of the concerns would have to go out of business, when the same position would be created again, namely, that one firm would control the entire business; and it is quite obvious to any business man, that whatever losses were entailed in carryng on such a fight, would eventually have to be paid by the showmen; because the surviving concern would naturally avail itself of the opportunity to obtain reimbursement for the money lost in bringing the fight to a successful conclusion.

"The main point which interests the showman is whether it is in his own interests to continue to support the Trust and he must therefore ask himself:

"A.—Are the films supplied by the Trust the best obtainable on the market?

"B.—Would the support of the new film agency render it possible and probable that further competition would occur in his territory?

"C.—Would not the duplication of feature films by rival organizations frequently nullify the whole effect of advertising, or render it impossible to do any advance booming, for fear of the opposition bringing in another copy, and taking advantage of its competitor's advertisements?" 7

"Of course it has been mooted that the idea was to form a co-operative concern by means of which the showmen would all obtain whatever profits mght be derived from the company, but if there is one line of business in which a co-operative concern is doomed to failure before hand, it is the film renting business.[8] Every showman would grumble regarding the run he was receiving,[9] and would want to compare the price which he, as a principal of the company paid for the hire of his programmes, with the price paid by some other member,[10] with the result that there would be continued friction within the company itself, which could only bring about its final dissolution, with a result that the investing showmen would lose their money." 11

Such are the Film Trust's arguments for their case.

Against I put forward the following. They are not mine alone, but the thoughts of many others in the trade.

The arguments are those marked from number three to number ten both inclusive.

Argument 3.—Certainly a small proportion had to close through the troubles referred to; but the Trust forgets to mention those it deliberately closed down.

Argument 4.—Does not competition tend to bring about considerable improvements and to reduce to practically nil the slackness of a monopoly.

Argument 5.—Films cost the same to one buyer as to another; there is no scale for small and large buyers.

Argument 6.—The Government is the one to benefit in revenue increase to the country.

Argument 7.—Certainly in a way, but contrast Universal and Biograph's re-issues of Mary Pickford and the result to Famous Players.

Argument 8.—An utterly absurd statement; contrast the idea in United States.

Argument 9 and 10.—Run circuits in same way as Trust is now doing,* one to fifty.* If, say, fifty theaters are under control, prices in proportionate rate.

Argument 11.—Questionable, but still 90 per cent. probable.

But, as my fellow passenger in a street car said recently, "let us change the subjects."

We have had the following pictures recently:

The Devil-Fox of the North—Eclair. When the Tide Was Rising—Edison. The Ruin of Manley—American. Wanted A Wife—Keystone. Detective Craig's Coup—Eclectic. Marah, the Pythoness—Lubin. The Lure of the Geisha—101 Bison. The Boundary-Rider—Eclectic. The Keystone subject was an old one with Fred Mace and Ford Sterling, but still it was one long scream of laughter from beginning to end and didn't everybody enjoy it? It was Easter Monday but still everybody enjoyed it after a weary morning in church listening to the same subject by the same weary parson.

The Ruin of Manley was a fine subject. In Port Elizabeth there are many who take a deep interest in pigeons, and the picture besides being a beautiful one and high class in every detail appealed to them mainly on account of the beautiful setting of the pigeons around the two lovers.

The two Eclectic subjects were voted splendid, but many were incredulous of the success of the detective's methods.

The attendances at the shows are on the whole increasing. People are gradually learning to take an interest in the moving picture. The annual convention of the Sunday Schools of South Africa was held recently. Of course one of the lectures was: "The Enemies of the Child's Morals," "Books," "Moving Pictures." Nothing new was advanced as regards censorship, but in general the lecturer, who, by the way, has seen very few motion pictures, advanced the old illusion that children should not see moving pictures until they are eighteen or thereabouts. He gave his reasons for this in the following way: Children will always try and imitate what they see in moving pictures, and nearly always what they see is bad (at this, someone in the audience shouted out, liar!) He tried to enlarge on this, but nearly every one could see that though he was making a brave show he knew only ten per cent of what he was saying to be the truth.

Please note that my address, until further notice, is P. O. Box 38, Kroonstad, O. F. S., South Africa.

SYDNEY HAROLD CRAWFORD.

Conditions in Greece and Italy

Pictures Imported by Greece for a Limited Period Enter Free of Duty Under Bond for Re-exportation—Lack of Interest in American Subjects Due to Poor Selection—Films on American Characteristics and Scenes Popular in Italy.

By Consul General Alexander W. Weddell, Athens, Greece.

THE motion picture theater is to be found throughout the Athens consular district. In Athens, the metropolis and chief city, there are four modern establishments, more than a half dozen others somewhat modestly built and charging popular prices, and about 10 open-air theaters where refreshments of various kinds are served to patrons during the hot months. In the Provinces of Old and New Greece there are about 125 picture theaters, most of them poorly erected.

The total business of the country is estimated at 200,000 to 250,000 meters (656,200 to 820,200 feet) of film per month. Those most in vogue are from Italian, French, Danish, American, German, and occasionally English companies. Consignments of these films are made to local agents of the producing companies, and the agents in turn arrange for their exhibition by the various theaters, beginning with the higher class establishments and being finally sent to the Provinces. The average local theater takes a film for 2 to 5 days; in the Provinces this period is extended to a week.

Prices, Commissions and Import Duties.

The prices paid to the film companies vary widely, being based on the cost of production of the film, the character of the representation, the actors and actresses playing leading parts, etc., but are understood to range from 5 to 20 cents per meter (meter=3.28 feet). Collections are made by the local agents, who deduct their commission—said to be 15 to 20 per cent. on the net price—and who then remit at monthly intervals to their principals. Films remain under the control of the agent from four to six months, which is a sufficient time to secure their presentation at all leading places in the territory.

Films for making motion pictures entering Greece are taxed under class 235A of the tariff at 36.25 drachmas per 100 okes (about $2.50 per 100 pounds). Motion pictures which are entered for a limited time and to be re-exoprted are admitted duty free, but a bond must be given for their re-exportation. Projection machines and cameras are taxed at 5.80 drachmas per oke, or $0.40 per pound. To the foregoing charges must be added certain brokerage fees, etc., which, however, are not excessive, varying with each consignment.

Three-Part Programs—American Films.

Because of the war there has been, in general, a decline in the quality of the pictures sent into Greece. Striking exceptions to this, however, have been the various historical works sent out by Italian companies. On the other hand, the war pictures have been of absorbing interest to the public and never fail to attract large crowds.

The usual program in the theaters in this territory consists of a film depicting current events, followed by a tragedy with love or revenge as the moving element, and closing with a light comedy. The successes gained by the numerous detective films have not been maintained in the better class houses, though they are still much in demand in the cheaper theaters and in the Provinces.

Up to the present the American films shown in Greece have not been successful; this is due in part to poor judgment displayed in the selection of the films and in part to the lack of attractiveness in the films themselves. Many of the films of American production are so tinged with local color as to be unintelligible to a Greek audience. The Wild West films, which in other countries have been so successful, have failed to capture the popular taste here because of their inferiority to those exhibited in other sections of Europe.

Charms of Greece Should Be Exploited.

The making of motion pictures in Greece is as yet in its infancy. An Athens attempt has given rather poor results because of lack of capital and experience. There is still room for successful and intelligent enterprise. The unusual natural beauty of the country, its wealth of classic ruins, its richness of historical association, offer unusual opportunities to the company that would undertake to make these charms known to other peoples. The suggestion has also been made that a motion picture theater for children, in which would be shown light and innocent pictures, such as travels, instructive pictures, comic scenes, and historical events, would pay well.

Camera Needs of Florence District Filled.

By Consul F. T. F. Dumont, Florence, Italy.

The Florence consular district, which comprises one-tenth of the area and population of all Italy, offers no market for motion picture cameras. Of the 30 concerns maintaining companies of performers in Italy the 4 in this district are of limited importance and their needs in the way of cameras are fully supplied.

It is estimated that of the 2,500 motion picture theaters in Italy 230 are in the Florence consular district. Practically all the projecting machines in use in these theaters are imported from Germany and France, the price of machines ranging from $40 to $140, f. o. b. Florence. Machines bearing the Pathe (French) and Ernemann (German) mark are favored.

Opening for Projecting Machines.

Theater managers are of the opinion that the present would be a good time for American manufacturers of projecting machines to enter this market. Italy is almost entirely dependent upon other countries for such machines, and local importers are under the impression that on account of commercial readjustments the field will be open to American manufacturers if they can produce a strong, simple machine which can be delivered f. o. b. Florence (duty to be paid by purchaser) at $60 to $100. The few American machines in use are favorably regarded, but they are thought to have too many devices which are entirely unnnecessary and which tend to enhance their price and require the employment of more intelligent operators than are needed for machines of European manufacture.

Sources of Foreign Films—Prices.

Of the films in use 50 per cent. are Italian, 25 per cent. French, and 15 per cent. German. The demand for American films is confined to those illustrating supposedly typical American characteristics and scenes; these are always popular. Historical, romantic, and comic scenes and dramas of European origin are preferred to those from America. Short films are not wanted. The popular taste runs to long films, and any theater which does not conform to this taste or which attempts to educate it, is destined to failure. No effort should be made to sell films less than 50 meters (1,640 feet) in length.

Admission to theaters ranges from $0.02 to $0.50, the latter for films similar to that illustrating events in the life of Caius Julius Caesar. The prices paid by theaters for films of either national or foreign manufacture ranges from $0.11 to $0.17 per meter, depending upon the subject treated and the fame of the actors. For second-hand films, prices are 40 per cent. less.

Reading Matter Can Be Inserted in Italy.

Much of the misunderstanding between American film makers and Italian importers could be avoided if American manufacturers could be persuaded to conform to European customs and quote prices by the yard or meter instead of by the reel. Another obstacle to the use of American films is the attempt to furnish translations of reading matter; European manufacturers make a proportional reduction for the expense of making, photographing, and inserting this, which is done by the Italian buyer. They also furnish illustrated posters, similar to American theater posters, but without reading matter, free of charge.

It is suggested that one of the best methods that could be adopted for improving the trade in films is to ship the negatives, giving the importer the right to develop them in the number of positives required by the needs of the market. Second-hand films are sure of a fair market, provided prices are right and the perforations along the edges are in good condition. If American manufacturers will issue catalogues in French or Italian showing what films they have for sale, a market can be developed here on the lines indicated in this report.

"PRO PATRIA" A SENSATION.

The latest release of the Great Northern Film Company, a five-part feature entitled "Pro Patria," the exhibition rights of which for Greater New York are controlled by the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 126 West 46th street, is creating quite a sensation among exhibitors.

Nathan Hirsh, the aggressive president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, announces that he has received bookings on this splendid and interesting production from some of the foremost photoplay houses, such as the Loew Theatrical Enterprises, the Claremont theater and many others. He is elated over the results he is achieving, and particularly delighted over the great satisfaction "Pro Patria" is giving to the public.

MARGARET GIBSON IN "THE SEA GHOST."

Pretty Margaret Gibson, recent addition to the ranks of the N. Y. Motion Picture Corporation, is a devoted lover of water sports. She has spent a greater part of her young life by the sea-shore, and prolonged swims in the ocean have developed her into a splendid athletic girl. She proved to her associates what she knows about swimming when she was cast recently to play the part of Grace Keyes in "The Sea Ghost," a Broncho release of June 30th. It is a story of adventure and presents Miss Gibson as one of the two only inhabitants of a desolate island.

WALTER EDWARDS IN "THE FAILURE."

Not in many months has Walter Edwards had such an appealing part as that of Jim Blake, a prospector, in "The Failure" a strong story with an intensely human side to it which will be released on the Mutual program by the Domino-New York Motion Picture Corporation July 1. Edwards plays the entire story, excepting a few early scenes, without the aid of make-up and his facial expressions are said to have added great strength to the production.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Losing Out.

WHAT do you think of a man who pays space rates for three inches across two columns seven days a week and doesn't use it because he just takes it to carry some reading notices? He gets a couple of inches of reading matter three or four times a week, but the best he can do in the six-inch space he pays for is:

CITY OPERA HOUSE
MOVING PICTURES

It must be admitted that two days a week the advertisement runs a trifle differently and says:

CITY OPERA HOUSE
WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY
THE BLACK BOX

Of course an inch doesn't cost much in a small town, but since it is bought and paid for it should be used on the off chance that some one might see it who will overlook the reading notice the advertisement is supposed to cover. He is doing a little better now, for he has been coaxed to use titles, but even now he uses only titles and not players' names. He gets his program in plenty of time to announce it and announce it interestingly—but can you beat it?

Quinn's Twister.

James C. Quinn, of Los Angeles, has done it again. It's a shrimp pink or a crushed strawberry or something like that card printed up with a few lines that will help along Isis theater managers, though it will not be of much use to others. Still, there are quite a lot of Isis theaters, for some reason, and where there are this copy will work nicely for a throwaway card. The original is on a very heavy paper, tough and of good wear.

He said—
"Itisisisisit."
She said—
"Isitisisitis."
They both said—
"IFITISISIS—ISISITIS."

Mr. Quinn remarks that they have a Chaplin cut-out in the lobby—and who hasn't—and that he stuck a lighted cigarette in the Chaplin mouth and got a "mechanical" effect very simply. But it should be remembered that a Turkish cigarette must be used, as the domestic brands will not keep alight without aid.

Another stunt makes capital of a recent widespread report that Mr. Chaplin was dead. It is presumably taken from a local paper and shows an item in a black border giving an obituary and a postscript to the effect that the report arose from the fact that the telegraph operator forgot to add "broke" after the dead. To carry out the illusion, matter is carried in the adjoining columns and then the item is torn out. It looks as though it had been taken from some paper until the blank reverse side reveals the deception.

Advertising a change of management for the Lillie theater, it is announced that for a time the admission will be reduced to five cents that all may see the improvement. Unless the price is to be held to five cents, it would have been better to have worked the scheme with a coupon instead of a straight five cent admission. It is always easier to cut price than to return to the original figure.

Careless.

Careless is a mild word to apply to the work on a program Mr. Quinn sends in. It is the two-page bulletin of the Unique and Garryowen, Miami, Arizona. The gem is an announcement of The Master Key, in which it is promised:

> You will see some thrilling scenes in and around 'Frisco, including the sensational arrest of John Dore for the murder of the guy he threw off the roof last Sunday.

Elsewhere the energetic Mr. Lasky is unsexed and announced as "Jessie L. Lasky," and the announcement reads that he will present Robert Edeson in "Where the Trail Divides." Then, with no further preamble is added "The Answer to a Difficult Problem." It may be a description of the film or the title of another, for all that shows. The lack of preamble suggests the former and the spacing suggests the latter. As descriptive matter it is about as pulling as the usual "a great film."

Picture Theater Advertising should be out in the late summer and we hope that the Miami manager purchases a copy.

Getting to Be a Habit.

Every little while, it would seem, Fresno, Cal., wants a censorship, just to have something to talk about. A couple of years ago we helped Emil Kehrlein, Jr., smash a proposed censorship, and now he writes that with the same campaign, with trimmings, he has taken an encore. The idea was no more than an appeal to the public through a campaign of education. This is the only way. Run your houses the right way and when the pressure comes you will have the public with you and it is a pretty husky sort of politician who will go against the public will when expressed without partisanship. There has never been a real demand for censorship. It is always the agitation of a few. Get the many with you. If possible, get them beforehand. Mr. Kehrlein writes:

> We have just run the gamut of our old friend, CENSORSHIP. You will remember that you handed us some good advice several years back, when you were harassed with the usual cure-all politicians with an eye to an easy meal ticket.
> Your suggestions stood us in good stead, and we came out at the top of the heap, when the smoke of battle cleared away. In addition, we went right after them this time, putting the issue squarely up to the public. We had a petition with over 6,000 names in our favor and stirred up such a terrific din that we had to be called off. This we did appreciating that the sentiment in our favor was overwhelming.
> We ran slides after each picture asking spectators if they thought the preceding picture needed censoring. Each theater had its petition in its respective foyer. Secretary Cocks of the National Board of Censorship who happened to be in San Francisco, came down and told the agitators that they were on the wrong tack and altogether we just had the nicest little time imaginable.
>
> And, we won, hands down.
> I wonder if other exhibitors couldn't try out this petition stunt. If all of them from one end of the country to the other got together a monster petition, it might make some of these "birds of prey" wake up to the fact that the motion picture theater is a real power for or "agin," as the case may be.

That slide idea is particularly good. Try it.

Mr. Kehrlein also sends an unusual production advertising The Hypocrites. It is a folder 7½ by 14 inches. The cover carries a brown panel frame and within the panel is the frame of a hand mirror, also done in brown on the cream surface, to suggest old ivory. The panel itself is yellow overlaid with lines of gold, closely set in a waved design. Where the glass should be shown in the mirror, the surface is cut out to let through the picture of Miss Edwards as the nude "Truth," a sheet of tissue covering the picture and adding to the mirror effect. This cut forms part of an inside four-page folder on cream plate paper in brown, giving cuts of scenes and the story of the play. The front carries only the legend "Libretto of the Hypocrites." The back cover carries a small imprint. The design, Mr. Kehrlein writes, was done by his father. Mr. Kehrlein, senior, can get a job as jewelry designer if the picture business ever gets bad out his way. His work offers no suggestion of the amateur. The printing was locally done without any offset sheets, with the result that there is offsetting on all the cover pages but apart from this it is one of the most ornate offerings that a picture house has put out.

Included in the exhibit is a complete set of the press work proving that the Kehrleins have not lost their cunning. It is not so much the space they take as what they put in it that counts. They make the work tell.

Too Much.

A correspondent sends in a card with a request for an opinion. It is given out by the Park theater and Airdome, here in New York, and offers two admissions for five cents on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday evening or the Saturday or Sunday matinee. At the matinees named there is a country store for children. We like the idea of the country store even less than we do the two-for-five admission. A gambling feature is bad enough in any way without aiming it particularly at the children. Now and then the use of a rebate ticket is helpful in building business, but it should be done adroitly and the tickets should not be spread broadcast. Let the coupons be given out by the stores or invent some specific reason for the cut, do not flood the neighborhood if it is desired to hold business permanently.

Elkins In Line.

The Grand theater, Elkins, W. Va., is in line with the program publishers. They use a Hennegan colored cover and a four-page insert. The program and house information is run on the second cover page, a foreign advertisement runs on the third, but the fourth and fifth are used by the house for chat. From their initial number we take this matter, useful to others who want foreign advertising. It is good argument, and the proper one. We hope, though, that they will not run the "latest styles, jokes, etc. This has no place in a program. Give them live information about the pictures and cuts of the players.

> This, of course, will necessitate the support of the business and professional people of this city in our advertising columns. Our advertising medium is one of the best known and as the rates are fixed so as to allow for the cost of printing these programs, and no more, we believe we are really doing the advertisers a favor, providing, of course, that our patrons will patronize our advertisers, which we believe they will be glad to do, inasmuch as only concerns who are known to be absolutely reliable are allowed advertising space in our program. Therefore, if you would like to receive a beautiful and interesting program of from twelve to sixteen pages, tell your business and professional friends you would like to see their advertising in our publication.

They work a new wrinkle in running three and four line advertisements above and below the regular advertising pages, but they make a rather belated discovery in finding that "Grand Opera has reached the movies." There is quite a library of operatic subjects. One good suggestion for some theaters is found in this:

Some movie theaters are running a slide showing how late the incoming trains are, so patrons can remain as long as possible.

When the advertising comes in properly, it would be well to set body matter in a smaller point. The large type saves composition bills, but it looks amateurish.

A Real Bally-hoo.

Hubert Muller, who has a picture theater on the Bowery, Coney Island, has a real bally-hoo man to do his Charley Chaplin. He is Clive Newcombe Hartt, one of the most expert of the professional street workers. He has toured the country with various theatrical attractions and he looks more like Chaplin than the cut suggests. It is interesting to compare his work with that of the various Chaplins who are doing the same thing around town, for even in street work there are artists and others. Just as a sample, the other afternoon a small boy became more interested in a kitten ambling down the walk than in the bally-hoo. Hartt was after him in an instant and the sight of the clown and the small boy running down the walk together was a more effective crowd attracter than the straight clowning in front of the house. It brought four people into the show where straight announcing would not have pulled them. That is the difference between the professional and the amateur worker. The amateur thinks he is the whole show and acts as though he was. The professional is quick to take advantage of the slightest opportunity for creating a diversion, knowing that his own work will be more effective if backed up by some chance happening. He knows how to get his crowd and he knows that he needs as much help as he can get, a point that others should take to heart. You have to work hard to get them down at "the Island," and it takes a professional to do the trick, but even under less opposition it is well to remember that straight clowning is never as effective as adroit utilization of the happenings of the moment. Almost any light-weight can look and, to a certain extent, copy the Chaplin mannerisms, but it takes a man who knows his work to do the effective little stunts that really make for interest.

A Little Late.

Korford and Ryan, Brigham, Utah, have been both readers of and contributors to this department and yet now they write that they have just found out the value of a bulletin. Listen:

We wish to hand you herewith a couple of copies of our Bulletin, and beg to call your attention to the size. Don't you think this is some paper for a theater to get out every other day? We find it to be the best advertising medium we have ever discovered, and if we had known of it a few years ago when the picture business was in its infancy, we believe we would have been better off now financially.

It was two or three years ago that we told how Edmund Reid, down in Milledgeville, Ga., was running a one-page daily newspaper. It is more than a year since we lamented the demise of Jack Nash's Isis News, of Trinidad, Colorado. Time and again we have spoken of the value of the local news bulletin to the small town manager. If you have not yet tried it, do it today. For a town of less than five thousand, there is nothing better.

Korford and Ryan bring theirs out every other day. You may not be able to do better than a weekly at the start, but give the people something they want to read and they will read what you have to say, as well. If you load the sheet down with a lot of house puffery and some foreign advertising, you will lose money, but get out some local gossip; tell the news and you'll have a live circulation that you can sell the outside advertiser with a joyous spirit and a clean conscience. Korford and Ryan have only run up to the nineteenth issue, and yet they are running six pages, with plenty of house stuff, plenty of foreign advertising, including classified advertising, and still they have plenty of room for local news, personal gossip, chat of societies and all that goes to give value to a larger publication. When the Board of Health wanted to make a threat about the lax observance of quarantine regulations, they went to Korford and Ryan. The first report of a mass meeting appeared in The Brigham Bulletin. Mrs. Adam Larsen gets back home from a visit and next day it's in the Brigham Bulletin. And while they are reading for news, they are reading about the house and its attractions, too, not too much, but just enough. Get out a publication that is as smart as the county weekly and free from boiler plate stuff, and you'll have something you can give your patrons and sell your advertisers and please both. The Bulletin is ten by thirteen, six pages and there'll probably be an eight by the time this gets into print.

You do it, too.

Korford and Ryan work the scheme with a publisher. They not only work a local distribution, but they get copies to merchants in twelve other towns and get a circulation of 1,600, which is the record for the county.

You can, too, if you do it right and wipe advertising expense off the books.

Yelling for the Calf Rope.

A. C. Hall, of Louisburg, N. C., writes:

Well, here I go "Yelling for the calf rope." It's all about advertising and COMPETITION. We have the only show here now, but it won't be long before there will be another. We have pictures only. The other people are going to have vaudeville, so I have been told. The people here are down on vaudeville.

The pictures we have are splendid. We run two serials weekly; but for some reason the people will not go. Where do you suppose the trouble is?

The population here is about 2,000, and 50 per cent. is negro. We show to white people only.

The theater that is going to open up is going to have a prettier place than we have, but their operator has NOTHING on me. I don't mean to brag, for I know what he knows.

What do you think of the hand bill? I tried that for a while. What would you suggest?

As to the hand bills, we do not think that they carry enough punch. They carry some attractor cuts, evidently from some picture theater cut service, but there is no more argument to a general cut than there is to the stock catchlines. One bill with a type page five by eight inches carries only an inch and three-quarters for titles and merely announces one title and tells the two stars in the other. But three and three-fourths inches are given to a stock cut of a man on a galloping horse with the legend, "Not a dull moment," and then this:

IT TAKES EXCITEMENT

sometimes to stir up the blood and put your circulation into a normal condition. Nothing better for the purpose than our excellent show

"MOVIES THEATER"

Thursday, February 4th, 1915.

The two attractions were Nihilist Vengeance and The Passing of the Beast. Surely these would have given more material for business building argument than this generality. Almost an inch is given to the argument that you pay a doctor two dollars to write a prescription that the druggist charges seventy-five cents to fill and a ticket to the theater costs but ten cents and saves you that expense.

Most of the other bills run the same way. An Imp reissue of Mary Pickford carries that star's name in ten point and the uninteresting title in eighteen point. Miss Pickford's name will draw. A forgotten title will not. On the same bill there is an advertisement for The Perils of Pauline, but not a line as to what night this is to be seen. The whole town may know the night for regular showing, and yet it will still be good business to run an "Every Thursday" or whatever it may be.

Mr. Hall may have the best of the other fellow on projection, but the time to educate the public on projection is before the other house is open; not afterward. Let them go to the opening of the other house knowing that it is competent projection or otherwise that makes a subject good or bad. Don't tell about the other fellow's projection. Just talk about your own and then the people can draw their own inference and take a pride in their cleverness.

We are inclined to think that the serials failed to interest because they were not made interesting. There is nothing in any of Mr. Hall's advertising that gives the slightest information about the films. "A thrilling western picture," is not information. Neither is "Don't miss this picture, as it is something great." Tell what it is that makes a story great and interest will be roused.

Mr. Hall seems to need a house newspaper in which to conduct his campaign. Had he had one a year ago he would now be in a position to keep competition out. He should start right now to tell about what he has to show and cultivate an ability to tell things so interestingly that people want to come and not merely attend because there is no other place.

A Thousand Kiddies.

Nat Charnas, of the Orpheum, Benton Harbor, Mich., sends in a postcard of a children's matinee for America, saying that he drew more than a thousand children. But he doesn't tell how he worked the scheme. What was it? The postcard is just enough out of focus to prevent a decent cut being made.

All Text.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., has changed style. Now it uses Hennegan colored covers and all text program except for the announcement of the sister house, the Northampton. This takes care of the advertising better and at the same time gets the entire program read. At first the Third Street ran the program entirely surrounded by advertising. We got them to rule in the program so that it could be found, but they stuck to the old make up, though they ran readers on two pages. Evidently they found that readers pay better than straight announcement, for now they discard the formal program and run it all in reading. It is the better way. The change marks the second anniversary of the house. It announces that it has grown twenty-five feet in depth. It has grown in other ways and they are doing vastly better and more effective advertising. The next step should be to write about the subject rather than to give too much of the story itself. Anyhow, here are our congratulations on the anniversary and the change.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Free Criticism.

HERE is a rather long letter, but one that so carefully covers the ground that it is given in full:

I have sold and had produced several photoplays. Naturally, it spread around among my friends that I knew something about writing scenarios and suddenly I learned that people I had never met before had also been writing scenarios but were so far unsuccessful. I was at once besieged from all sides for advice and suggestions, which I gave and continue to give to the extent of my experience; but most of the writers want me to go carefully over each of their scripts and comment on or revise them to the best of my ability. Now I put in my full day working for Uncle Sam and when evening comes I want to utilize my spare time working on my own stories. Of course, it requires only a few minutes to answer questions and give advice to others, but to criticise a script in a thorough manner should take several evenings. But the main point I wish to bring out is this: I am not qualified to criticise scenarios and how can this be impressed on my friends? They know that I have sold several; in fact, they have seen them and have read the copy of the scenario and they seem to think I know "all about the business." When I explain to them that I am not capable of criticising a script, they evidently think I am "piking." Stories that I send out expecting to sell are often returned in quick order; others that I am not sure of are accepted. For that reason I don't feel like passing judgment on the script of another writer. And if I went over each script that my friends want me to, it would take all of my spare time and then some.

Another thing: If I should make any suggestions about a script, or for instance, revise or rewrite for another author, and he sends it out and gets it back from every studio to which he sends it, he then might think I was really "piking." Of course that would probably put a stop to his requests for criticism, but I think there ought to be a better way. If I should revise a story and it was accepted, the author would then, no doubt, refer all scripts to me before sending them out. "Up against it" both ways. I like to talk to other writers about the business and give them my ideas on certain things; and of course I get good ideas from them; but that doesn't take up even one evening; it can be done at times during office hours; or at lunch, etc; but to go over a whole scenario requires a lot of time. And if I go over a script for one, the others know it.

What's the answer? About the only thing I can see is to tell each one that I cannot go over a script in detail, but will be very glad to answer any questions I can or give suggestions on a particular scene or leader, etc. I certainly don't want to be mean about such a thing, but maybe I am all wrong in my idea of it, and I sincerely hope you can set me right. And there surely must be others in the same boat with me. In the event you do not care to discuss the matter in your "Department," I trust you will favor me with a personal word of advice, using the enclosed self-addressed envelope.

From the shelter of our bomb-proof we would remark that the hard part of it is that nine out of ten of those who seek or demand advice, neither wish nor deserve advice. That is an absolutely exact expression of an honest belief based on an experience of twenty years. That goes back of the photoplay business, but the same people who want to write plays are the ones who used to want to write stories or songs, and the thing they want is not advice at all. They want money and they want you to get it for them. They do not want to be told that the way to succeed is to work and through constant practice arrive at results. They want to be told "Why you write a play this way—" and be told the entire secret in ten minutes. They want short cuts in a game that has no short cuts. They want immediate results in a business that is based on experience. They want the successful author to take a script and not show them their errors, but to make it immediately salable. That is what they want, and the experienced author knows that it is what they want, and he has small sympathy with them.

We have one woman correspondent. Every little while she breaks in with a frenzied appeal for help. She simply must write stories, and who will help her? She has written a dozen of the star authors, but they only tell her to work and persevere. She doesn't want to work and persevere. She wants to cash checks. She feels that there must be someone in her home town who will lead her to this desirable result with little or no labor on her part. Naturally she is not entitled to advice. She would do nothing with it if she had it.

Every successful author has been helped to his success in one way or another. He owes it to his benefactor to pass the debt along to those who come after, but he is not, at any time, subject to sight drafts from any and all who may want some of the easy money that is supposed to be found in the picture business. He is entirely within his rights in refusing aid to some and extending it to others. He is entirely within his rights in electing his own time and place in which to give that aid. He is entirely within his right in refusing to spend time in the education of others that he needs for his own creative work.

He is wise in offering general rather than specific advice. He is wise in refusing to criticise scripts unless he is expectionally well qualified for this work. As the correspondent points out, if the criticism does not make the script salable he is blamed. Either he is accused of deliberately giving bad advice or he is set forth as a presumptuous fool. If he gives advice, and the script sells, a leech has fastened to his leg and he cannot free himself.

He is not under any obligation to give any advice to the total stranger who comes without appointment to demand information, and yet we have known women who, not only came unannounced, but who stayed for lunch or dinner and never even gave thanks for the meal. We know a young woman who has several times had to call her mother to her aid in getting rid of persistent and total strangers.

The author should give back advice in generous proportion to the advice and help he has himself received, but this is given at his option, as a courtesy, when, where and to whom he pleases. To all others he has the right to refuse any assistance beyond pointing out where information may be had, where such is obtainable.

The person who insists upon being helped is seldom worthy of such assistance and it is a waste of time to give it. The person really deserving of help seldom discovers himself. He is rather discovered to be worthy and aid is offered, even though it has not been asked.

None of the above is written from our personal point of view. We not only are willing to help, but we advertise our willingness. But even at that we have to draw the line at the man who actually asked thirty-two questions within five days and others who regularly came in three and even four times a week. We are willing to help, but we have found that the insistent advice seeker is generally the one who least profits by the advice and we do not blame authors for refusing to give their time to no good purpose.

Send to Lubin.

Some weeks ago it was announced that the Lubin company had issued a new circular of instructions for writers. It was also announced that "it will be sent any person sending a two-cent stamp." Fully a hundred have sent their stamps to this paper instead of to the Lubin campany, though nothing was written to suggest that this paper would act as distributing agent. The item may have been vague, but it is precisely this inability to grasp fact by inference that holds back many from success. There is no use in studying if the information acquired is not assimilated.

Gaumont Corrections.

Clarence J. Harris, editor for the Gaumont Company, writes:

In your department in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, I note under "Gaumont Hints," that some correspondent has reported to you that we do not use close-up scenes, large interior or large exterior sets and that we are in the market for a few two and three-reel melodramas and no comedies.

I would like to correct this information and would say that we will be pleased to consider any good stories, including comedies, and are not ready to make any special restrictions on the sets, except those of a spectacular nature.

Another point I would like to make, as to price, is that you recently said that the Gaumont Company does not pay the standard prices. All scenarios in complete technical form, fitted for the director, are paid for according to standard prices, but, as you well know yourself, a large per cent. of the submitted scenarios invariably do not contain much originality and are usually rewritten and are paid for according to the value of the ideas they contain.

The question of payment is a question of company. It would seem that the idea should bring better prices where this alone is purchased. We are sorry that Mr. Harris did not give his ideas on this point. Five or ten dollars for even a one reel idea is too little if the idea is good.

"On Her Own."

Mrs. L. Case Russell, who apparently was the real brains of a clearing house scheme, is now established for herself as a critic and revisionist. We do not like the latter phase of industry, but Mrs. Russell is certainly able to give constructive criticism and, working without the previous clap-trap, can do greater good.

Meantime her departure doesn't seem to help the clearing house scheme any.

Dr. Stockton Ill.

The Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton asks that announcement be made that he cannot give service of criticism advertised in this paper. He has been suffering from a nervous breakdown that made it impossible for him even to return scripts sent in, but he announces that his desk has now been cleared of accumulations. He hopes to be able to resume in the fall, but meantime he is being sent into the Canadian wilds to look for some forty odd pounds of flesh he has lost. Please take note.

From Within.

Lately a woman correspondent asked for aid. She wanted to know about sticking to the writing game, and it was pretty hard. She had to have one evening for the theater, another in which to keep up her stenographic speed and various other things. And because we suggested that she would find the time if she had it in her to write, she called us Aristotle and Diogenes and other hard names and said bitterly that now she knows that she must work alone. We do not believe that a writer who can find a night a week for the theater but cannot find time to write really is a writer, but if this correspondent is and eventually wins success, she will find that the discovery was more helpful to her than any other single bit of acquired information. This is something that all who would win must learn. Help, real help, invariably comes from within. Experience cannot be purchased ready made. It must be acquired through labor; mental work plus physical work. It is the sole secret of success.

But we are inclined to believe that this correspondent classes with the helpless. She doesn't want to find out; she wants to be told. She does not want the labor; she seeks only the success. Unless you sit and hold her hands she thinks she is abused and she doesn't realize that writers who have done their own work have small sympathy for those who are unwilling to pay for success with work.

If you are not willing to work, do not ask for help, for you will not receive the sort of help that is of any value. There is a certain type of writer who will offer sympathy and suggestion, but sympathy and suggestion are alike valueless. Real help always comes to those who deserve it, but real writers have small patience with the parasite.

Another Book.

The Editor Company has issued Photoplay Making, by Howard T. Dimick. Mr. Dimick's knowledge of practical photoplay writing may be gained from the first two scenes of his sample script. The first scene is preceded by a leader "Steve loves Jennie." Steve and Jennie are alone in the parlor. Steve speaks "Jennie will you be my wife." She assents, and falls into his arms. Without either time or break leader scene two shows Steve at work in the foundry. He gets ready to quit, Jennie enters and they admire the plain gold ring on her hand.

To the proposal Jennie is supposed to register "This is so sudden." So is the script.

In certain phases of dramatic construction Mr. Dimick writes soundly —and much after W. T. Price.

Ed-Au Changing.

The Ed-Au Club has changed its place of meeting to Browne's Chop House. Dues of six dollars a year have been imposed and there is now an initation fee of five dollars.

Diffidence Again.

Herman A. Blackman writes of a recent paragraph:

> Sometimes you shoot a single sentence that has more "push" in it than a 79 centimeter shell. The latest example I have noticed was in the current number of the M. P. W. It was that little three line paragraph under the caption "Diffidence" in which you mentioned a chap who COULD write good comedies if he would only THINK so. Several years ago I ran across the same idea when I threatened to fall down on a job and the boss said, "The man who thinks he can't is usually right."
>
> It's a great big double-barreled fact. From the cradle up, we have always been taught that it was a sin and a crime to be egotistical, but without a certain amount of egotism, it is utterly impossible to win any pronounced sucess in any line of high endeavor. It is just like the food we eat—too little will starve and weaken us; too much will put us in bed with a through ticket for the New Jerusalem, and just enough will make us strong and efficient. The right amount of egotism in photoplay writing will make one hold up his head and fight for his rightful place in the business; too much, will make him the laughing stock of the editors; and too little will keep him paying postage both ways forever.
>
> Now, I don't mean the kind of egotism which goes about with distended breast and says, "Look upon me and worship." The kind I mean is the kind that says, "I will NOT be beaten. I have faith in my brain, in my strength, in my gifts, that I shall win. I know that those big fellows with whom I must compete are away off yonder ahead of me, but I also know that they were one day right where I am now, dreaming, studying, struggling, fighting for success. If THEY had looked at the big fellows ahead of THEM and whimpered they would be selling corn salve today. I realize that I am still weak, uncertain and a bit afraid, but I am going to fight and fight and fight to the finish and I firmly believe that I am good enough to win." That's the kind of egotism I believe in.
> I haven't the slightest doubt that there are many who fail in photoplay who could succeed if they only had this egotism. There comes a stage of development in every writer's experience when he finds out that photoplay is no gentle snap; when he realizes that it takes training, brains and considerable genius to win out; when he learns that the successful men and women in the business are really talented and intelligent people who have devoted long and earnest study to the business. When his eyes are opened to these facts, the job looks so big that it is appalling. I KNOW, for I have looked at it with just those eyes.
> It is right at this stage that most writers bog down and quit. They simply haven't the sublime egotism to stand themselves alongside the big fellow and imagine that they have even a fighting chance. It certainly does take nerve to do it and nothing but egotism will supply the necessary nerve. It takes self-pride, self-confidence, self-faith—all of these and more to keep on when every sort of discouragement keeps hammering away to put one out of business. There are times when nothing but the natural instinct to write will bring one up out of the slough of despond to tackle the job again, but always that eternal egotism is at the bottom of each new trial and new hope.

If you knew Mr. Blackman you would be better able to appreciate the difference between determination and egotism, and it is determination and not egotism that he really advises. Too many writers suffer from an excess of egotism and write that they are doing better stuff than they see on the screen, or declare that their stuff is stolen when it is not. They are the reverse of modest, and this is as fatal as an excess of timidity, but if you feel that you cannot do a thing you are defeated before you reach the battlefield.

Eight Sheets.

"He's using eight sheets now," is the suggestion of a correspondent who sends in the newest Thomas circular, a sheet 17 by 22 inches giving an offer to let anyone have a sample step course for 48 hours for the deposit of twenty-five cents.

Things must be getting still duller out Chicago way.

Still At It.

Stealing stamps off a return manuscript envelope is like taking the pennies from a dead man's eyes, but a company in Toledo is still doing this very thing, going to the trouble of soaking off stamps in excess of two cents and letting the script limp home on that.

But why send scripts to a company in Toledo?

Anti and Ante.

"Anti means against and ante means before," writes a correspondent who says that he likes Technique of the Photoplay but dislikes to see this word misspelled. Perhaps others have made a similar error and suppose that it should be called "ante-climax" because it is a climax that comes before an anticipated climax. To be absolutely certain of our position, we passed the question along to Professor Robert Wilson Neal, author of Short Stories in the Making, who replies that he has never heard it called "ante-climax."

It is very true that an anti-climax is also an ante-climax, since it must come before the intended climax, but principally it is an anti-climax because it is against the climax in that it is so much stronger than the climax provided that the latter loses its effect.

A "climax" that merely terminates a period of action leading to a real climax is not called a climax but a "crisis," and a play properly shows a succession of crises of increasing strength, but should a crisis become so important as to form the real crux of the play; the intended climax being thereby weakened to second position, it is not a crisis but an anti-climax. The story that stops being interesting when about two-thirds through generally becomes dull because the action that follows cannot conceivably be more interesting than that which has preceded it, therefore the crisis has become an anti-climax.

What Counts.

It is not what you think about, but what your action makes the spectator think about that counts in photplay. Tell your story so clearly that the thought is fully conveyed.

It's a Shame.

A Louisville theater recently circularized its patrons with an urgent request that they see a certain release "even though it is only one reel."

Fancy a publisher urging his patrons to read O. Henry, or Poe, or de Maupassant "even though they are short stories instead of novels". Some of the gems of literature are well within five thousand words, and some of the best film stories are within a thousand feet, but patrons have been educated to value a subject according to its footage. It is time that they were given the higher education. It was not the smallness of the price alone that gave the first impetus to the photoplay. It was not only a cheap entertainment, but a novel one. It offered better acting than vaudeville at a smaller price. One could drop in for half an hour or spend an hour or so, certain of good entertainment.

Now instead of being condensed into one reel, the good story is expanded to two thousand feet or more. The action becomes diluted and is no more gripping than is the verbose fiction story. This is the day of the feature film because the latter is still a novelty, but the one-act play is always in demand with the public though at present this demand is but poorly supplied. The author in close touch with the market still offers one act plays, knowing that the day will come when there will be the same demand for these that now exists for the longer lengths.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 90.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the practical effect, or effects of poor contact between the carbon and carbon arm? Can needling of the carbon ever be traced to poor contact with the carbon arm? If it can, explain, in detail, why poor contact would cause such a trouble. To what other causes may needling be traced? What is it that causes the carbon to needle, or, rather, what happens to the carbon when it needles?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 84.

The Roll of Honor on Question 84 ought to be sweet; it is certainly short. I can gauge the knowledge on the various questions pretty closely by the number of replies that come in, and on these resistance stunts replies are scarce, and correct ones very much so.

The Roll of Honor consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York, and W. M. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

I have selected the reply of Brother Larmour as best suited for publication.

Answer to Question No. 84.

By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

How can you arrange your rheostats so that you will know instantly when one of them develops a ground, regardless of whether the rheostat be in the operating room or outside of it? Illustrate by sketch. Also tell us how you would test your rheostat for a coil or grid grounded to the frame, and how you would proceed to locate the individual grounded coil or grid.

The Answer:

Figure 1 is a diagram illustrating a method of telling when a rheostat becomes grounded, or a coil becomes grounded to the frame of a rheostat. All rheostats should be insulated from the ground as shown at B. If the rheostats are not in the operating room it will be necessary to extend one of the wires from the rheostat to the testing device, which should be placed in the operating room. The other wire is, in one case, grounded, and, in the other, connected to the other carbon arm. To tell when a rheostat becomes grounded conect a battery and buzzer from a permanent ground to the frame of the rheostat, as shown in Fig. 1. A is the point where test set is connected to frame of rheostat, and D is the testing device.

To test a rheostat for a coil or grid grounded to the frame I would place a voltmeter, galvanascope, or other testing device at C, with one side connected to the frame of the rheostat, and the other side to the opposite side of the circuit. I think that this test is more important than the first, and that a grounded coil should be zealously guarded against. To locate a grounded coil or grid I would first give the rheostat a careful examination while it was both hot and cold. The ground can generally be found, for it will heat faster than the rest of the rheostat. If, upon examination, I was unable to find the ground I would then disconnect the wire leading from the rheostat to the arc, and connect an adjustable rheostat in series with the arc and the frame of the grounded rheostat, as shown in Fig. 2. Then by slowly cutting down the resistance, the ground by its becoming excessively hot, can be easily detected. The object of the second rheostat in series with the arc is to guard against blowing the fuses if the ground happened to be so situated that it cut out part of the resistance on the rheostat tested.

In figures 3 and 4 I have shown two neat appearing, easily made devices for detecting a grounded coil or grid. They are made so that in the event of a ground they will ring a bell until the same is removed, or they are reset. In Fig. 3, A is a very thin piece of fuse wire connected to two binding posts mounted on a panel. If desired this can be enclosed. This panel is connected by suitable wires from the frame of the rheostat to the opposite side of the circuit, as shown. When a coil becomes grounded there will be a flow of current from the grounded frame of the rheostat to the other side of the circuit, blowing fuse A. This fuse holds open two metal contacts, B, by means of a small thread. When the fuse blows the thread is released and contacts D spring together, closing the bell circuit as shown. If fuse wire small enough cannot be obtained it is possible to shave down a larger size.

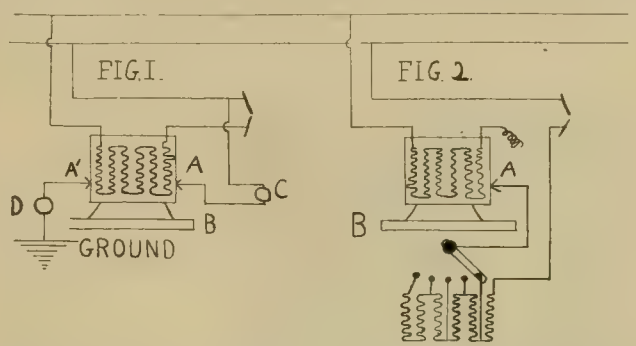

Fig. 4 appears to be complicated, but once understood it is very simple. The relay, A, can be made out of the magnet and vibrator of an old bell by putting two additional contact points on it, as shown in the sketch. In action the current will flow from the grounded frame of the rheostat to the contact on the vibrator, through the vibrator to the relay and back to the other side of the circuit. This energizes the magnet in the relay which attracts the vibrator, instantly breaking the circuit from the rheostat. But when the vibrator is attracted to the magnet it comes in contact with point C which allows a battery current from battery B to flow through the magnet locking it. Battery and alarm bell D are connected to the vibrator and contact point C in such a manner that the bell will ring as long as the relay remains locked.

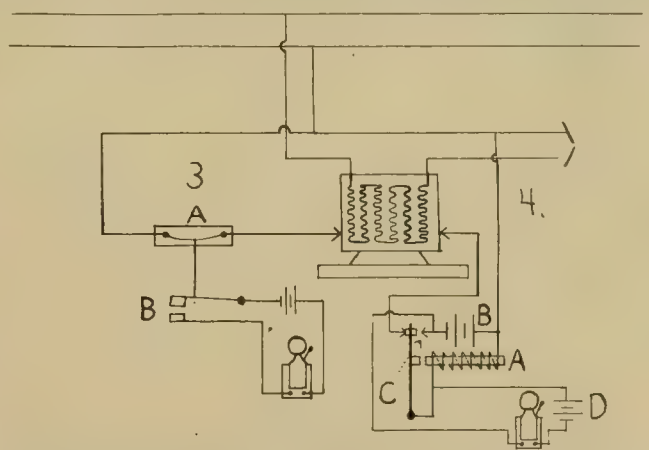

As the grounding current from the rheostat remains on for only an instant it will not harm the magnet of the relay. The entire wiring diagram is shown in the sketch. When putting in batteries B and D be careful that their current flows in the same direction through the vibrator, which acts as a common carrier.

The foregoing is quite complete, but I will add to it by saying that a grounded coil may also be located by attaching one side of a battery and bell to one binding post and the other to the frame of the rheostat and then disconnecting the coils one after the other until the bell stops ringing. The last coil contains the ground.

Try Calcimine.

C. E. Salisbury, Pembroke, Kentucky, says:

Am using a plain, white muslin screen, and my pictures are not clear. Is there any kind of paint or coating made I can apply to get a sharp picture? Am a constant reader of the department and think it is great.

If you cannot get a sharp picture on a muslin screen it is not the fault of the screen. The trouble lies somewhere else. Better be sure your lenses are perfectly clean, particularly the objective. If you will describe the condition a little more carefully perhaps I can help you.

I would suggest, however, that you proceed as follows: First stretch your muslin as tight as you can get it on a frame; next have your local painter mix you up a good, stiff glue size, and coat the screen with it thoroughly. When this is thoroughly dry apply two coats of one of the patent calcimines, such as Muralite, Alabastine, or any other patent calcimine. When the calcimine is dry project the clear light to the screen and draw a pencil line all around, one or two inches inside the light, then mix lampblack with about one-fourth boiled linseed oil and three-fourth turpentine and paint a border a foot or two wide clear around and right up to the pencil line, so that the picture will extend over on the black an inch or two all around. You will find that this will give you a much better picture, though it won't sharpen the focus any.

The Home of the Mirroroide.

Mr. J. H. Genter, Newburgh, N. Y., began the manufacture of mirroroide screens several years ago, and by hard and persistent work has succeeded in building up his business to such proportions that he now not only has screens in theatres all over the United States and Canada, but has them in use in China, Jaman, England, Australia, Panama, Cuba and Peru.

When Mr. Genter began the manufacture of mirroroide the factory occupied but little space; now it takes up the entire building shown in the illustration.

Recently the editor journeyed to Newburgh, and the pride Brother Genter felt literally "stuck out all over" as he showed me through the factory. Particularly did he swell out his manly chest when in the rear half of the top floor he initiated the editor into the mysteries of a new machine, his own invention, which is now completed and will coat material 15½ feet wide with an absolutely even coating, which is completely dried and hardened before it leaves the machine, or, in other words, in less than two minutes. Mr. Genter has reason to feel proud of this achievement; moreover we are glad to see him succeed, for success in this case has been earned by hard, persistent work, and by fair treatment of his patrons. In justice let me say that I have yet to know of a single instance where a mirroroide screen has failed to give satisfaction, by reason of any fault in the screen itself that has not promptly been made right.

J. H. Genter.

The mirroroide is fireproof, as was proven to me at the factory, and is also thoroughly waterproof. Mirroroide screens may be washed with soap and water without any injury to the surface. This is guaranteed by the manufacturers. The coating contains, Mr. Genter says, only 8 per cent aluminum, and from what I saw I believe this is approximately true. To my surprise Mr. Genter authorizes me to say that he would guarantee the mirroroide screen for use in airdomes where the screen is unprotected. It is also a fact that mirroroide can be rolled indefinitely. I have samples in my office which have been here fully two years, and they are still perfectly flexible.

In closing here is an excellent likeness of J. H. Genter, president of the J. H. Genter Company, manufacturers of the mirroroide screen.

Several Questions.

Wallace Gould, Brunswick, Maine, writes:

> We are about to open a new house having a plaster wall for a screen. How should it be finished? We do not like the semi-reflecting screens. Will have an 18-foot picture at 88 feet, projected by Powers machines, taking current through a Wagner A. C. to D. C. converter. What shutter is wanted, two or three-wing? Will have to purchase two sets of M. P. lenses. What make should we order? We have never been able to get a lens to take the place of the one which came with a Powers Five about eight years ago. The few we have tried out require too close an adjustment to keep in focus.

As to the screen matter, Friend Gould, I would recommend the following: It is an experiment, but I am sure it will work out fine. Coat the screen surface (plaster) with one of the white patent calcimines, such as Muralite or Alabastine, mixed just as heavy as your local painter can put it on, and have him follow up with a heavy pounce-pad made of gunny sacking. Have him make two or three of these pads before he starts, because he will have to work fast, and I imagine would have to change pads occasionally. As he puts the calcimine on let another man pounce it with the pad so as to get a stippling effect, the idea being to get a calcimine screen with a rough, or stippled surface. After the surface is finished, project the light, draw a pencil line around, one or two inches inside the light, and, having mixed lampblack with one-fourth boiled linseed oil and three-fourths turpentine, paint a black border all around the screen right up to the pencil mark, making this border, if possible, at least 18 inches wide, and 2 feet would be better. Outside of that finish it with ornamental molding, or in any other way you see fit, or not finish it at all.

With regard to the lenses, that is the first complaint I have of that particular kind, and I don't know quite what to make of it. I think you will find that either the Gundlach-Manhattan or the Bausch & Lomb will give very good results. However, the diameter of the lens has considerable to do with the matter, as you are going to learn, presently, through the department, you should use a three-wing shutter, and in your case I believe the shutter should be set about as close to the lens as you can get it. I regret I cannot give you more complete data just now, but before very long this whole thing will be laid before our readers completely and in great detail.

Stuck at Last.

A. K. Maluf, manager Lion Opera House, Glasgow, Kentucky, says:

> I have been at it about four and a half years, but have always managed to make good. Now, however, I have a trouble, the seat of which I am unable to locate. Have two machines, one Powers Six A and one Edison Exhibition Model. During the past few weeks frequently when a patch goes across the intermittent sprocket of the Powers machine it will catch and tear the film for a few inches, or possibly a foot. This happens on the left side of the sprocket only, and, moreover, it seems to happen most often with Pathe films. In fact, it occurs with every Pathe, and very rarely with other brands. The torn part will wrap around the sprocket and make the picture jump, and, then, of course, we much stop and remove the bit of film. I have your Handbook and have my two operators study it very carefully; also I, myself, have gone over it several times. I have made a motor drive attachment for the Edison which is entirely different from any I have seen described in the department. It has worked perfectly for the past three years, and is so simple and easy to take care of that I will try and send a description later. The Powers is also a motor-drive machine. I believe the lower film gate has worn a little, but can see no reason for the film catching as it does.

I am sorry to say, Brother Maluf, that I can only make a more or less "intelligent guess" as to the seat of your trouble. I believe, however, the difficulty can only be due to one or two things, viz.: You may have installed a new intermittent sprocket which is not a genuine Powers sprocket, the teeth of which are not of the regulation size or shape, and that the variation of the teeth happens to be of a kind which will cause a Pathe sprocket hole to bind on the teeth and when a patch comes along the edge of which is loose, it pulls on around the sprocket and tears the film. That is rather a farfetched guess, true, but it is one possibility. I do not remember, but it is possible that the Pathe people make their splices opposite from the way the other manufacturers make them. In fact, I do not recall now which way the splices are made on any of the films, but possibly the Pathe is the only film you use in which the end comes down next the sprocket instead of away from it. This possibility would account for the thing happening mostly on Pathe films, but it would presume that most of the trouble would be occasioned by factory made patches. Another possibility is hooked intermittent sprocket teeth, though that would not account for the thing occurring only on Pathe films, except taken in conjunction with the possibility of the Pathe patches being made differently.

Of course, I fully realize I should remember all about how these patches are made, but I have only got one head and sometimes I think not very much in that one, and I cannot undertake to remember everything.

Can't Be Did.

On April 17th there came a letter from New York City signed "One of the Boys," in which complaint is made that a certain theater on lower Third avenue, which formerly employed an operator at approximately $27.00 a week, is now paying $10.00 for an eleven-hour grind, seven days a week, besides which the operator has to get his show from the exchange in the morning. "One of the Boys" asks me to publish this matter.

Now let me impress you first and foremost, that I can't and won't pay any attention to letters which the writer is himself afraid to sign. If I published this and gave the name and address of the theater, first I would have to go out myself and make sure that the facts were correct, and, busy as I am, that would be a very real task; also when I published the matter I would immediately face the prospect of a large-sized row. I would not hesitate on account of the scrap, but correspondents dealing with matters of that kind must themselves furnish at least reasonable proof of the truthfulness of their statements, and, second, they must sign their names.

Good Record.

J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Maine, writes:

> I haven't an operating room like the brother in Bangor; mine is made of tin, but I will put my record beside his any time. From October, 1913, to December, 1914, I averaged one stop a month, some of which were freak stops. Three carbons broke off for one thing. Have not cracked a condenser since I came here. First stop since last December, arc went out for about a minute; trouble at the power house. Every picture has gone on the curtain in frame, and I never run a reel with a mis-frame the second time, for a mis-frame certainly stirs up my mad. Have A. C., and a number of people say the pictures are as good as those in Boston. I know better. But it is some compliment anyhow, don't you think? I put in as many as ten or twelve hours a week fixing reels just to keep up my reputation. Have kicked about it to everyone I can get at, until I am tired. Well, maybe, they'll miss me when I'm gone, but, anyhow, I can "point with pride" to my record here, and suppose maybe it will pay me some day. I will take off my chapeau to the World Film Corporation, Boston, with regard to their class A features. It is absolutely the only show that has come here, since October 14, in condition to run. I am going to send you a box of smoked herring soon.

I don't smoke, Neighbor Hanson, but maybe I can get away with smoked herring. Yes, that kind of record is going to pay some day; of that I am firmly convinced. Some times one gets discouraged trying to deliver perfect results without, seemingly, any appreciation, but I am firmly of the opinion that the man who sticks to that sort of thing will win out in the end. Take my own case for instance. Whether I deserve it or not, I am now what you can call, in a small way at least, a successful writer, but, dear boy, if I had the lead pencils, pens and ink and typewriter ribbons I wore out before I succeeded in selling a single story, or article, why I would not have to buy any for a good, long time. But I kept pegging away, and finally, all of a sudden, there were results; after that it was a cinch. I think the same thing applies in any profession, in any trade, or even with the common laborer. Keep everlastingly at it, and by and by you will get results. Your record, as set forth, certainly is a good one.

Excellent Film Cleaner.

Some time ago The William H. Rhodes Film Company, Hartford, Conn., sent in a sample of a film cleaning fluid they have had on the market for about a year, same being known as the "Magic Film Cleaning Fluid."

I sent the sample to the General Film Company, New York City, with the request that they give it a thorough trial, and, after considerable delay, have received their report as follows: "Relative to the Magic Film Cleaning Fluid, will say that we have tried the sample you left with us and find it to be entirely satisfactory."

In view of this statement, which comes directly from the New York Exchange of the General Film Company, I am prepared to recommend the Magic Film Cleaning Fluid. The General Film is very careful about matters of this kind, since, if an unsatisfactory cleaning fluid were marketed and used on their films it might cause them lots of trouble, therefore they would not make this statement unless they were positive of its correctness. Ordinarily I insist on personally viewing the testing of things of this kind, but, due to reasons already stated, I am perfectly willing to back up any statement of this nature made by the General Film people.

Apprentices.

Kentucky says:

With reference to the answer to the question on water resistance, page 1255, May 22d issue, it is correct as far as it goes, but when it says salt is an excellent medium which which to break down the high water resistance, I cannot agree. True, salt is used for this purpose, because it is cheap. It will dissolve in water, but will sink to the bottom, leaving the water at the top comparatively free. In order to secure an even density you would be obliged to make a saturated solution, and that would not have sufficient resistance. What is needed is a medium that will mix freely and evenly with the water, and remain in suspension. Try one ounce of sulphuric acid to each ten gallons of water. I have used water resistance repeatedly on 500 to 600 volts and gotten good results; have also used it in series with an ordinary adjustable rheostat with excellent results. Projection in ———————— is as good as managers will permit. (The writer requests that his name and the name of the city be withheld.—Ed.) Last Saturday night I was instructed to run the second part of a two-reel drama in seven minutes, and drag the next reel, a comedy, out to twenty-six minutes.

I would like to ask your opinion as regards the matter of "helpers." This is the first time I have ever worked where they were used, therefore have no experience, but it looks like a bad idea to work a helper without any assurance whatever that he won't himself take a job of operating, at low wages of course, as soon as he can thread up; also he looks to me like a menace in time of strike. Then, too, swell heads are a very common complaint. My own suggestion would be that helpers and apprentices should not be allowed, except that they pay the union initiation fee before they go to work—to be a sort of deposit to guarantee good behavior. If you could spare the space I think a little discussion on this point might be of benefit. When do we get the dope on your experiments? I am much interested. How many of the questions are now out in booklet form? What is the price, and are the answers with them?

To back up on your queries, the whole 150 questions are now in booklet form. See head of department for price. No, the answers are not with them, and, what is more, my brother, they won't be. The experiments are completed, and I am now dictating the final article. I still have some photographs to take, however, and I intend to have the matter put in type and the illustrations into cuts, have a lot of proofs made and send them to different parts of the country for test. I intend to ask several unions to make tests, and in event they refuse I shall have the tests made by individual operators in different sections of the country. I am sure we have the right dope, but I have got to be absolutely positive before I publish it.

As to the helper proposition, why that matter has been discussed, though not lately. I can only deal with it briefly now, because I have not the space to spare. The dangers you speak of are real, but you are confronted with two propositions: one is to raise operating to the dignity of a profession, or trade, and oblige those who propose to follow it to serve a certain given apprenticeship—not at all a visionary proposition, but one which could be accomplished if the unions would cooperate with this department—or eliminate apprentices, and by so doing eliminate the source of supply of really competent operators, and in doing that incidentally, to all intents and purposes, drag the profession down to the level of common labor, which anyone can learn in a few hours. I have not put that very clearly, I guess, but I think you all understand what I am driving at. My own solution of this problem would be taking of regular apprentice helpers into the union, the same as the printing pressmen's union takes in apprentices. It works well with the pressmen. Why not with the operators? I have not space to discuss this matter at length, as I would like to, but perhaps I may have later on.

As to the salt proposition, your criticism would be correct but for the fact that in a water rheostat supplying projection current the heat generated causes a very active circulation, and this keep the salt evenly distributed, or at least that has been my experience.

Negative Buckles.

C. J. Kaho, Trinidad, Colorado, writes:

With regard to A. C. Hall, Louisburg, N. C., issue of May 1st, he says sometimes the titles look as though the screen were moving back and forth, meaning by that it is as though the picture was being thrown on the side of a tent on a windy night. This is, I believe, caused by the negative buckling in the camera while the scene is being photographed; the probable reason for it being a loose tension spring on the camera gate. Operators would be in better position to produce the best possible results if they gave a little study to the producing end, and got at least a fairly good, general idea of how the pictures are made. If they knew more about camera work they could at least detect faults due to the camera, which they now blame upon their own machines. A jumpy picture may be due to worn claws on the camera intermittent, or to other camera faults. I have, in the course of my travels, actually seen operators shut down their machines and examine it for trouble when the only thing wrong was in the film itself, due to camera fault. Why not teach the operator photography along with the other part of the projecting trade?

There is nothing stirring in that direction, Brother Kaho. I have got all the troubles I want at present, without butting into the camera end, and anyhow I am not competent to teach that end, because I don't know very much about it myself. Friend Hall will take notice of the possible solution of his difficulty. Frankly, I do not know whether Kaho is right or wrong on this proposition, but presume he is right.

Fading In.

T. Guglielmo, Union Hill, New Jersey, says:

During the past six months most operators have adopted the idea of fading one reel of a multi-reel feature into the next, and in order to know with certainty when to cut in with the next machine they punch holes in the film near its end, so that as soon as they see these holes on the screen they know it is time to change over to the next machine. In order to accomplish this, many operators have secured punches similar to a conductor's ticket punch, with which to make the holes, and in many cases one operator won't accept the marks put in by another, but uses his own punch, so that in some films the end contains three or four different styles of punch holes, which don't look at all good on the screen. This compels the operator, who wants perfect results to amputate that part of the film, and if this be done several times considerable of the end of the last scene is lost. Here in the Pastime theater I accomplish the same thing in another way, as follows: I cut off a portion of the last scene of reel one and attach it to the beginning of reel two, keeping out one picture and placing it by the machine. I study that scene so that when it comes up at the end of the reel I will know the scene and fade in. This does away with the holes, and keeps the end of the film in as good condition as any other part.

I promptly referred this letter to leading manufacturers with the suggestion that they evolve some scheme for taking care of this proposition. Friend Guglielmo is right. In the picture we see a piece of film with two sets of these punch marks. They look bad on the screen. However, I don't quite get the idea of dividing the scene. My own suggestion would be that some perfectly legible, but unobstrusive fade-in sign be put into one corner of each scene in, say, five feet of the negative at the fade-in point. This scene could be, for instance, an opaque corner, at, say, the lower right hand corner of the picture, or any other thing which would be reasonably unobstrusive, and which operators would come to know. I would certainly recommend this suggestion to the very serious consideration of manufacturers of multi-reel productions. It would also be entirely practical to end each multi-reel release reel by slowly closing the camera shutter and begin each reel by a reversal of that process immediately following the title.

From Pensacola.

I. Rubin, operator Isis theater, Pensacola, Florida, says:

> There are a lot of those questions you are asking that are beyond my comprehension, so I just pass them along. Referring to Mr. Hayes' article concerning me in March 20th issue, I think from the way he expressed himself he was feeling exceptionally natural that evening. I think, however, I may safely say projection at the Isis is good. We have a Day and Night Screen, two motor driven Simplex machines and a Chalmers generator. The ammeter stands at about 40. We have a 90 foot throw and project a 16 foot picture, and right here I want to ask you a question. I have always understood the less voltage the higher the amperage, but that does not seem to be the case here; the more voltage the higher the amperage, and it was the same when I used a G. E. generator in Houston, Tex. I have never had any trouble with the generator; it is a very satisfactory machine. My operating room is all one could wish. The changes from one reel to the other, which Mr. Hayes spoke of, is very simple. In the picture, "Cabiria," at the ending of each reel there was a fade out, and a fade in at the beginning of each reel. After threading the machine I would run the title through and start the picture on the fade in just as the preceding reel would fade out. In this way the changes were made without detection. I believe that if all manufacturers would adopt this idea it would be a distinct improvement. It is needless to express my opinion of the department. I never miss a copy; it is in a class of its own. I believe all operators should appreciate your work, and the fact that they have a reliable authority to answer their questions and tell them right from wrong. I drink to you, Brother Richardson, king of them all.

Now look here, Neighbor Rubin, I never had a job of kinking in my life and I don't want any—I don't think much of kinks anyhow. With reference to the suggestion to manufacturers, it is a good one, and one which should be, in some form or other, included in all multiple-reel releases. You say you pass up those questions which are beyond your comprehension. You are wrong there. You should get busy studying them. Don't you know where you got the idea that the less the voltage the higher the amperage. Current works against resistance, and the higher the voltage the more current will be forced through a given resistance. Yes, there are a number who do thank me for answering their questions, but there are others who do not ask questions themselves and sneer at the department, but, at the same time, are taking advantage of the knowledge it contains. Their number, however, is steadily decreasing. I would suggest that you purchase a Handbook and study up on electrical action, etcetra.

Questionable Practice.

A. L. Chocklett, Roanoke, Virginia, sends a clipping from the "Boys' Companion," Chicago, and says:

> Thought this clipping would interest you. How about it? My own tuition was one year's good old experience under an old timer.

The clipping reads: "Become a Moving Picture Operator and make $20 to $30 weekly. Our course enables you to learn evenings at home. Tuition is low and work enjoyable. Stamp for circular. New England Motion Picture Correspondence School, Dighton, Mass." The clipping, Brother Chocklett, approaches very closely to questionable practices. Probably if I expressed my real opinion I would lay the paper liable to a damage suit. The "Boys' Companion" is, it seems to me, in pretty small business accepting advertisements of this kind. However, I feel that operators' unions themselves are partly to blame for such things, in that, except in isolated cases, they have made no effort to provide a systematic apprenticeship under union conditions, and covering a period of at least one to two years.

Free Speech.

The time for the biennial convention of the I. A. approaches, and it is right and proper that the position of this department and its editor be made clear on a certain proposition. At the Seattle Convention two years ago the I. A. passed a rule forbidding any member sending to any paper any article containing any criticism of the I. A., or any paper in which any suggestions were made as to its past, present or future policy. It also forbade any member from sending to any "unauthorized" paper anything in which any information was given which might assist non-union men to compete with I. A. members when on strike, or, in other words, contributing anything which might help operators to place a better picture on the screen.

There is no question of a doubt but that this rule was intended to operate directly against this department and its editor. Perhaps it did; if so I have not been aware of the fact, except that I do know of a few instances where unions and union workers have been prevented from communicating with the department. But if the framers of this rule could see the mass of mail the department receives, and understand the fact that, even though we never received a letter from a union or a union operator, or from an operator at all,it would make but little, if any difference to the department, because of the fact that the mail from small town manager-operators alone is sufficient to, and probably always would be sufficient to give us all the material we could possibly use.

This law is, from any possible point of view, rather foolish. Even assuming criticism and suggestion and knowledge ought to be suppressed (a point I by no manner of means concede) I would respectfully call the attention of the I. A. to the fact that it is a decidedly questionable proposition to have an organization thus openly declare its fear of criticism and admit it is opposed to receiving suggestions. If the I. A. is proposing to proceed along the lines of right and justice (as I believe it is, or I would not be boosting for it) it cannot possibly have anything to fear from criticism, and, as a matter of fact ought to welcome it, particularly from its own members, since it is through criticism and discussion we advance.

There is, however, a more serious angle to this particular question. viz: One of the things organized labor, as represented by the American Federation of Labor, has fought long and hard for is the right of free speech, which includes within its scope the right of criticism. I think that even the most ardent upholder of the rule in question would hardly be able to harmonize it with the aforesaid recognized policy of organized labor. I think also that even the most ardent upholder can hardly deny that it is a direct attempt to throttle free speech, and the free speech of its own members at that.

However, in view of the near-at-hand convention let me say that irrespective of what action it may take with regard to the repeal of the obnoxious section, this department has nothing but the most kindly feelings toward the I. A., and will continue in the future, as it has in the past, to assist in the organization of the men, and to work for what it firmly believes to be the best interest of the business as a whole, of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes of America, and of the operator.

In closing let me say that, so far as the rule in question having had any effect on the department or its editor, why it has been too slight to be worthy of serious consideration.

It is the desire of the editor, however, to co-operate with the organization, and to have the organization co-operate with this department. It is foolish to have it otherwise. You need go no further than the general office of the I. A. to discover the fact that even with this piece of legislation in force, I have used not only my own personal influence, which I may fairly say I believe is considerable, but have also used the influence of this department to further the ends of the I. A.

Now, gentlemen, suppose at the next convention you back up on what was a piece of nonsense, and let us be friends and work together for the good of all concerned.

Thank You, Mam.

P. Reg. Day, Brandon, Manitoba, writes:

> I cannot resist adding my word of praise for the way you are conducting our great department. There is no need of it, I guess, since the arguments and letters appearing therein are proof enough of what you are doing. Have you any reports on the National carbon? I am using % cored National. They burn very evenly and smoothly, and the light is as white as any I have ever seen, but they are dirty both as to waterglass and black dust, the latter in fact comes off in scales and drops on the lamphouse floor. I would suggest that those questions which will require of the average operator a lot of study and rewriting be cut down or be divided up. I know that in my case I have a hard job to get five hours out of the week to work on the questions.

With regard to the National carbon, I have many reports, most of which are practically the same as yours. I would suggest that, while it is true that dirt in the lamphouse is undesirable, still if you are getting the right light, the dirt is a minor consideration. Your letter will be referred to the National Carbon Company, with a suggestion that they look carefully into the matter. I appreciate your kind words with regard to the department. We are simply trying to do the best we can for the highest good of all concerned. The task is a difficult one because there are so many interests to serve, many of which are diametrically opposite to each other, and some of these interests take the stand that they are the paramount interests, and the only one entitled to consideration. As to the questions, why your suggestion is impractical because they are already in booklet form an dcould not well be changed.

Compensarc Hums.

R. H. Arnold, Chicago Heights, Illinois, inquires:

> Should a compensarc make a humming sound when the arc is not burning?

When the primary switch of a compensarc, inductor, or economizer is closed the primary coil becomes, in effect, a choke coil, of such power that practically no current at all passes. Still a slight current does pass, and the humming sound is to be expected. I don't myself know exactly what causes this sound, but presume it is a slight vibration set up in the core through the reversal of the current, or, more correctly, reversal of the magnetic action.

General Film Company

LIFE MYSTERIES (MinA), June 3.—Reviewed by Edward Weitzel on page 1947, issue of June 19.

THE TEAR ON THE PAGE (Biograph), June 7.—A mild little drama, made fairly entertaining by the well-considered acting of Isabel Rea, Frank Newburg and Chas. H. Mailes. Miss Rae's personality and art are particularly adapted to the character of the young wife, who finally wins her husband's love. The picture has been carefully filmed.

THE GILDED CAGE (Essanay), June 7.—The folly of marriage without love receives forceful illustration in this one-reel drama by Edward T. Lowe, Jr. A photoplay of merit, sympathetically acted by Betty Scott, Ruth Stonehouse, Bryant Washburn, Louise Crolius and John Thorn.

THE UNSPARING SWORD ("Road o' Strife" Series, No. 10) (Lubin), June 7.—In this instalment of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial, Alene is tried and found guilty of the murder of Gilbert Jerome. Robert Dane, who has sold his chemical formula for a thousand dollars in order to hire a lawyer for Alene's defense, turns the courtroom into an uproar when the judge pronounces sentence upon the innocent girl.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 45, 1915 (Selig), June 7.—Ignace Paderewski addressing a meeting of Poles at Chicago, opens this number of the pictorial. Then follows: Boy Scouts starting from New York City on a three days' hike; Los Angeles school children's spring festival; dedication of Stadium, College of City of New York; canoe race at Laselle Seminary, Auburndale, Mass.; Boston Braves hoisting champion pennant over home park; blind children at Watertown, Mass.; women judges at horseshow, Devon, Penn.; Decoration Day parade at New York City; Novel parade on Zone Day at San Francisco, and Indianapolis motor races.

MRS. JARR AND THE BEAUTY TREATMENT (The Jarr Family Series, No. 10) (Vitagraph), June 7.—A jar of face cream and two toy balloons cause a small-sized social earthquake in this film, and land the entire Jarr family and several neighbors in the police station. The mysteries of Beauty Treatment are also revealed for the edification and amusement of an audience. The old and reliable cast, under the direction of Harry Davenport, furnish one full reel of wholesome fun.

HAM AT THE FAIR (Kalem), June 8.—The fair is supposed to refer to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, but when Ham and Bud arrive at the Big Show, the only fair that interests them is one of the fair sex. And she turns out to be an artist at the gentle art of blackmail, and smilingly relieves them of their wealth. Not the funniest scraps participated in by Ham and Bud.

HE'S A BEAR (Lubin), June 8.—Pat Rooney goes back to college in this one-reel comedy, and takes a special course in zoology at the Zoo, where he impersonates a bear. He also sets a rapid pace for his fellow students, when he escapes and is chased through the streets. The agile and corkscrew-legged Mr. Rooney's antics are the cause of much innocent merriment.

SAVED BY HER HORSE (Selig), June 8.—Tom Mix and Louella Maxam, mounted squads of cowboys, Indians and soldiers, tearing along at top speed, and a trained horse as clever as he is handsome; all of these concomitants of a red-blooded western one-reeler are found in this capital drama, written by Cornelius Shea and produced by T. Mix, Esq.

UP IN THE AIR (Edison), June 9.—J. E. Hungerford uncovered a lot of new material in this one-reel comedy, which manages to send most of the characters sailing heavenward during the explosive action of the play. An amusing film. Raymond McKee, Dallas Welford, Arthur Housman and Jean Dumar carry the weight of the acting.

LOST IN THE JUNGLE, AND A CLOSE SHAVE (Essanay), June 9.—Two living cartoons by Wallace A. Carlston on the same reel, introducing "Dreamy Dud" and "Joe Boko." The subjects are handled in a very funny manner, and represent excellent examples of this new branch of the cartoonist's art.

WILLIE GOES TO SEA (Selig), June 9.—A one-reel comedy, written and produced by Colin Campbell, in which the hero develops unexpected physical qualities and knocks out an entire ship's crew, including the captain, "all for the love of a lady." An average comedy, smartly played by Wheeler Oakman, Lamar Johnstone, Norma Nichols and Harry Lonsdale.

SPADES ARE TRUMPS (Vitagraph), June 9.—The old will complication in a new and uproariously funny setting, insures this one-reel farce a warm welcome. The author, Charles Brown, hit upon a novel scheme by which the hero is prevented from losing either a fortune or the girl of his choice. Billy Quirk, Constance Talmadge and Edwina Robbins keep matters moving briskly and scatter laughs on every hand.

SWEEDIE'S FINISH (Essanay), June 10.—One of the best of the Sweedie comics, in this reel the servant lady and her number 10 shoes become enamored of a fireman. She then becomes a lady barber; next an heiress, and takes the smoke-eater on an automobile ride that smashes every speed and traffic regulation to smithereens. The Wallace Beery brand of humor is up to the old standard all through the film.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 46, 1915 (Selig), June 10.—Alumni of Columbia University and Barnard College at commencement time; English soldiers at Orleans, France, placing wreaths on statue of Joan of Arc; steamship Mackinaw afire in the Pacific Ocean; Barnard College parade; Pan-American Congress at Philadelphia; Culver cadets in special review; Southern veterans in Decoration Day parade at Richmond, Va.; Lucile fashions; diplomas given to officers of N. Y. Nat. Guard; Chinese Commercial Commission at New York; riots against aliens in London, and President Poincare at Cochin Hospital, comprise the contents of this number.

MR. BLINK OF BOHEMIA (Vitagraph), June 10.—Managers may book this film with the full assurance that they are furnishing their patrons fifteen minutes of high-grade fun. The subject is delightfully humorous, and receives expert treatment at the hands of Sidney Drew and wife. Donald MacBride also deserves praise for his performance of the Italian street singer.

THE DIVIDED LOCKET (Biograph), June 19.—Charles Perley, Augusta Anderson and Madge Kerby have been intrusted with the leading parts in this one-reel photoplay. The story is an entertaining bit of romance, but slightly related to the everyday experiences of life.

FATHER FORGOT (MinA), June 10.—A lively one-reel farce, played with spirit by Louis Fitzroy, George Ovey, Goldie Colwell and their associates. The author of the scenario has blazed no new trail through the realm of Momus, but skilful work by the director, Milton H. Fahrney, insures almost constant laughter.

THE BATTLE (Biograph), June 11.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1273, issue of May 22.

THE WEALTH OF THE POOR (Essanay), June 11.—This one-reel drama is a picturization of "Which Shall It Be?" the well-known poem about the poor man who refuses to give up one of his seven children. The idea has been cleverly adapted to the screen. G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton being cast for the parents of the children.

THE CORNET (Lubin), June 11.—The opening of this one-reel drama is done with Gorky-like realism. The reconciliation, brought about by the little child and the bouquet of flowers, is a pretty touch; but George W. Terwilliger, who wrote the scenario, threw away an opportunity for a powerful bit of dramatic writing on the crime of selfishness. Arthur Johnson, Lottie Briscoe and little Miss Dorothy De Wolf give the author's work its full value.

FAT, FAIR AND SAUCY (Vitagraph), June 11.—The ripple of merriment which starts with the beginning of this clever farce, expands into a wave of laughter when Hughie Mack sails on to the scene disguised as a George Munroe type of female loveliness. Capable impersonations are given by Nicholas Dunaew and Charles Eldridge, but Hughie is the biggest thing in the picture, from every point of view.

LIFE'S CHANGING TIDE (Biograph), June 12.—A one-reel romance of the seashore, played by Chas. H. Mailes, Frank Newburg, Isabel Rea and Violet Reid. The reel is of average merit, dramatically, and the scenes along the coast strikingly picturesque.

McQUADE OF THE TRAFFIC SQUAD (Edison), June 12.—Sensation plays an important part in this one-reel drama, written and produced by Eugene Nowland. One or two of the incidents will not stand close scrutiny, but the play "do move," and the entire film is comprised of drama, as the word is understood by playwrights of the old school. Pat O'Malley's acting of the bicycle "cop" is a credit to the force, and the rest of the cast is excellent.

THE PAY TRAIN (Episode No. 31 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), June 12.—Helen again demonstrates her quickness of mind in a hazardous situation, during the action of this one-reel drama. She is not called upon to risk her neck in the usual reckless manner, but there is no lack of excitement in the film, and life on the rail is reproduced by J. P. McGowan with expert effect.

NEARLY A PRIZE FIGHTER (Lubin), June 12.—A comedy prize fight is the big feature of this Billie Reeves one-reeler. The film is filled with Billie's familiar comedy business, and is a worthy successor to the rest of the series.

THE JOURNEY'S END (Jungle-Zoo Series) (Selig), June 12.—There is a touch of mental telepathy, and more than a suggestion of poetry, in this one-reel drama, with its appealing love story. The production is artistic, the acting of Harry De Vere and Vivian Reed being equally meritorious. Wallace C. Clifton wrote the scenario.

HER HUSBAND'S HONOR (Kalem), June 7.—The unsuspected romance which may lurk in the life of a customs inspector is brought to light in this two-reel drama. The play contains a refreshing amount of new material, a nicely blended love interest and several well wrought dramatic moments. Henry Pemberton, Elsie McLeod, Thomas McEvoy and the other members of the cast take excellent care of their part of the filming.

THE WEB OF CRIME (Selig), June 7.—This is a well spun drama of "underworld" life. The story told in the two reels has a novel environment, the scenes being laid on the seashore, and near a fishing village in some indefinite part of the United States. Picturesque effects are plentiful in the photography, and Miss Jackie Saunders is human and appealing as the young girl who finally escapes from the criminal influences that have always surrounded her.

MAN AND HIS MASTER (Biograph), June 8.—The struggle between capital and labor is the theme of this two-reel drama. The story it tells—and tells with force and laudable restraint—contains a lesson for us all, and a pretty love story for the romantically inclined. Aside from a rather ineffectual mob, the production is praiseworthy. Jack Drumeir makes the mill-owner a life-like portrait of a strong-willed, grasping business man. Acting quite as commendable is displayed by Louise Vale, Franklin Ritchie, Victor Rottman and Mary Malatesta.

THE ROMANCE OF AN AMERICAN DUCHESS (Essanay), June 8.—Contrary to most matches of the kind, this American girl and her titled husband are left at the finish of this two-reel drama to "live happily ever afterward." But first the heiress from Chicago goes through an interesting series of heartaches and emotional scenes. The action shifts to France, in the second reel, the atmosphere of that country being simulated with a fair degree of accuracy. Ruth Stonehouse is a worthy representative of the American heiress, and Richard C. Travers, Estelle Scott and Sydney Ainsworth are an excellent trio of titled foreigners.

LOVE, SNOW AND ICE (Vitagraph), June 8.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1787, issue of June 12.

THE MONEY LEECHES (Kalem), June 9.—A bank president, who is also the secret head of a band of loan sharks, and the struggle of a bookkeeper in the bank to escape from the clutches of the sharks, is the unusual complication in this two-reel drama. The unfolding of the story furnishes continual excitement, and a warm glow of satisfaction, at the climax. Marin Sais again appears as a quick-witted lady detective, and Arthur Shirley, W. H. West and Thomas Lingham are seen in well-acted roles.

TAP! TAP! TAP! (Lubin), June 9.—This dramatic narrative, by Marc Edmund Jones, is quite out of the beaten track. It belongs to the symbolic, rather than to the realistic school of fiction, and points its moral by the aid of a guilty conscience working upon the imagination of a dishonest man. It is a powerful psychologic study; this fact excuses the hard strain which the author puts on "the long arm of coincidence." L. C. Shumway heads an adequate cast.

COURAGE AND THE MAN (Lubin), June 10.—There is no lack of drama in this three-reel photoplay by Shannon Fife. The villain keeps the excitement at concert pitch, has a rough-and-tumble fight and a revolver duel with the hero, which is carried out with impressive earnestness and much originality of detail. The producing is in Edgar Jones' best manner. He is assisted in the acting by Arthur Mathews, Louis Mortelle and Justina Huff.

PALS IN BLUE (Selig), June 10.—Tom Mix has done himself proud in this three-reel drama of the West. It has all that gentleman's vigor of action, and piles one thrill upon another. Daredevil riding by bands of U. S. troopers and Indians, a realistic attack upon a stage station, and a gallant rescure are included. But the biggest thrill of all is when Tom is thrown from his horse and dragged by the stirrup, until the madly galloping animal trips and falls. No! Tom isn't killed. He wrote the drama and arranged an entirely different ending for himself.

COHEN'S LUCK (Edison), June 11.—This four-reel adaptation of a play by Lee Arthur is of uneven merit. Many of the scenes are remarkably truthful pictures of the life they are intended to represent, but some of the comedy relief is out of place in anything but broad farce. The serious element of the drama commands respect and gains greatly by the convincing acting of Viola Dana. William Wadsworth's characterization of the title role is skilfully conceived, but is seen to the best advantage in its humorous phases.

THE HAUNTING FEAR (Kalem), June 11.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1438, issue of May 29.

THE GREATER COURAGE (Essanay), June 12.—The theme of this three-reel drama is an excellent one; but some of the incidents will not stand the test of even superficial analysis. When George Duncan is murdered, he is facing the man who fired the shot, and his back is to the window from which, it is claimed, the bullet came. The nature of the wound proves the man outside the window is innocent. Another thing: judges, even in New Jersey, are not permitted to try, and sentence, their own sons. Aside from these minor defects, the production is praiseworthy. Edna Mayo, Bryant Washburn, John Lorenze, Thomas Commerford and Sydney Ainsworth form a strong cast.

FOUR GRAINS OF RICE (Vitagraph), June 12.—The scenes of this two-reel drama are laid in Chinatown, New York. A. B. Himes, the author of the photoplay, has devised an exciting plot, and Theodore Marston has prepared it for the screen with the best of results. The Oriental atmosphere is skilfully reproduced. George Cooper, James Morrison, J. Herbert Frank, Dorothy Kelly and Lillian Burns are prominent and deserving members of the cast.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THOSE BITTER SWEETS (Keystone), June 7.—Rivalry over a fickle girl is the theme of this low comedy number. The big fellow gets her, but his rival wins her back again. The beach scenes are decidedly breezy, particularly as to the abbreviated women's bathing suits. This is amusing, but goes to extremes in certain respects.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 23, 1915, June 10.—Some exceptionally interesting items appear in this number of the Mutual Weekly, among which are the launching of the U. S. destroyer "Jacob Jones," the Middlesex Hussars leaving London for the front. Spain swearing in recruits, street scenes in Berlin, and Japanese allies sight-seeing in London.

THE TEN O'CLOCK BOAT (Reliance), June 11.—The story of this film has not been constructed in a very solid fashion. It is not altogether convincing. It is the story of how a mother, once employed in the shoving of counterfeit money, tries to rear her daughter apart from any knowledgt of the disgrace of her parents. An accomplice of the father, who died in prison, enters the scene, and the mother, driven to her old life, is arrested by a detective who proves to be the sweetheart of her daughter. An explosion on the ten o'clock boat, which the mother is supposed to have been on, serves as an excuse for the mother to drop out of the life of her daughter, thereby saving her the sorrow of learning the real history of her parents.

UNWINDING IT (Komic), June 13.—A Fay Tincher comedy that is unusually funny. The situation hinges around the love story of a shop girl (Fay Tincher), a misunderstanding, and the misplacing of a ten dollar bill. This is a comedy that would tickle any audience.

THE OLD BATCH (Reliance), June 14.—A miserly uncle, who runs the general store, consents reluctantly to take care of his orphaned niece and nephew. The children locate his gold and later save both the money and their uncle's life when a burglar comes. This little story is not very new in plot, but is pleasingly developed; the characters are appealing.

THE MOLLYCODDLE (Beauty), June 15.—An interesting comedy in which a young man wins the right to marry the girl he loves in a novel manner. He proves his worth by going into the woods and living there in a bathing suit, eating nothing but what he catches with his bare hands, and coming forth at the end of the alloted time fully dressed.

PIRATES BOLD (Majestic), June 15.—A juvenile number of about average merit, in which a boy and girl play pirates. They appoint two little colored boys as their faithful followers and run away with two other children. The best scenes are where they almost sink in a leaky boat, but are saved by a rescue launch. This is a very fair light subject.

HER MUSICAL COOK (American), June 16.—A fairly amusing comedy in which the cook's propensity for playing and singing works all kinds of mischief indirectly. The love story interwoven, and the various methods resorted to of ameliorating a situation and smoothing out misunderstandings make for good entertainment.

THE HOUSEMAID (Reliance), June 16.—The father's young bride objects because the son pays attention to the maid. The latter is discharged and the son leaves home. Later the maid, now employed in a restaurant, saves the wife from scandal. Happiness results on all sides. This is well-pictured and cleverly handled, the plot being much better than the average one of this type. Margaret Loveridge is appealing as the maid; others in the cast are Wilbur Higby, Mae Goston and Frank Bennet LITTLE HERMAN (Falstaff), June 18.—A half reel of animated drawings, picturing the adventures of Little Herman, the mustacheless magician. This is amusing and the drawings are good.

EBENEZER EXPLAINS (Falstaff), June 18.—On same reel with above. Riley Chamberlain appears as a country justice of the peace who has a big time in the city and claims a visiting actress followed him home. Not much of a plot, but an amusing characterization.

IN THE VALLEY (Thanhouser), June 18.—Lorraine Huling and Boyd Marshall are featured in this number. The girl goes to the city, has a dangerous taste of social life, and returns to her lover. The plot is very conventional, but attractively worked out; the characterizations are pleasing.

A DEAL IN DIAMONDS (Beauty) June 22.—A boarding house love affair, in which the hero borrows $10 on a brooch worth fifteen cents. Later his rival loses the brooch and he exacts further payment of $50 for it. This is supposed to pass as a joke, but it is hard to overlook the had moral. Too bad, as the cast and development are unusually pleasing.

ONE WOMAN'S WAY (American), June 23.—The story of a young wife who risks compromising her name to win money to restore her husband's eyesight. She jumps into a fountain at a social affair and gets $500 from her designing employer, whose later advances she scorns. This has no particular depth of feeling, but makes a novel plot of its kind. Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich and others appear.

THE STOLEN ANTHURIUM (Falstaff), June 25.—A pretty, homelike little story, in which a bachelor and maiden lady live on adjoining properties. The garden scenes are very attractive. Some boys steal her plant and throw it into the bachelor's window; she thinks he has stolen it. But the boys confess and happiness results. A quiet sort of story, well photographed and attractive in its way.

WHEN THE HOUSE IS DIVIDED (Royal), June 26.—A wealthy man stipulates in his will that the heirs must all live together in his house for a year. The picture opens with them all quarrelling. The acting is overdone and, while the main idea is amusing, the handling does not bring out a great deal of real humor. A fair subject.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

HER SHATTERED IDOL (Mutual Masterpicture—Majestic), June 10.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1946, issue of June 19.

THE BURNED HAND (Majestic), June 13.—A two-reel production in which Miriam Cooper and William Hinckley, W. E. Lowry and Cora Drew constitute the cast. The picture is not without its faults, which are chiefly in the construction of the story. There are a few forced situations apparent which mar the convincing quality. The story is based on the fidelity of three college chums.

HIS OBLIGATION (American), June 14.—This is a re-hash of the old theme of man's irresponsible attitude toward woman. It has been done passably well. Many scenes of the production, which is in two reels, are exceedingly artistic, and Winnifred Greenwood adds not a little to the enjoyment of the picture.

THE COUNTRY GIRL (Thanhouser), June 15.—A two-reel screen version of the famous old play by David Garrick. Peggy's uncle decides to marry his ward and carries her off to London for that purpose. There she meets young Bellville and learns to love him. The uncle disguises her in boy's clothes, but love finds a way to evade his scheme. Justus D. Barnes is pleasing as the uncle and Florence LaBadie and Harry Benham play the lovers acceptably. The plot is a good example of the old-style romantic comedy, and some pretty orchard scenes are shown in the first reel. The costuming and other properties of the period have been carefully looked after.

PEGGY LYNN BURGLAR (American), July 21. This is an unusually interesting burglar story of two reels, with Vivian Rich as the star. The production is wrought with a great deal of human interest. The idea is not altogether new, but it has been presented with an eye to the artistic, and with intelligence. The role of Peggy Lynn is especially becoming to Vivian Rich. Chosen to rob a home, the owner of which is supposed to have gone to the seashore to rest, she is thrust by force of circumstances into the position of nurse for the young proprietor. The story of course merges into a love tale which is most interesting.

THE SHADOWGRAPH MESSAGE (Broncho), June 23.—A two-reel offering, enacted by a cast including Walter Edwards, Margaret Thompson, Howard Hickman and Arthur Maude. The story is built up for the purpose of showing how a deaf mute signals help by use of a shadowgraph machine when the house is being pillaged by an ex-convict. The scenes are all well photographed and, though the plot development is conventional, it contains much exciting action and holds the interest closely throughout. The suspense in the latter scenes is very good.

HEARTS AND SWORDS (Domino), June 24. A two-reel Mexican revolution story, with Louise Glaum and George Fischer in the leads. The girl's brother is wounded while acting as a spy in the hostile country. She dons his clothing and carries the dispatches forward, is captured and condemned to death. Her lover, a lieutenant with the enemy's forces, substitutes himself; afterward both are saved. This is full of action and carries the interest, though some of the situations are none too convincing. The substitution was not particularly well done. It makes a typical offering of the kind and is about of average strength.

THE FLOATING DEATH (Kaybee), June 25.—A two-reel story, full of powerfully dramatic scenes, with Richard Staunton and Enid Markey in the cast. The story concerns a ship owner and a crooked inspector who allow an unsafe vessel to take out an excursion party. Fire develops in the hold and there are tragic scenes when the vessel goes down. Later fate wreaks an equally tragic revenge upon those responsible. These scenes would be almost unduly sensational were it not for the fact that they convey a needed lesson in such matters; the observer gets a graphic picture of the terrible results of carelessness and crookedness in high places. A strong production of its type.

North American Film Corporation.

THE FOX AND THE PIG (American), June 14. Chapter No. 7 of "The Diamond from the Sky." In this two-reel instalment Arthur makes good his escape by changing identity with a man killed during a fox hunt. To carry out this novel situation Esther and Hagar pretend the man they bury is Arthur, though they know the truth. Later Blair and Vivian quarrel and the latter returns to Virginia with Mrs. Randolph. A negro boy, bent on robbing the owl's nest, gains possession of the diamond. This continues the interest very well.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 24), Released Week of June 7.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1948, issue of June 19.

WHO PAYS? (Balboa), Week June 7.—Under the title of "For the Commonwealth," the ninth drama in the "Who Pays?" series looks at us from the screen with the fearful debt of sin again presented with force. This time the story mixes with politicians and gambling dives, and the young woman of the picture is persuaded to play a dishonorable role, living to bitterly regret it, and to look on the sorrow and misunderstanding caused by her deed, unable to rectify the mistake without untold sacrifice and sorrow for herself.

THE HEART THAT KNEW, June.—This is a three-reel production from the Paris studios of the Pathe Freres. It is a fairly interesting production and treats of the story of a gypsy. The scenes of the picture take place principally among a modernized and wealthy set of gypsies. The photography is good, and in its finished state the picture will doubtless please.

WOMAN AND WAR, June.—A three-part production worthy of considerable praise. Perhaps especially for the fine photographic effects arrived at during the course of the picture. A fine cast of foreign players have handled as well as possible a story in which the theme as presented can scarcely be said to have solved the big problem suggested in the title.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

WHIFFLE'S BUSTED ALIBI, Week June 14.—An amusing farce comedy in which Whiffles (M. Prince) plays hair-dresser to a fascinating lady. An unexpected meeting and the discovery that the lady is a friend of his wife's leads to unpleasant complications for Whiffles, and amusement for the audience. On the same reel with "Intimate Study of Birds."

INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS, Week June 14. This series of glimpses of birds and their habits consists of the home life of the linnet, the chaffinch, the song sparrow, the bunting and other birds. An intensely interesting study.

United Film Service.

HORSESHOE LUCK (United), June 20. This comedy was made at the Gaumont studios, and is fairly amusing. It has rather too much horse play in its makeup, but being farce comedy, of course a good deal of this is allowable. Heinie starts a restaurant with a gold horseshoe hung around his neck for luck. This horseshoe transferred to various places and positions about the restaurant fails to bring the proverbial good luck, and so Heinie has a sorry time of it.

WHEN THE CALL CAME (Ideal), June 21.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1788, issue of June 12.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 170 (Universal), June 9. This number contains a motorcycle hill-climbing contest, pictures of visiting Chinese merchants, zoological specimens from South America, Universal beauties, war scenes on the front and drawings by Hy Mayer.

MISMATED (Imp), June 21.—A little department store comedy with King Baggot and Jane Gail in the leading roles. He is a shoe clerk and she pretends to be a customer, losing one of her shoes as a result; then she wears another which does not fit. Just a pretty little comedy with some good photography and a few smiles in it.

A PEACH AND A PAIR (Nestor), June 22.—A speedy little comedy in the Nestor's best style. Eddie and Lee are rivals for Victoria's hand; she promises interesting news to the one who reaches her home in a neighboring city first. The news is that she is already married. This is a brisk and laughable number.

A MOUNTAIN MELODY (Rex), June 22.—A pretty mountain story by Maude Thomas, featuring Pauline Bush, Wm. Clifford and Ray Gallegher. The plot is simple but effective, depicting rivalry between a country youth and a city chap for a girl. Matt tries to shoot his rival and for a time thinks he has done so, but later is overjoyed to find him well. A good out-door number, well photographed.

A DISMANTLED BEAUTY (L-KO), June 23.—A low comedy number featuring Harry Gribbon, Gene Rogers and others. A park flirtation and a diamond necklace lead to a lot of trouble later. This has plenty of action, but is only fair in plot.

THE TINKER OF STUBBENVILLE (Big U), June 24.—Murdock MacQuarrie is featured in this number, written by Calder Johnstone. He appears as a tinker, one of the appealing homely types for which he is noted. The tinker brings about the reformation of a drunkard in an entertaining way. The number is one that contains a strong touch of heart interest.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Powers), June 24.—This third number of the series is entitled "An Eighteen Karat Mystery." It concerns a diamond necklace coveted by Lady Baffles; Detective Duck outwits her by substituting a string of eighteen carrots in its place. This low comedy contains a lot of laughable nonsense.

WHEN SHULTZ LED THE ORCHESTRA (Joker), June 26.—Max appears in this as a violinist and Gale Henry as his wife. She attends a matinee performance, during which Max, as orchestra leader, flirts with the chorus. The wife raises a rough house. A typical offering with some laughter in it, though not overly strong.

LEARNING TO BE A FATHER (Powers), June 26.—Featuring Charles Manley as an old salt who hates womankind. His two mates are not so disposed, one of them being married and the other engaged. The adoption of a baby changes the captain's heart and he himself tries matrimony. The plot is slight, but the number enjoyable; it will probably make its principal appeal to women observers.

THE BROKEN COIN (Universal Special Feature), First Three Episode Released Week June 21, 28, July 4. Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1946, issue of June 19.

CIRCUS MARY (Victor), June 21.—An exceptionally good story of the circus by Wm. A. Lathrop, in three reels. Mary Fuller doubles in the part of mother and daughter; Charles Ogle, Etienne Girardot and Matt Moore are also in the cast. The circus atmosphere is very good, particularly the incidents taking place in small towns, where the shell game and hangers on have created trouble from time immemorial. The murder and subsequent happenings hold the interest. The girl's escape by walking a tight rope made a pleasing incident. The story rounds up well and in the end the circus girl finds her father, now governor of his state.

FOR THE HONOR OF A WOMAN (Gold Seal), June 22.—No. 4 of the "Under the Crescent" Series. This continues the adventures of Olga and her fellow-prisoners in the hands of Prince Tousson. The desert scenes are made wonderfully real, even to the sand storm, during which Zohra loses her child. Later scenes occur in the desert palace in which the prince continues his efforts to win Olga. The American prisoner leads another break for liberty at the close of the second reel. This is a strong number pictorially.

A BOOB'S ROMANCE (Laemmle), June 23.—In this two-reel comedy number Robert Leonard again appears in his familiar character of the country boob who finally becomes a real city "gent." Ella Hall plays the part of the girl. The scenes in the grocery and at the home talent show are full of humor and will be enjoyed wherever shown. The humor is of a quiet, unforced kind and the number, as a whole, is very pleasing.

LARRY O'NEIL GENTLEMAN (Imp), June 24.—A two-reel story, written by Wm. A. Lathrop. The idea is a pleasing one and the production holds the interest. A millionaire, who insists that money and clothes have a lot to do with making a gentleman, experiments with a good-looking young ironworker. He dresses him in fashion and introduces him in society. The young ironworker makes good and wins an heiress in addition; the latter remains true after his confessed deception. Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau play the lovers. An entertaining number.

THE TEST OF A MAN (Bison), June 26.—A two-reel number, by Henry McRae, with Wellington Playter, Marie Walcamp, Sherman Bainbridge and others in the cast. The story is a string of incidents, many of them of a stirring nature. The hero is employed by the girl's father to superintend the building of a railroad. He is forced to combat the efforts of Price, the villain, to blow up the powder supply and impede the work in other ways. In spite of the desultory character of the plot, it contains some situations that hold the interest firmly toward the close. The photography is very good throughout.

Dorothy Farnum

THIS beautiful girl is playing a part in a forthcoming World Film offering, entitled "The Cub," based upon Thompson Buchanan's stage play of the same name. Martha Hedman, John Hines, Bert Starkey and Robert Cummings are also in the cast—a combination of acting talent of great excellence.

Dorothy Farnum.

Dorothy Farnum's loveliness had a romantic experience before finding its way into pictures, the inevitable fate today of so much that is fair and beautiful in femininity. One day Howard Chandler Christy, the renowned artist, was treating himself to a picture show when, ever on the alert for new models, he saw Miss Farnum in the picture; and, after some negotiations, he asked her to give him a sitting.

The young lady willingly did so, and Mr. Christy painted a picture of her, of which the annexed photograph is a reproduction.

Miss Farnum is a graceful and accomplished girl of some stage experience, which will manifest itself in the picture of "The Cub." She is essentially a type much in favor with picture audiences and under the skillful direction of Maurice Tourneur may be expected to develop much screen charm and ability.

RAMO PRODUCING.

Ramo Films, Inc., have just completed their studios in Flushing, L. I., where they are able to accommodate four sets at a time, under artificial light (of which they have abundance) on their floor space of 60 by 140 feet and fully equipped with plenty of scenery, drops, etc., and dressing rooms sufficient to accommodate one hundred performers.

The Ramo Company is producing the Regent brand for the United program, besides preparing extensively for large productions on another program.

Buchanan Gets Associated

WE PUBLISH herewith a good likeness of our friend, C. E. Buchanan, who is known by everybody as "Buck." Mr. Buchanan is a resident of Atlanta, Ga., having been "borned and raised" there, and it will only take you about one minute to find out such to be the case, as he is a great booster for that city. He really does admit that New York is larger than Atlanta, but says that Atlanta is the next largest city in the United States, and, furthermore, what has made Atlanta occupy this position on the map is that famous "Atlanta spirit."

C. E. Buchanan.

Mr. Buchanan was in the office last week paying his regular quarterly visit and told us that he had just secured the franchise for the Associated Film Service in his territory, which is composed of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee and Mississippi, and will commence releasing about July 15. This service is to be composed of a daily service of one and two-reel subjects, serials, and weeklies, also a big five-reel feature about twice a month. This company is composed of eight of the leading manufacturers, who have banded themselves together, doing away with the middleman's profit and going to give the exhibitors the benefit of this.

Mr. Buchanan has been in the exchange business for a number of years and has built for himself the reputation of being absolutely fair and square with everybody. When we consider that he knows practically every exhibitor in his territory, we can readily see the good wisdom the Associated Film Manufacturers displayed in securing him for the place.

NOTHING AT ALL THE MATTER WITH CHAPLIN.

The new series of Essanay Chaplin comedies is now ready and will be released regularly every three weeks, beginning with "Work," a two-reel comedy, on June 21. The Chaplin comedies were held up temporarily in order to permit Mr. Chaplin to get a good start so that the releases could be announced enough in advance and that the exhibitor could make ample plans for running them. Charles Chaplin has been working almost day and night for the past several weeks at the Los Angeles studios in order that he could get enough plays made in advance to make the release schedule regular.

Ridiculous rumors have been started by irresponsible parties and have been spread abroad that Mr. Chaplin has been injured. There were other unfounded stories telling of a number of other ailments.

Mr. Chaplin has not missed a day from his work and indignantly denies that he has been sick or injured.

"I have produced several comedies in the past few weeks which would seem to indicate that I am not injured or otherwise incapacitated," he declared. "I don't know who started these silly stories, but there is not a word of truth in any one of them."

ADDRESS YOUR MAIL TO "UNIVERSAL CITY, CAL."

The Universal has completed the foundations of a splendid stone post-office at Universal City, Cal., which will be turned over to Uncle Sam upon its completion. Postmaster Frederick Donaghy, who was appointed by the Federal authorities recently to handle the great volume of business at the only moving picture municipality in the world, is now formally installed in his temporary post-office. Mr. Donaghy is also keeping an eye on the construction of the new post-office. He now handles, on an average, five thousand pieces of mail a day, and is assisted by C. D. Low, post-office inspector for the Los Angeles district.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

REFERRING to comments in these columns recently relative to the change of heart manifest toward motion pictures and the players who appear in them by professional theatrical people, a correspondent asks if the acquisition of the professionals during late years has been responsible for the elevation of the motion picture standard. The same correspondent asks for our opinion of the schools established for the education of applicants in the line of playing for the pictures. Replying to the first query we feel no hesitancy in stating that the acquisition of professional talent in late years has contributed to the elevation referred to, but to give that profession all the credit would be an unjust reflection upon the professionals who preceded them in the business as well as upon the makers of the pictures who have expended so much money and valuable time and labor in acquiring the results attained.

The writer has frequently stated, and still maintains, that the success of motion pictures is not dependent upon the professional stage players. All who have gone into the business during late years could go back to the stage and the motion picture business would continue its way serenely and successfully. With few exceptions, the producers of motion pictures have sought many of the well known stage players for but one purpose; that is to give to a script in hand true color. It cannot be disputed that a play which has attained success upon the stage can be picturized with more success when the services of a player who became prominently identified with the play on the stage are acquired. It helps to add to the realism of the production. In this respect the professional player comes under the same sub-division as the realism injected into a story by acquiring real sites and properties to supplant the images painted upon canvas or constructed of papier-mache. At times the professional stage player is of no more value to the motion picture producer than the poorest paid player in his stock. The status of the former is dependent upon the character of the production.

Apropos to the subject a well known motion picture director stated to the writer and other friends he was conversing with: "In a general sense this professional idea is all wrong. Their value has a limit in many instances. I have discovered this from experience. Not long ago I had a scene I was trying to put over with three or four men classed as professionals, men of stage experience. The scene involved a mob, but I wanted to get a particular piece of work on the nine-foot line. After several rehearsals I became so disgusted that I dismissed the professionals. In desperation I turned and looked the supers over. Three men who were the types I wanted were selected, and after but two rehearsals they put over just what I wanted and I paid them the professional rates. Now I do not wish to be understood as insinuating that the professionals I dismissed were not actors and did not know their business. I studiously avoid at all times doing or saying anything that might unjustly reflect upon a professional. Nor do I maintain that those who succeeded were diamonds from the rough. I do not pretend that they are actors. The chances are that were I to assign them other parts they would fail miserably. I know that none of them have had either stage training or experience, but they had picture training. They grasped what I was after through experience before the camera. They saw that I did not want them to act, but to be natural. The professionals could not get down to my idea because they failed to avoid that stagy spirit. I wanted them to make the audience feel that they were witnessing an incident in real (not reel) life. I can take you into almost any studio you name and, if the director is one who has had picture experience, you will hear him shout time and again, 'Now, Mr. Blank, please do not act. Be natural.' This is one of the reasons why professional stage players are not indispensable to the success of motion pictures. I have in mind several picture players who have never been upon the stage yet I would trust them with very important parts. Of course, where acting is essential I would no doubt select professionals in preference to them. The true reason for the professional idea entertained by so many being wrong is that the majority of motion picture productions do not require acting. The element of success is dependent upon the players being able to so control themselves in the work as to be able to be natural, not give the character a false color."

It will be observed that in referring to the stage professionals comment has been made only upon those who have become identified with the picture game in recent years. No criticism has been directed toward professionals who have become picture trained. This is in simple justice to the latter. Following along this line it may be stated that a large majority of the motion picture patrons do not know that many of their screen favorites for years past commenced life on the professional stage. They have been so long in pictures that the public believe their career started on the screen, that they are mere picture players. I can name at least ten players in one company who have become strong favorites with the picture theater patrons, and who have almost entirely surrendered their identity with the professional stage. One of them was for several years prominently identified with successful stock companies in various parts of the country, and at times right in New York City, but few remember him as such. Such people are indispensable to the success of pictures. That is to say, their picture training has made them valuable. They, perhaps, would not succeed in substituting for a professional in an original part, but in general motion picture work they land on both feet. They have the idea of realism in their heads and a director is not driven to desperation in getting them to convey to the public what he wants them to do in a natural manner.

And this brings us to the correspondent's second query. The so-called schools for training people for work in motion picture acting are to be more tabooed than upheld. Those who have made pleas for them contend that they are entirely within the bounds of legitimacy because it can not be disputed that they are helpful inasmuch as they put the pupils camera wise and equip them for small parts by the knowledge imparted as to how the players conduct themselves in scenes, how they dress, make up, etc. All this is true. It is also true that an intelligent man or woman with motion picture experience can impart the same knowledge in an hour. The evil does not lie in this, but in the methods adopted by the so-called schools. It is not a violation of law to take weeks in imparting knowledge that could be done in an hour. The argument that the pupils can be more thoroughly trained in the longer period is quite logical. Whatever unfavorable impression has been created by the so-called schools is due to the managers of the schools. Bare faced deception has caused it. A school may turn out motion picture players, but it cannot do so with a guarantee of success. It is not true that there is a dearth of players. It is not true that the so-called schools can guarantee to turn out motion picture stars. Some of their pupils may in time become stars, but not through the schools. There are motion picture stars who were never upon the stage, or went to a training school. They attained their positions at the hands of that old time and unrelenting taskmaster, experience. Many, if not all, the so-called schools promise the dupes positions upon the close of their term of instruction. Outside of "suping" they have failed to make good on these promises. A few weeks ago several so-called graduates of one of these schools appeared in a Brooklyn criminal court against the head of the school. The newspapers stated that he received a sentence of nine months for failing to make good his promise in one case and other charges are pending. This particular manager a few years ago was employed as a subordinate in a film exchange in Manhattan. He started his "school" career by instructing applicants how to operate and care for motion picture projecting machines. Outside of the guaranty to place the graduates in positions the proposition had a perfectly legitimate color and the promoter made a lot of money, notwithstanding many complaints by graduates that positions they secured were through their personal efforts. One of the graduates of this man's school is personally known to the writer. The truth may hurt, but circumstances justify the declaration that this particular girl is so homely, uncouth in action and attire, so devoid of histrionic ability, so dense mentally that at studios to which she applies for work she is selected only when the type required is incidental to some scene depicting a gathering of tough east side people. Yet $40 of her own, and that of her family's hard earned savings was taken from this girl on the promise that when she graduated she would be placed as a player with some company, a promise that was not fulfilled. This is not a surmise, or a statement based upon hearsay, but facts that can be substantiated by affidavit. It is one of the cases that cannot be outlived by the so-called schools, and powerful evidence of good faith must be forthcoming before the writer will endorse any of them.

Dinner to Farrar.

Lasky, Goldfish and De Mille Hosts at Complimentary Function Which Is Attended by Many Notables.

AN IMPORTANT social function took place in Los Angeles, Cal., on Saturday, June 12th, when Messrs. Lasky, Goldfish and De Mille gave a dinner, reception and dance in honor of Geraldine Farrar, who had just arrived at the Lasky studios to pose for a series of photo-dramas. The dinner took place at the Hollywood Hotel and the list of important guests reads almost like a roster of the famous Broadway theatrical companies during the height of the season.

Among those present at the dinner in addition to Miss Farrar herself and Mayor Rose of Los Angeles, were John Drew, Raymond Hitchcock, Julian Eltinge, Mary Pickford, Fannie Ward, Charlotte Walker, Laura Hope Crews, Flora Zabelle, Blanche Ring, Julia Dean, Blanche Sweet, Alexandria Carlyle, Frances Ring, John Mears, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gest, Mrs. David Belasco, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Farrar, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Owen Moore, Carlyle Blackwell, Pedro de Cordoba, Orrin Johnson, Hale Hamilton, Frank Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reicher, Mr. Hector Turnbull, Jack Dean, Tully Marshall, Marion Fairfax, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Lasky, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Goldfish, Mrs. Lasky, Senior, Theodore Roberts, James Neil, George Melford, Alfred Hertz, Louis Gottschalk, Thomas Meighan, Ralph Kellard and Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Buckland.

During and after the dinner many of the stars entertained those present and the succeeding dance was especially brilliant. Geraldine Farrar and John Drew did a one-step which was the hit of the evening.

Miss Vera Fuller Mellish.

SO DELIGHTED is Vera Fuller Mellish with her experience in Kalem's three-act "Broadway Favorites" feature, "The Bondwoman," that she is seriously thinking of deserting the legitimate stage in favor of the silent drama. Miss Mellish is the ingenue who captivated the New York theater-goers by her work in "The Blindness of Virtue," early this season.

This actress has just returned from Kalem's Jacksonville (Fla.) studios, where "The Bondwoman" was produced. In reciting her experiences while in front of the camera, she laughingly recalled the prophecies made by her professional friends who advised her against entering motion pictures.

Vera Fuller Mellish.

Miss Mellish expressed herself as being highly pleased with the role of Amy Blanchard in "The Bondwoman." The role is intensely dramatic and therefore offered Miss Mellish a splendid opportunity to display her histrionic ability.

Born in England, this actress came to America when a child. She received her education at the Villa Maria. Her desire to become an actress was manifested at an early age and she frequently took part in amateur theatricals.

Upon her graduation, Miss Mellish secured an engagement with a Boston stock company. After several seasons of this work, she was engaged to appear with "Billie Burke" in "The-Mind-the-Paint Girl" at the Lyceum theater. Among her other New York engagements were "Monsieur Beaucaire," in which Miss Mellish appeared with Lewis Waller at Daly's theater, and "The Blindness of Virtue," which scored at the Manhattan Opera House.

ACTOR'S SOCIETY RE-ELECTS HADDOCK.

William F. Haddock, chief director of the Gotham Film Company, has just been honored by being elected President of the Actors' Society for the third consecutive term. This is an honor which has never been conferred on a member of the society before, and it is in appreciation of his noble efforts in behalf of the profession.

Charles Chaplin.

CHARLES CHAPLIN, comedian and the leading exponent of the brand new art of making comedy for the silent drama, is twenty-five years old and has been an actor all his life. He was born in a suburb of London and his family is one which has made its living behind the footlights for generations. His father and mother are on the stage today and he was practically born on the stage. He started his career at the age of seven when he did some clog dancing in a London theater. After that he appeared in "Rags and Riches," an Anglicized American production. A little while after he had appeared in this play he left the stage to attend the Hern Boys College near London where he stayed two years gathering the scholastic foundation which he has improved so much by reading and the observation of human men at their work.

Charles Chaplin.

When he went back on the stage again, he was with the Charles Frohman company in London for three years playing "Billy" with William Gillette in "Sherlock Holmes." He came to America playing the lead comedy part with Fred Karno's "A Night in an English Music Hall." This was a pantomime, but Mr. Chaplin was the drunk who disrupted the performance by his vociferous appreciation or his equally vociferous dislike of the acts which were supposed to come under his notice. His characterization of the inebriated man-about-town made for the success of the little play in vaudeville and enabled it to pad its bookings with an uninterrupted playing list. It was while in this play that Mr. Chaplin attracted the attention of the moving picture makers and he was given a contract to play on the screen.

His work before the camera rapidly raised him from the position of the ordinary screen comedian to the rank of a genius and he attracted the attention of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, always on the qui vive for the best in moving pictures. He was offered a contract at a fabulous salary and he showed his good sense by accepting it and enlisting under the banner of the Essanay company.

Mr. Chaplin has made a thorough, painstaking study of comedy in pantomime and this was a sort of preparatory course for his moving picture work. He is the exponent of realism and spontaneity in moving pictures and his work has made him the best known actor on the screen today. This does not bar the serious stars of the silent drama. Wherever there is a Chaplin booking, there the public flocks.

LITTLE THEATER NOW A PICTURE HOUSE.

The Little Theater, a "legitimate," situated at the corner of 17th and Delancy streets, Philadelphia, Pa., instead of remaining "dark" during the summer season will be operated as a moving picture house. J. A. Levy, an experienced picture man, will be in charge. Every seat in the house will be reserved, according to reports, and admission can be booked for a week in advance. There will be no stated price of admission, Mr. Levy deciding to have the kind of picture govern the scale of prices. here will be a children's matinee every Saturday morning, which is to be started at 10:45. Three shows a day are to be given—a matinee and two evening exhibitions. The opening of The Little Theater as a picture house is scheduled for June 21.

COMERCIAL STILL OWNS GRANTWOOD PLANT.

Owing to a statement in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World to the effect that the Eclipse Laboratories had leased the plant of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company at Grantwood, N. J., the latter company fears that the impression may get abroad that it no longer owns that property and hastens to request the announcement that it has merely leased the plant for a period of three months to James D. Rhodes. In other words the Commercial Motion Pictures Company is still owner of the plant leased to the Eclipse Laboratories.

New World Film Plan

Report that Lewis J. Selznick Has Organized Three Million Dollar Company Solely for Distribution.

THAT the World Film Corporation will become a three million dollar distributing concern, backed by a New York banking house, is a well founded report received from an authoritative source by the Moving Picture World. It is probable that the plans in detail as prepared by Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film, will be completed and ready for publication during the coming week.

According to the report, the date set for the inauguration of the new policy is September 9th, when the World Film will begin releasing four features a week, each feature to be accompanied by a one-reel comedy. Arrangements have been made with several well-known producing companies, whereby their output will be contributed to the program and probably one or more new companies will be launched. Isadore Bernstein, with studios located in California, is slated for director of one of the producing organizations.

In promoting the present plan, Mr. Selznick is following the theory, always maintained by him in the past, that there is a great deal of unnecessary waste in the distribution of pictures, that the need is for one powerful distributing company to carry a strong program to exhibitors, and that such a concern as he has in mind will materially decrease the expenses that at present eat into the profits of producers. He figures that when a salesman covers a territory it is as easy for him to sell two programs as one, and that by next autumn the ideal program will comprise four features a week and a like number of comedies.

Ultimately, if the plans mature as reported, the World Film may be expected to forego its producing activities in favor of becoming one of the most powerful distributing concerns in the country.

Philip Hahn

WHEN it comes to recounting experiences as a professional few picture players can recite a more interesting story than Philip Hahn. He was born in Holland and after adopting the calling of an actor he appeared for several years in the theaters of that and other continental countries. One of the most interesting experiences that Mr. Hahn has to his credit was that he appeared in the famous Oberammergau passion play in the role of Christ.

Philip Hahn.

Mr. Hahn's motion picture experience has been varied. He was first introduced to the camera in the studios of the Great Northern Film Company in Copenhagen, Denmark, where he remained for four years. Later he came to America and has appeared with many different feature producers in numerous important roles. He originated the character of Richard in the Ella Wheeler Wilcox drama, "The Price He Paid"; was Prince Carl in "The Garden of Lies," playing opposite Jane Cowl; he played the tramp reporter with John Emerson in "The Bachelor's Romance," and was the absinthe fiend in "Wormwood."

With the program companies he played leads for Thanhouser, Universal and others. His latest connection was with the Beury Feature Film Company of Toronto, the studio and factory of which company was recently destroyed by fire.

Mr. Hahn's characterizations are of the highest class and, though he does not particularly like to play the part of the villain, that role frequently falls to him and has actually gained for him deserved applause from picture theater patrons.

Walter Edwin

WALTER EDWIN is a bonny Scot. He was born of honest parents at Kilcreggan on Clyde in 1870 He comes from the well-known Edwin family who for five generations back have been managers of theaters, owners, actors, acrobats and all-around public entertainers. He was born in the theatrical business and being around the theater is to him as familiar a thing as being around one's own workshop.

He does not confess to any great early longing for the stage. A life on the sea appealed to him more than anything else, unless perhaps it were the army. He ran away to sea at the age of 12 and was away for three years. From age 15 to age 28 his time was divided in three different ways: part of it in the army, part in the navy, and part upon the stage.

Walter Edwin.

He made his start in moving pictures at the Edison studio, where he played leads, characters, and bits. It was noticed that his work was uniformly good and that he had a thorough knowledge of stagecraft. In 1911 he was made a director with the Edison forces and has been at that work ever since. From January, 1912, until the end of 1914 he directed all the productions in which Mary Fuller appeared for the Edison Company.

Aside from the Mary Fuller pictures, some of his best remembered productions are "When Greek Meets Greek," "When the Right Man Comes Along," "The Almond Eyed Maid," "The Eyes of the Blind," "The Dean's Daughters," "Translation of a Savage," "Mercy Merrick," "The Master Mummer," "Joyce of the North Woods," and Edison's first three-reel production, "Mary, Queen of Scots." He is at present identified with the George Kleine producing forces and has just finished "The Spendthrift," his first feature under the Kleine banner.

CORRECTING AN ERROR.

Through unavoidable error, a number of details dealing with the activities of the F. J. Griffin Co., as set forth in a full page advertisement on Page No. 2007 of the Moving Picture World, dated June 19th, were erroneously set forth. The Griffin Co. is located at No. 165 Jessie St., not Jessica St., San Francisco, Cal., and their telephone number is Garfield 137. The territory in which the company is offering to rent their big feature, "The Heart of California," includes the states of California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Nevada and Idaho.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT TO STAR IN PATHE PICTURE.

William Elliott, who will be featured with Ruth Roland in the picturization, "Comrade John," by Samuel Merwin and Henry Kitchell Webster, shortly to be released by Pathe Exchange, is truly one of the best known actors in the country. In himself he is musician, painter, writer, producing manager, and above all, actor.

REMODELING ROYAL THEATER.

W. H. Stage, manager of the Royal theater at Marengo, Ill., is renovating his picture house. When improvements have been completed the seating capacity will have been materially increased so that the auditorium can accommodate something like 450.

SELIG ZOO GIVES BENEFIT.

W. N. Selig recently threw his zoo open to the Jewish Relief fund for a benefit day. A goodly sum was realized through the kindness of the big man and his shop. The performances in the afternoon were followed by dancing until midnight.

Taking Pictures in Africa

Harold Sintzenich, Camera Man with the Lady Mackenzie Expedition, Has Trying Experiences.

MUCH has been said of the prowess of Lady Mackenzie in securing the big game pictures now on view at the Lyceum theater, New York, whereas the photographer of the expedition, the man who very nearly lost his life in recording the incidents of the hunt, has been left in the unobtrusive background, unsung if not unhonored. Save for the skill, the resourcefulness and, at critical moments, the unbeatable courage of Harold Sintzenich, Lady Mackenzie and her party might have met all the lions and rhino in Africa, and the world at large would have had to content itself with verbal descriptions of the exploits. If ever a man took valuable pictures under difficulties, that man is Harold Sintzenich, and the wonder of it is that he lives to tell the tale.

Harold Sintzenich.

No one would ever guess it from the name, but Mr. Sintzenich is an Englishman, who during the past five years has become a man of the world in the true sense. As studio, educational and industrial photographer for Kineto, Ltd., of London, as chief photographer for the Natural Color Kinematograph Company, as official cinema photographer for the government of British Columbia, and, finally, as the man behind the camera on the Lady Mackenzie expedition, Mr. Sintzenich has been something of a globe trotter. He has turned the crank in France, Italy, Egypt, the Canary Islands, Portugal, Jamaica, Cuba, Canada, British Columbia and in parts of Central Africa never before visited by a white man. He knows all climates and has a working knowledge of nearly every language.

And, speaking of climates, Mr. Sintzenich declares that for the purposes of photography he knows of none worse than that of Central Africa, British East Africa and Uganda where the thermometer frequently registers from 100 to 140 degrees and the humidity is so great that a dry towel hung in a room will be soaking wet in three hours' time. This intense heat and humidity tends to granulate the film; furthermore, if one is inclined to be hypercritical about the clearness of some of the scenes in the big game pictures it should be remembered that five months elapsed between the exposure of the film and its development.

The party, including Lady Mackenzie, Mr. Sintzenich, Ernest Shelley, S. Lydford and Dr. Dudgeon, left London in April, 1914, and on reaching Africa secured a retinue of some 250 natives, among them four, selected for camera boys because of their willingness and unusually alert minds. Mr. Sintzenich kept the same staff throughout the trip and found the youths to be apt pupils, especially the head of the force, called Carzemoto, which, being translated into English, means "work like the devil." Carzemoto is the largest of the natives appearing in the accompanying cut, and, according to Mr. Sintzenich, he is as powerful as he looks. When it was necessary to shift the camera in a hurry, and it often was, Carzemoto would tuck the whole apparatus under his arm and run with all the ease of an unburdened man.

In talking of his experiences Mr. Sintzenich said, "I was watching the pictures being run in the Lyceum theater the other evening and directly behind me a man expressed keen sympathy for the rhinoceros killed without cause, or so he appeared to believe. As a matter of fact, the choice lay between the death of the animal and my own death. A picture of the kind never had been obtained, nor is there likely to be another for some time to come. We found traces of this rhinoceros early in the morning and stalked him until about four o'clock in the afternoon. He kept in the heavy bush, refusing to come out into the open until he had located his mate. They appeared on the cleared plain together, within about fifty yards of us. I was reeling off film when one of the animals turned and charged straight for my camera. Had it not been for the well directed shots of Lady Mackenzie and Mr. Shelley, the rhinoceros might have been spared, but the party would have been minus a photographer.

Harold A. C. Sintzenich and the Lion.

"The making of the charging lion film was equally thrilling. We laid a bait one night and the next morning found tracks leading to a thick bush. With a band of natives to lead the way, we went after the lion. I was unguarded when the animal broke through the bush and made directly for the camera. He was within ten paces of me when something moved him to turn sharply and head for the shelter he had just left.

"Another uncomfortably narrow escape came during my six-day journey from British East Africa to Nairobi, when I was the only white man with twenty-two natives. At the outbreak of the war we were close to the German border and, fearing an invasion and the loss of our film, I thought it best to take the boxes to Nairobi, a distance of about ninety miles. Through the roughest sort of country in which it was almost impossible to find water better than that lying in stagnant pools, we made from twelve to sixteen miles a day, sometimes going without a drink for forty-eight hours at a stretch.

"When we camped for the night I always insisted that a hurricane lamp be in working order, and it proved to be a wise precaution, for one morning we found the footprints of three full grown lions and one cub forming a circle around the tent, just twenty-two paces from where I had been sleeping. The lions' fear of the light was all that saved our lives on that occasion." Mr. Sintzenich said that the natives were generally friendly and extremely curious about everything pertaining to the strange white visitors.

Harold Sintzenich and Camera Boys.

It was popularly believed that the light complexions were due to some sort of paint, which, if rubbed off, would disclose dark skins similar to their own. Dialects vary with each tribe, but a knowledge of the Swahili language is sufficient for intercourse with most of the natives.

Now that he has seen a good bit of the world, Mr. Sintzenich has come to America with the intention of settling here as camera man for some concern. His wide experience has qualified him for all varieties of work, in the studio, or in the wild; it is all the same to this young Englishman.

Theodore Wharton, Master Director

THEODORE WHARTON, Pathe producer, whose name is known wherever people see good pictures, is like so many men in the business, a graduate of the "legitimate." He is a native of Milwaukee, but was raised in Texas, where for nine years he was treasurer of the Dallas Opera House.

Feeling that life would be more interesting on the stage than "counting the house," he joined the Hopkins Grand Opera Company as an actor in St. Louis in 1895, and remained with that organization for two seasons, when he went with E. H. Sothern. His next engagement was with "The Sporting Duchess," after which he was transferred to Charles Frohman's Empire Theater Company, which at that time was famous for the number of stars it developed. In 1889 he joined Augustin Daly's famous stock company, and later managed "The Great Ruby." Then he became assistant treasurer of Hammerstein's Victoria theater, which position he held for five years, leaving it to manage Hanlon Brothers' "Superba."

Theodore Wharton.

Wharton was first attracted to motion pictures in 1907 when he began writing scenarios, with what success was proven by his selling twenty-eight of his first thirty scripts to the Edison Company who then made him scenario editor and studio supervisor. When Pathe Freres established their American studio, he went with them and became their first director. Since that time with the exception of short intervals, he has been associated with Pathe, first as director, and now, with his brother, Leopold, as producer for Pathe. Through the "Exploits of Elaine" the Wharton name has become known in every hamlet in the land. In Ithaca, where the Whartons have a fine studio property, Theodore Wharton is known as "the man who discovered Ithaca." Certainly through his pictures that beautiful little city has received the finest kind of publicity.

DEATH OF A. DANSON MICHELL.

On Friday, June 4, at Trundean Sanitarium, Lake Saranac, occurred the death of A. Danson Michell. This young man had been associated with the Dramatic Mirror and various moving picture publications as critic and press representative. Although connected with moving picture work but a year or two, he had acquired a wide acquaintance and was well known for his many fine qualities. His death was due to lung trouble from which he had suffered several months. His parents reside on Staten Island, his father, Arthur D. Michell, being a well-known lecturer and attorney-at-law.

"GARDEN OF LIES" GOES ON UNIVERSAL PROGRAM.

The negative of the feature "The Garden of Lies," which was one of the assets of the All-Star Feature Company, has been sold for a large sum of money to John Pelzer, acting, it is believed, for the Universal Film Company. The sale was effected by William P. Jeffery, the trustee in bankruptcy. The affairs of the company will now soon be wound up, all the necessary papers having been filed with Stanley W. Dexter, the referee in bankruptcy, at 75 Broadway, New York.

Charles J. Winninger

CHARLES J. WINNINGER, famous from coast to coast as one of the foremost comedians on the stage, is now an L-Ko-Universal star. Mr. Winninger made his first great success in Lew Fields' company of "The Yankee Girl," in which Blanche Ring (now Mrs. Winninger) starred.

This clever actor was born in Wausau, Wisconsin. His father was a showman and traveled with his family of five sons and one daughter as a family theatrical troupe. They were known as the "Winninger Family Variety Company," with Charles as the feature. He was known then as the boy soprano and enjoyed this title until he was old enough to be known as a genuine actor.

All the Winninger family, including Charles, went into the Medicine Show business and played every role from slapstick to dramatic. Charles then left the combination to join a small circus, doing everything from stake driving to leaping over elephants.

Charles J. Winninger.

However, it was in 1906 that Charles Winninger landed in New York. For months he walked the streets trying to land a job, but was unsuccessful. After some time he received an offer to go into stock with a company leaving New York for San Antonio, Texas. This was followed by a season in Seattle, and then Winninger journeyed back to New York.

Here came his first real opportunity. Lee Kohlmar, leading man in Blanche Ring's Yankee Girl Company, fell and broke his leg. Lew Fields rushed Winninger to Milwaukee and with but one day's rehearsal Winninger scored a big hit. Since 1912 Mr. Winninger has been playing the leads in the companies headed by his wife, Blanche Ring.

Charles Winninger will be a welcome addition to the film world. He brings with him a fund of information which will be of inestimable value to him and to the members of the famous L-Ko-Universal Company. Releases featuring the new star will be set some time in June.

LARKIN CO. PROMOTES PICTURE SHOW.

W. M. Whitney of the Larkin Company at Buffalo, N. Y., has announced the intention of that company to remodel an old church next to its industrial plant into a recreation center where motion pictures will be shown to the company's employees and visitors. Word comes from G. H. Christoffers, manager of the United Film Service, at Buffalo, that Mr. Whitney has assured him that the building will be ready in November. The United Manager also adds that Mr. Whitney has already put in his order for the United Program to be shown at this model recreation center for the Larkin company's employees. He will make a specialty of educational films, of which the United is particularly well stocked. There are over 1,500 employees in the offices of the Larkin company alone, to say nothing of the several thousands who are occupied in their works. The new recreation center promises to be an extremely popular place.

GERTRUDE BONDHILL WITH UNITED.

Otis B. Thayer's trip to New York from Colorado Springs, Col., in search of a star for Lariat pictures and the United Program has resulted in the annexing of Gertrude Bondhill, the well known stock actress, to the Pike's Peak Film Company's contingent at the Garden of the God's studio. Miss Bondhill leaves Detroit, Mich., where she has been the leading lady with Vaughn Glazier in stock during the past season, to become the leading lady for Lariat pictures under Mr. Thayer's direction. Miss Bondhill left this week for Colorado Springs. She will play leads in a series of high class two-reel Western dramas written for her especially by William V. Mong, the Lariat scenario editor, in which she will be supported by Mr. Mong, Miss Reeva Greenwood and Walter Fischter.

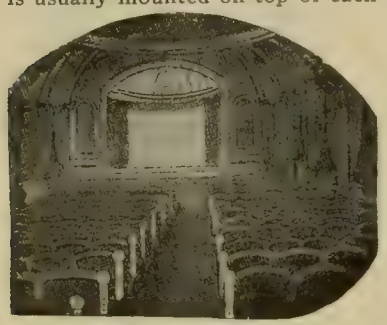
Theater Chair Signalling

A New Method for Increasing Receipts by Indicating Seats Vacant at Box Office.

TO ELEVATE the humble picture theater to the level of a legitimate theater by showing the patrons the actual seats available at the box office has at last been solved, in a simple and inexpensive manner.

One of the greatest nuisances, if not dangers, connected with the movie house, noticeable especially around 8 P. M., is the surging down the aisles in quest of seats that defies the best trained usher service. With the Kenny system the usher dispenses with the old style torch while standing at the head of the aisle, and the instant a pair of green jewels commence to sparkle on a signal post, he merely holds up two fingers to the crowd in the rear, when a corresponding number of patrons are allowed to enter the aisle and find their own seats unaided, the lights going out when seats are occupied. A price indicator is usually mounted on top of each post, which remains lighted only as long as any seat in the row is vacant.

At the Box Office.



Theater Equipped with Kenny Signals.

A glance at the illustration reveals the operation of the system more clearly.

A typical picture of a modern theater equipped with the Kenny Chair Signal System is herewith illustrated, showing the signal posts mounted on end chairs, whose miniature lamps showing through colored jewels, are electrically connected to automatic switches mounted under chairs, and so designed that when a seat is vacated a lamp will light, causing a jewel to sparkle. Each lamp consumes only one watt, and in a thousand-seat house it has been found in actual practice that only about 10 per cent. of the lights are constantly in use, giving a current consumption equal to about one old-style 32 C. P. lamp.

The wiring for the Chair Signal System is as easy as an electric bell, and as only from 4 to 6 volts are used (usually taken from an accumulator placed in series with the arc lamp of the projector) on account of the low voltage, the customary wiring inspections are unnecessary.

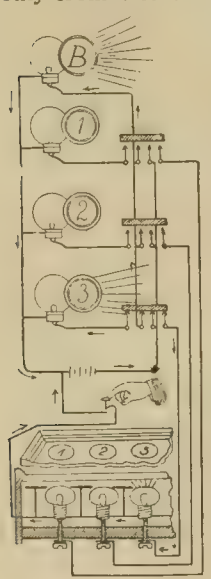


Diagram of Wiring.

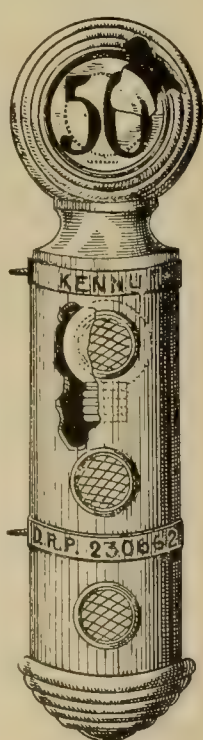
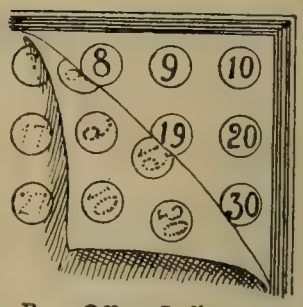
The inventor, Paul T. Kenny, who has recently returned from abroad, after disposing of his European patents, is now located at 55 Wall street, New York, Room No. 323, and would welcome correspondence from progressive men who might be interested in either equipping theaters, or aiding in forming a company for manufacturing under his American patents.



Signal Post.

We also show a full-sized illustration of a signal post, showing price indicator as well as jewels covering miniature lamps.

This post is suitable for a 50-cent row having only three seats, but it has only to be lengthened to add as many more lamps and jewels as there are chairs in the row. Sometimes row letters take the place of the price and numbers are substituted for the jewels.



Box Office Indicator.

The jewels are usually colored to correspond with prices, greens being for 10-cent seats, reds for 20-cent, blue for 25-cent, etc. Post can be made to indicate front and rear by merely adding an extra jewel. Another illustration shows a small portion of the face of the Box Office Indicator containing miniature 6-volt lamps connected electrically with corresponding chairs. Pressing a button on the side of the indicator wall will cause jewels to glow under numbers whose chairs are vacant. An hourly record of the house can be instantly made by placing a sheet of sensitized paper over the indicator, as the pressing of the button will cause the vacancies to be photographed directly on the paper! This is an additional check on the ticket seller's honesty, and at the same time enables the owner to compare condition of the house from time to time.

Norbert Myles

PERHAPS no one has been attracting more favorable comment in the Ideal photodramas which are a prominent part of the United Program than Norbert Myles, the tall and handsome portrayer of "character" or heavy or hero roles—any one of which he plays with equal finish. Mr. Myles' exceptional work as Flatray, the sheriff, in the picturization of William MacLeod Raine's story, "Brand Blotters," which will be released June 14, is sure to attract unusual attention since in it Mr. Myles' daring as a rider and his versatility is given full play.

Norbert Myles.

Mr. Myles was practically brought up in the saddle, having lived on a ranch until he was 20 years of age. Then, prompted by a roving disposition he joined a passing theatrical show as an extra. In one year Myles fought his way to the top of his profession, and became leading man of his company. Later, called by the lure of the silent drama, he joined Pathe Freres, and for some time played the leads in their Western dramas. He then shifted to Lubin where he remained for a year, then becoming affiliated with Kalem. He has now been with the United Program for some time. Watch for his appearance in "Man and the Law" and "Brand Blotters."

FAMOUS PLAYERS SECURE "MOLLY MAKE-BELIEVE."

The Famous Players Film Co. have secured the motion picture rights of the famous and unique novel, "Molly Make-Believe," by Eleanor H. Abbott, for forthcoming production, in which Marguerite Clark will be presented in the titular role.

This dainty and novel comedy-romance possesses the exact qualities adapted to the fascinating talents of the popular and diminutive star. The enchanting appropriateness of this quaint story for the original methods of Miss Clark are at once apparent, and "Molly Make Believe" should result in substantially more than a "make-believe" success.

"The Rosary."

A Remarkable Seven-Reel Feature by Selig, Directed by Colin Campbell and Featuring Kathlyn Williams, Chas. Clary and Wheeler Oakman, for Release by V. L. S. E., Inc.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"THE ROSARY" is a big picture, and its bigness does not rely on its length, but mainly on artistic production, which includes, of course, direction, acting and the other elements which contribute to a well visualized story.

After viewing the seven reels twice, once on each of two consecutive days, I was forced to the conclusion—so far as my individual opinion is concerned—that there was only one important discordant note in the harmony of this feature's run. That is the lack of sufficient motive in the story to convince a thinking mind that Kenward Wright could have been the arch villain he shows himself to be in this photoplay. I was rather astonished, indeed, to discover that such vindictive animus existed in the heart of Wright against Bruce Wilton; for we see them in the picnic scene with the sisters Vera and Alice Wallace, and Wright is seemingly well satisfied in the company of Alice, the least attractive of the two, while we discover that Bruce and Vera are in love. Only once did I catch Wright cast a longing look in the direction of Vera and that when she and Bruce walk off to moon by themselves, leaving Wright and Alice to follow their example. Surely this look is not sufficient to prepare one for the fiendish hate soon afterwards expressed by Wright, in the ruin of the man who has always been his friend, and who still believes him a friend.

Aside from this single exception, "The Rosary" made a strong appeal to me. Director Campbell deserves great praise for the settings he has given this photoplay. Whether it be in old Ireland or New York, the scenes are nicely appropriate. Particularly are we interested in the scenes surrounding the village home of young Brian Kelly, afterwards Father Kelly. The interior of the home itself has the atmosphere of what such a home meant about 40 or 50 years ago, in the south or west of Ireland. What a realistic picture is the scene showing Brian's defense of his little playmate and sweetheart, Madge Callahan. Or that fishing scene after the fray is over, or the welcome given Brian on his homecoming several years afterwards! How the old jaunting car, weak in its springs, sags as it jolts over the rough cobble stones, and how the villagers, in their haste to catch sight of Brian, jostle against goats or trip over the waddling geese! The interior and exterior of the village church, of which the good Father Ryan—who is young Brian's heaven-sent friend—form a study in the art of lending atmosphere and color.

When young Father Kelly finds his life work in the United States, we note that the settings are just as carefully and appropriately selected. The interiors of the Wilton mansion, of Father Kelly's apartments in the tenement district of New York, and the exterior showing the unfinished doorway of the new Church of the Rosary (contributed by Bruce Wilton to his good friend and old tutor, Father Kelly, before the crash to his fortune came) are all worthy of intelligent appreciation. When it is remembered that many of these five scenes are tinted, the fullness of the effect will be better apprehended.

The acting in "The Rosary" is excellent. Not since I saw my deceased friend, Harry Cashman, in the role of a venerable priest, in Essanay's "Sunshine," have I been so moved by anyone else in a similar role as by Charles Clary, in the part of Father Kelly. In this case the role is far more exacting, as the priest is seen while he is a student and then afterwards throughout long service in the church. The gradual aging, which requires most artistic simulation, is most skillfully accomplished, both in action and make-up. Indeed the characterization has the force of a mighty appeal for good, so deeply impressed does one become by the saintly and noble character of this good man. Many fine heart touches are made by Mr. Clary here and there, by little bits of "business," which convey the delicate effects of light and shade in a masterful portraiture.

Miss Kathlyn Williams, it seems to me, can renew her girlhood at will, judging from her winsome impersonation of Vera Wallace. In the strong, emotional scenes between Bruce Wilton and his wife, Vera, Miss Williams meets the requirements fully. Wheeler Oakman has added quite materially to his laurels by his impersonation of Bruce Wilton. I must compliment the young lady who played the part of Madge Callahan—grown up. Her acting is quite spirited, and she succeeds in convincing one that in affairs of the heart a girl will oppose even the church to win the object of her choice. I would like to mention others, equally deserving, but space forbids.

The release date is June 28.

"The Reward."

Four Reel Drama of Female Psychology by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thos. H. Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN interesting and attractively presented story dealing with one of those peculiar young women who seem to known neither the logical nor the moral imperative, "The Reward," is given added strength by the remarkable interpretation of Bessie Barriscale in the lead. This is not her first screen portrayal of the type of romantic self-indulgence, a type some superficial observers have come to regard that of unrestrained womanhood, and yet she is wholly uninfluenced by previous impersonations, offering an entirely new phase of character development with rare delicacy. She has depicted the wayward creature who is so incapable of feeling more than a vicarious sense of guilt that she does not realize she has ever done wrong, only that she has been wronged. In "The Reward" there is an inclination on the wayward creature's part to believe in personal integrity which is supported for a while by the sweetness and purity of early influences. That a powerful impression is made by this characterization is, however, not wholly due to Bessie's exquisite appreciation of its requirements but to the selective ability of those who chose her for the role and fitted it to her in delightful harmony.

She is a chorus girl out of sympathy with the other girls of her company and is unattracted by the idle and dissipated young men who furnish midnight entertainment for the rest.

Because of her decency she attracts the attention of a rich and sated cynic who has been accustomed to spin women around like tops simply because he has known how to handle them skilfully. He decides to make a conquest and uses the policy of "persuasion" so persistently that she falters. She listens to him, more to his voice than to his logic, and this at a time when every detail of her environment confirms his fallacious reasoning. It becomes apparent to the cynic that she is completely upset by her misfortunes in close conjunction with his sophistry, that she is an anguish of self-torture and incapable of holding out against overwhelming odds against her, and he is deeply touched by the sight of her suffering. The real manhood in him, that which would assuage pain and ward off disaster among God's helpless creatures, kindles a pity that swiftly deepens to love. He is ready to marry her, sure that he has found a woman well worth any man's respect, when she gives up the fight and goes to his apartment.

This strong situation is handled with delicacy. The mode in which feminine tenderness is expressed in resignation to forces apparently beyond resistance, while masculine commiseration is profoundly stirred, deserves high commendation.

The way out is found by rational and natural means with a happy termination for both cynic and the girl he started out to deliberately destroy. The girl, strong in sense of honor but weak in self-control and reason, is saved and assured of a chance for permanent happiness through a chance view of what her heart should have told her all along was her natural mission in life.

"The Cheval Mystery."

A Three-Reel Universal Production Presenting a Murder Mystery, With Hypnotism as a Supposed Incentive.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS offering, produced by Harry C. Myers, begins with a murder mystery. In the very first scene is shown the body of a man lying in the woods. A hunter is seen in the distance, nonchalantly looking for game. Then the observer sees a girl running through the woods, minus a hat. She pauses long enough to cast aside a revolver; the hunter then observes her kneeling beside a stream. The girl is in a hysterical state, and after drinking faints upon the rocks.

The opening scenes arouse the interest and are commendable for the effective manner in which they present the mystery. There is no padding and any number of possibilities for the crime are suggested.

Later the girl appears at the house where the body has been carried, inside the streets of the town. She is searching for her aunt, a Mrs. Streetor, and the lady of the house takes her in. A letter explains that her mother has died, leaving no one to care for her but Gaston Cheval, her father's stepbrother. The letter from the dying mother expresses distrust of Cheval, and later developments prove that this feeling on her part was by no means groundless.

The girl having found a home with her aunt soon has Cheval on her trail. He is a hypnotist of the Svengali type. His power over her was originally achieved while traveling with a side show and is exerted in such a manner that at his command the girl becomes a raging fiend. The hunter, who saw the girl in the woods, appears in due time and charges her with the murder. In the interim Cheval has been exercising his hypnotic influence to suit his own purposes. The scenes in the house during the girl's paroxysms are of a sensational, uncanny sort.

Scene from "The Cheval Mystery" (Universal).

Following the accusation the girl recovers herself and relates her story, telling the hero and his mother of her own mother's death and the way in which Cheval has victimized her. The latter is finally brought to confess that he himself committed the murder in the woods in order to rid himself of the girl's admirer. This frees Nana and at the close she and the hero find happiness together.

This story, hinging as it does upon hypnotic influence, is not very new in plot; neither does it possess any great depth of feeling. At the same time the opening scenes gain such a strong hold upon the observer that he is bound to wonder what the solution will be. It makes, accordingly, a picture that should have no difficulty in holding the interest until the close. Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby play the leads.

"The Governor's Boss."

William Sulzer Plays His Remarkable Story in a Five-Reel Picture—An Offering That Should Make Money Fast.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT is probable that popular prejudice will add to the money-making ability of this astonishing offering. In it, William Sulzer plays the leading role in a story the like of which American politics has not before turned up. It is melodramatic and is skillfully made to draw the spectator's sympathy for the ex-governor and to make the anger of that same spectator rise against the corrupt boss. The boss of this picture is not Murphy; but the man who knows and sees the picture will feel that, as far as politics goes, it is enough like that boss as he works, to make the disgust easily transferable. There is a big block of the story that, as far as I know, pretty accurately follows the working of the machine that effected the retirement of Sulzer.

Was there ever a picture like this? Sulzer was in the limelight and the motion picture camera got much real history with him the center of the action. Now we have a picture that isn't history; yet one that accommodates those scenes taken long before, perfectly. William Sulzer, himself, plays the intermediate scenes, patching the story together, the real with the melodramatic so that it looks like history. The script was written by ex-Senator James S. Barcus, who no doubt knows what politics is and, what is more, has made his story, the heart of it, amply convincing. The trained critic must deplore the forcing into the story of such banal and outworn expedients as the automobile race to get the evidence to the court in time to save the perfectly innocent hero of the tale, and also of such unconvincing things as the dictophone and camera, getting evidence in the office of the boss. That the family life of the boss was made colorful was wise; this is a melodrama and it would hardly have done to have drawn any particular person in this very unpleasant role.

Was there ever a picture before that could show the hero actually installed in the Capitol with the big political lights of a great state seen standing beside him? Sulzer plays his part well and as far as direction and acting go the offering is amply stisfying. It would be an interesting picture even if no one ever heard of New York State or of Sulzer. It is pretty sure of success.

If the exhibitor wants to get the most out of it, he will have to do some considering on his own account according to the place where his house is and to the kind of people who make up his audience. Properly advertised it should go like wildfire in most New York localities. There may be places where it would excite too much animosity to be a first-class offering and in others it might invite a disturbance, because there is no doubt that it gets over. In any place where spectators are complaining of the deadness of pictures, this will probably appeal to them as a live one.

World Film Activities.

Five directors are simultaneously working at World Film studios, Fort Lee, N. J., and elsewhere, on five great productions which will shortly be seen on the screen. Maurice Tourneur is making "The Cub," in which Martha Hedman is starred; Albert Capellani, Jose Collins in "The Imposters"; James Young, Clara Kimball Young in "Marrying Money"; Emile Chautard, Vivian Martin in "The Little Dutch Girl"; and Frank Crane, Robert Warwick in "The Stolen Voice."

"Brother Officers."

Leon Trevor's Delightful Melodrama Picturized in Four Reels for Paramount.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE human characters of this melodrama of English life would alone be enough justification for a picture. The story all the way through is full of the good quality that idealizes life just enough to pat, as it were, the spectator on the back, flattering him with the feeling that he knows a fine man and a thoroughbred woman when he sees them. They are in the picture and the players have made them most distinctly good company.

"Brother Officers," the play by Leon Trevor, has charmed many; and the London Film Company has made this offering for the Paramount that can hardly fail of marked success. Courage, love, devotion and sacrifice, these make the main theme and they are set forth in acceptable situations. But perhaps the real reason for the play's and the picture's future popularity is in the chief character's being a gentleman, not by birth and breeding, but by inherent right. The difference between him and the young man seated before the screen is chiefly in his luck that wins him money, and he turns out to be a brick, awkward at first, but in the end the best gentleman of them all.

Harald Shaw, an American director working in England, has conducted the story through four reels full of scenes alive with the atmosphere of reality. The acting and general management are artistic—the roughs are what they ought to be and the ladies and gentlemen are as convincing in their half of the picture. The role of Hines, the hero, is taken by Henry Ainley, and that of the villain Jim Stoddard, by Charles Rock, and there is no character not worthy of special mention. Bannister Merwin is responsible for the script adaptation.

The early scenes around the race track where Hines' father does a bookmaking business, helped by Stoddard, who robs him, are most interesting. The scenes at Klyber Pass, where Sergeant Hines, now grown up, saves the life of his captain, have good suggestions of a mountain district. Most of the remainder of the play is told in interior scenes that are very well photographed. The exterior scenes are a bit misty in the distance, due to English atmospheric conditions.

Due to the tremendous advertising of the great war, this picture of English army life should go well.

"The Marble Heart."

Universal Presents a Four-Reel Production of This Old-Time Drama, Dating Back to Civil War Days.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MANY of the older generation of picture goers will recognize in this Imp production a familiar old play. "The Marble Heart" was presented at the Boston Museum in 1864, and at that time contained elements of strong romantic interest. This screen adaptation, made by George A. Lessey, should find a welcome from those familiar with the early stage performances, and, while the method of presentation has been considerably infringed upon in other dramas, there will be some novelty in it for the present generation.

In the prologue all of the characters are supposed to be living in the days of Diogenes. The hero, a Greek scuptor, portrayed by King Baggot, is named Phidias. He carves three beautiful female statues at the behest of a wealthy citizen named Georgias. The latter appears and claims the statues, but the sculptor refuses to give them up. Diogenes appears with his lantern, looking for an honest man. He happens upon Phidias and learns his predicament. He then urges Phidias to ask the statues themselves if they wish to remain with him or go to Georgias. The statues come to life and decide to go with the rich man, leaving Phidias broken hearted.

All the prologue is adequately staged. The sculptor's studio is very complete and the fact that there is a slight jumble in the periods of the sculptures represented will probably not be widely noticed. The costuming has been well looked after and one or two good exteriors are shown.

Following the prologue the modern story begins. It practically re-enacts the opening story, in a longer and more complete way, with a new and happier ending. For each of the leading characters in the prologue there is a recognizable counterpart in the later story. Phidias has become a sculptor known as Raphael, Georgias is now the viscount, Diogenes is Volage, an editor, and Asphasia of the marble heart is now known as Marco.

One of the more entertaining features of the later story is the development of Marco's statue as it is carried on from day to day. In this part of the story the editor shows Raphael how cold of heart is Marco and his love finally turns to Marie, whose counterpart was the slave girl in the prologue.

In the production, beside Mr. Baggot, appear Frank Smith, Ned Reardon, Jane Fearnley, Miss Hunter and Miss Wierman.

WHETHER or not the player is the thing, he is usually enwrapped and partly veiled by a very thin sort of tulle, that of illusion. The robust and clear-eyed country girl of to-day is well armed with intelligence and home training against strolling Hamfats as a rule, but there are sentimental girls of semi-mentality and vague ideals who go to the matinee and shiver all over with delight when Roscious rants. To the weaklings of city and country "Through Turbulent Waters" may hold out a solemn warning, though most of them are easily hypnotized because they wish to be hypnotized.

Gertie McCoy as the feminine inanity who longs to go on the stage finally gets there by marrying, in all innocence, the actor who destroyed his first wife, her intimate friend. He trains her and secures an engagement for her to "play opposite" him in a drama of sensation, where she shoots him regularly with a blank cartridge. Now, the actor is being pursued by the vindictive father of his first victim. The father sends threatening notes of Teutonic frightfulness for a while and plans a dastardly murder. He carries this out by obtaining admission by unknown means to the property room and exchanging a fully loaded revolver for the one prepared with blank cartridges. No one examines the weapon before it is used and the newly-fledged star shoots her husband before a large and enthusiastic audience, killing him instantly. The real murderer repents in time to save her and kills himself. The story is well-handled by Duncan McRae and visualized with Edison thoroughness.

"Up From the Depths."

Four-Reel Reliance Feature Directed Against Hypocrisy in Religious and Social Reform.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT there are revivalists and reformers busy for what there is in it, from small change to large graft, that nobility of character is rarely the outgrowth of narrowness and formalism, that there are unscrupulous hypocrites in the world, is unpleasantly true, but this does not shift responsibility for their existence upon sincere religion nor upon honest reform, hence the ethics of "Up From the Depths" are somewhat obscure. The story is nevertheless interesting and gives Courtenay Foote opportunity for some very consistent acting. The presentation is handled with consummate skill in the large ensembles and works up to a high point in the last reparation of a villain who has scattered destruction all his life under a mask of doing good. He makes a dying attempt to remedy a wrong done an illegitimate child, but there is no compensation for the others who have suffered from his blackguardly selfishness and hypocrisy.

Treatment of this subject is accurate and very interesting at times. Its strength and its defects are those of naturalism in that it lifts the curtain upon scens rarely shown. There is strength in such scenes when used for purposes of contrast and weakness when their constant repetition seeks to be impressive and merely gratifies either mild or morbid curiosity. It is no longer considered artistry to depict a human being of intelligence, especially one not the victim of bad habits, as utterly lacking those better characteristics which go to make up composite human nature. Such villains are of the stage and the stage only. The release is treated with a skill worthy of stories having greater intrinsic merit.

"The Accomplice."

A Detective Picture by the Kalem Company—Interesting All Through and at the Climax Tensely Exciting.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

TRULY fulfilling the object of a detective story by holding the spectator in suspense, this two-reel Kalem picture, "The Accomplice," begins with a mystery presented in a fresh and pleasing way and continues through more than one well-pictured and exciting situation—at the closing of the first and opening of the second reel it is tense. We dare recommend it as a particularly good detective picture.

In direction, acting and all the departments of picture-making, it will pass muster, though the director, James W. Horne, has with that large ease that knows the friendly spectator will forgive small shortcomings in a truly interesting offering, shown the really furtive work of a couple of criminals done in the open street right before unnoticing passersby —it is, in one case, blue moonlight, yet early; for there are two little tots hand-in-hand and unaccompanied. They are not frightened either at seeing a man kidnapped. Real picture fans have got over the state of mind in which such things matter much, and this is very surely a better offering than a big percentage of detective films. Photography is one of the telling things in Kalem offerings and we might stop here to praise that in this picture.

Marin Sais plays the woman detective whose ability brings the guilt home to the criminal and saves the heir of a wealthy man from being done out of his inheritage and life. The villain is taken by Thomas Lingham with his usual telling shiftiness. There is a kid in the opening scenes who adds a good deal to their naturalness. Harris, the prey of the crooks, is done by W. H. West, and of the other characters there is none that with plenty of space, we would not mention to praise. The best thing in the offering is the easy and convincing flow of the incident, spontaneous and fresh for the most part, and for this a large part of the praise is probably due to the author, C. Doty Hobart.

Donald Mackenzie a Director by Chance.

Donald Mackenzie stopped work the other day on the big new feature he is making for Pathe—Richard Harding Davis' "The Galloper," long enough to tell how he became a director, and then in due course of events, a producer for Pathe.

"It was some three years ago," he said, "and I was playing the lead in a Pathe picture when the director fell sick, thus knocking everybody's plans galley-west. Chief Director (now general manager) Louis Gasnier, sent for me and asked me if I could direct a picture as well as act it. I failed to see my chance and didn't want to take the job, but Mr. Gasnier insisted that he had had his eye on me and knew I could do it. You see, the smell of the grease paint had become a habit and I didn't want to give it up to become the man behind the screen instead of before it. Well, I yielded, finished the picture and was given another. Ever since I have been a director, nor have I ever regretted the step. So you see I was kicked into being a director with Mr. Gasnier as the propelling force!"

Lesser Visits State Prison.

Sol Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., recently visited the California State Prison at San Quentin.

On this occasion he took with him George Kleine's "The Last Days of Pompeii"; also a single reel of the world's fair, showing the day and night scenes at the exposition and Art Smith's night flights.

Art Smith, the world's greatest aviator, accompanied Mr. Lesser on the trip. Mr. Smith lectured at the prison, telling the inmates of his experiences in the air.

The purpose of Mr. Lesser's trip was to inaugurate a policy which he has been thinking about for a long time—that is, furnishing both the State Prison at San Quentin and Folsom, Cal., with a moving picture program each week. As there is no fund provided by the State to take care of these matters, Mr. Lesser is going to furnish these shows gratis.

Director Edward Dillon Burned Out.

Edward Dillon, the Komic director, came home late one night last week to find his bungalow on fire and a number of his associates at the Mutual studios trying to put the flames out. Half of them were in their night clothes, but their work was praised by the Los Angeles fire department when it arrived. Among the fire fighters were W. E. Lawrence, Chester Withey, Irne Hunt, Walter Long, Franc Newman, Teddy Sampson, George Beranger, George Seigman, Fay Tincher and Ford Sterling. The blaze was caused by crossed wires and resulted in serious damage.

That very day Dillon had moved a piano and other expensive furniture into his home and he lost all of it. The misfortune was a serious matter to him as he carried no insurance, but he has borne his loss philosophically. His chief regret seems to be that no camera man was presnt to photograph the scene.

"The Criminal."

adopted daughter of the leader of a band of criminals, is the big figure in the story; the one, it may be imagined, that inspired all of the others and gave the author the idea for the plot. Reflected through the persuasive personality of Miss Talmadge, Nell is an irresistibly sympathetic girl in her struggle to remain good despite the adverse influence of the nefarious Wells. It is a character that almost invites overacting, yet this young actress reaches the emotions without once straining for effects and always succeeds in conveying the thought behind the action.

There is a nicely balanced melodramatic plot in "The Criminal," and because of the skill exercised in its handling and the uniformally strong acting, one unconsciously overlooks the conventional relationship on which the big scenes are based. Frequently enough we have met district attorneys placed in the unpleasant predicament of prosecuting their own children; still the situation remains good for a few heart throbs when treated with the sincerity that distinguishes the performances in this picture. Maurice Costello, as the district attorney, Mr. Brooke, Thomas Mills and several others, share the honors with Miss Talmadge in emphasizing the human note essential in a melodrama of this type.

Events are so arranged that Nell is accused of shooting a government official and through a mistaken sense of loyalty to Wells, whom she believes to be her father, she refuses to tell the truth and bring about his conviction. An old letter establishes the fact that she is the daughter of the district attorney and the imaginary blood ties having been removed, she establishes the guilt of the arch crook and returns to her rightful parents, not forgetting, however, the woman who befriended her through years of misfortune.

"The Romance of Elaine."

Opening Episode of the Romantic Period of Elaine's Life Introduces Lionel Barrymore and the Mysterious Mr. X.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE LOST TORPEDO," which will be remembered in the last episode of "The Exploits of Elaine," has woven itself into a title for the opening chapter of "The Romance of Elaine." In this continuation of the life story of Elaine, we do not find exactly a continuation of the old series, which dealt altogether with the exploits or adventures of the pretty heroine, but merely a relationship without losing sight entirely of the old thread, and to all intents and purposes a development of the romantic side of Elaine's nature, the revelation of the heart of the woman, and a few more adventures which have their original in the lost torpedo model, the invention of Craig Kennedy, some entirely new faces appear in the cast, including that of Lionel Barrymore and the mysterious Mr. X, whose identity will be revealed to us at some future date. That Creighton Hale and Pearl White are still with us goes without saying, and their pleasant anticipation in the almost certain knowledge that Arnold Daly in the guise of the detective who disappeared will be forthcoming at a not far distant date.

"The Romance of Elaine" has opened with elaborate staging, natural action and logical development, and perhaps a little more domesticity. The foreigner, Marcius Del Mar (Lionel Barrymore), introducing himself to Elaine and Jamieson as a secret service agent from Washington in search of information with regard to Kennedy and the lost torpedo, and the mysterious man who follows in his wake, temporarily paralyzing with poisonous gas Marcius Del Mar and Elaine, bring with them mystery and thrill that promises to be equal to that experienced in connection with the former series.

NAT GOODWIN IN "THE MASTER HAND."

Of course Nat Goodwin about five years ago was a picturized Fagin in "Oliver Twist." Since then Nat has added to his fame by writing a book about the five wives he has had. Some of us think that a man who has had five wives and lives to write a book about them, deserves a monument. "The Master Hand" by Carroll Fleming is the title of the vehicle in which Mr. Goodwin is to be filmed. The picture will probably be released through World Film. Nat's support will include Lillian Lawson, Theo Babcock, Alex Calvert, R. Vivian, Basil Lynn.

"The Arab."

A Lasky Production in Which Edgar Selwyn Is Featured to Advantage.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE ARAB" shows a close and profitable study of eminent motion picture classics. The artful parading of the camels on the Arabian deserts and the wild dash of the Bedouins to rescue their young chief from perdition are reminiscent of two well-known photoplays which have by common consent been placed in the category of masterpieces.

It must not be thought, however, that there are no other merits in this film play. California, which provides every conceivable geographical setting that a motion picture producer may want, is quite capable of reproducing the atmosphere of the desert while the artistic directors were no less equal in reproducing the oriental villages with their bazaars and their picturesque disorder. There were one or two "mass pictures" portraying an oasis which were very pretty and drew a ripple of applause from the audience. The glimpses we catch of the patriarchal life among the Bedouin tribes were delightful and abounded in the true "picture" quality. As these sons of the desert lived and died, the educated eye had visions of the venerable old men celebrated in the Old Testament. The suggestion is very subtle but all the more effective for that. It was the Arab seated under the eternal stars in the vast solitude of the desert who first grasped the vastness as well as the unity of God. The atmosphere of the play brings this thought to the surface.

Direction and photography in the film play are excellent and have accomplished much with materials somewhat above the average in the way of plot and story. There are the highly prized "punches" but they are not dragged in with a derrick nor is any of the genuine dramatic strength sacrificed through a desire to create "punches." The settings are very fine, many of them must have been specially built for the occasion. They do much credit to the production. Mr. Selwyn made a very plausible Arab. The "comedy-relief" fathered by our ponderous friend Irvin S. Cobb won its intended meed of laughter. The cast was good, Mr. Roberts again challenging our admiration by his splendid portrayal of the wicked and deceitful Turkish governor.

It did seem to me as if the final scenes were at moments approaching the fatal borderland of the anti-climax. A climax it is well known to all exhibitors who book big features must be like the finale of an overture, whether the end comes with a crash or with the gentle dying plaint of the violin—we must know and feel that it is the end and that we need not wait for any thing more after that.

More Griffith Pictures.

"Man's Genesis" and "The Battle of Elderbush Gulch" Included in Second Installment of Notable Biograph Re-issues.

too seldom attained in more recent releases. Several of the titles on the program for weekly issue, beginning July 23, are famous in photoplay history, and in their entirety it would be difficult to select any six subjects better calculated to show the broadness of Griffith's scope in taking totally dissimilar themes and treating each surpassingly well. The new list reads, "Man's Genesis," "The Battle of Elderbush Gulch," "Her Mother's Oath," "The Last Drop of Water," "Death's Marathon" and "The Sheriff's Baby."

"Man's Genesis" created considerable comment when first released and started the vogue of pre-historic subjects. Nothing of the kind had been attempted before. Griffith was defying conventions when he imagined the first activities of a man's mind and proceeded to picture the initial conflict between mind and matter, with Robert Harron as Weakhands, Wilfred Lucas as Bruteforce, Mae Marsh as Lillywhite and W. Chrystie Miller as Grandfather. The production stands today without a peer among the many portrayals of elementary humans.

Then there is the two-reel western drama, "The Battle of Elderbush Gulch," which the producer is credited as ranking among his three best creations, the others being, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Judith of Bethulia." Apart from the spectacular quality of the fight between the Indians and the settlers, the picture is notable for the consummate skill with which intimate human touches are woven into the action—the introduction of a baby and two ragged little dogs, whose fate at the hands of the Indians becomes vitally important. Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Henry B. Walthall, Robert Harron, W. Chrystie Miller and W. C. Robinson are among the players in a remarkable cast.

"Her Mother's Oath," played by Jennie Lee, Dorothy Gish, Henry B. Walthall, Charles H. Mailes and Robert Harron is a powerful drama, of which the outstanding feature is Miss Lee's portrayal of the stern mother. In "The Last Drop of Water" we find a tense picture of the western desert with Blanche Sweet as the girl and Charles H. West and Joseph Graybill acting the suitors. "Death's Marathon" is a marvelous piece of plot construction, original and unrelentingly dramatic as played by Blanche Sweet, Henry B. Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Walter Miller and Robert Harron. "The Sheriff's Baby," the last of the six, and perhaps the least impressive, is a cowboy melodrama presenting Harry Carey and many other favorites of the early Biograph releases.

Critics See "The Rosary."

On Tuesday afternoon, June 8, the Selig Red Seal play, "The Rosary," was given its initial presentation in the projection rooms of the Selig Polyscope Company, Garland Bldg., Chicago, Ill. The showing was given for the benefit of film reviewers, newspapermen and others. "The Rosary" will be released as a Red Seal play in seven reels on June 28.

Among those present was Mr. Clifford, who originally produced the drama as a play on the speaking stage. Edward E. Rose, author of the original work and also of the screen adaptation, wrote from his Wisconsin home complimenting the production.

"I am certainly delighted with the film dramatization of "The Rosary," said Mr. Clifford, "not a detail necessary to attain the true atmosphere is missing. It is a beautiful production in every respect."

"The Moonstone."

Wilkie Collins' Mystery Story Is Made into Five-Part Picture by Director Crane of the World Film.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN "The Moonstone" Wilkie Collins wrote a thoroughly mysterious mystery story, part Oriental, part western in its atmosphere and in many respects a likely subject for photoplay treatment. The plot is so complicated, so filled with unexpected twists and misplaced suspicions—after the moonstone has been stolen—that it demanded particularly careful development at the hands of Director Frank Crane. On the screen, as in print, a tale of this description must be followed with close attention, and in either case the reward will be an ingeniously contrived, highly colored romance—a story pleasantly removed from the prosaic facts of everyday life.

So fine are the settings in this five-part production that they warrant prominent mention. Starting with scenes in an Indian temple, where an Englishman removes the precious moonstone from the eye of the idol, the action shifts, nominally to England, but actually to the estate of a New York millionaire. And a luxurious estate it is, with glorious gardens and structures of palatial proportions. Interiors and exteriors are alike attractive and in finding actors who appeared at home in such costly surroundings, the World Film director displayed good judgment. Free from incongruities in its physical environment and appropriately cast, the picture maintains a consistently high tone.

Elaine Hammerstein is a charmingly natural girl as Rachel Verinder, into whose possession the stolen moonstone passes, a gift from her fiance, Blake. Three Indian priests go to England, determined to recover the stone which mysteriously disappears from Rachel's jewel case. Eugene O'Brien presents a correct figure as Blake, unjustly suspected of the theft; Ruth Findlay plays Rosanna, the maid, and William Rosell is Godfrey White. The solution of the theft is reserved until the last reel, when everything is explained in a way that should bring something of a surprise to an audience.

"The Kick-Out."

First Release of the Knickerbocker Star Features to Appear on the Program of the General Film Co. Is Gripping Political Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN VIEW of the fact that the large majority of the feature films turned loose on the market are adaptations from plays and books from a field of literature in many respects remote from the literature of the screen, reflecting therefore only a minor part of the creative ingenuity of the arranger, this three-reel Knickerbocker Star Feature, which, with its easily remembered title has been heralded with modest enthusiasm, is doubly interesting.

The scenario from which "The Kick-Out" was made is an original one, written by C. J. Harris, a writer comparatively new in the field who has attacked the problem of the original scenario with unusual vigor, and not a little success.

"The Kick-Out" is founded on "Boss" tyranny. The theme of the story has been well concentrated, and the treatment of said theme in the hands of director Robt. Thornby is worthy of note, for the picture in its finished state is intensely realistic, it is teeming with action which is consistent, and the general detail of the production is good.

Being essentially a story of men, the male types set forth in the constitution of the picture are unusually impressive. For instance, Ralph Stuart as the mayor of the city whose inclination toward justice and moral equation makes it easy for his daughter's influence to weigh heavily in the right direction, Mac Barnes as the "Boss," the total failure of whose dishonorable purpose forms the climax of the story, George W. Howard as the editor and prospective son-in-law of the mayor, and James Levering as Jerry of the editor's executive staff, who with the "Boss'" false affidavits brought hither by a spying stenographer, carefully hidden in his trouser leg, attempts to hold at bay the would-be retrievers of the loss of the false statements. These, with Helen Case as the mayor's daughter, and others equally competent in the smaller parts allotted them form a cast, who, for their ability to carry out the artistic intention of the play, can scarcely be overrated.

"The Kick-Out" as stated above is the first of the Knickerbocker Star Features to be released on the regular program of the General Film Company.

"Midnight at Maxim's."

New York Night Life Is Brought to the Screen in Kalem Picture, Enlivened by Many Chorus Girls.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

FOR THE inauguration of its new policy, whereby multiple-reel productions are to be given to exhibitors on the regular program the Kalem Company conceived something heretofore unknown to picturedom, a screen portrayal of gayest spots in gay New York in the wee small hours of the morning. In the short space of four reels—it seems short when one is looking at the picture—the revues at Rector's, Bustanoby's and Maxim's are presented precisely as they occur nightly. We have the same girls, the same costumes, the same dances and if the orchestra leader regards the instructions given by the Kalem Company, we will have the same music. If ever a picture were adapted to carry the glitter of Broadway into the dullness of a village evening this is it.

Scene from "Midnight at Maxim's" (Kalem).

George L. Sargent directed the production and to him belongs the credit of catching the spirit of Maxim's when the tables are filled, when the orchestra plays and the dancing girls, in colorful costumes, occupy the floor. The setting for this scene is an exact imitation of Maxim's, and the guests used to provide a background for the performers are true to type—the trio of men out for a good time, all readily susceptible to the blonde beauty of Tottie Twinkletoes; the after-theater supper party with a conservative dowager for chaperone; the westerner and his over-dressed wife, who have come to New York to see the sights; the smoothly groomed youth, described by George Ade as being all right from the collar down—we meet these and many more during the course of the evening and they are as much a part of "Midnight at Maxim's" as the dancers themselves.

Supplementing the many ensembles in this unusual picture are several dances of classic pretentions, two of them given by Baroness Irmgard von Rottenthal, others by the Cameron girls and still others by Bert Weston and Dorothy Ozuman. Clearly photographed and performed in perfect time, these numbers are a distinct asset to the production. First interest, however, undoubtedly will center in the splendid array of chorus girls. It is safe to assume that such an assortment of beauty has never in the past been offered in any one picture, and the camera man was kind enough to allow the audience close views of the faces of his most alluring subjects. Every now and again, just by way of a change, the dance is interrupted that one smiling face may monopolize the screen and then, as likely as not, the camera will be lowered for a foreground giving a comprehensive view of the complicated dancing steps in execution. Four reels of a dancing picture may seem a lot, and so it would be, had not the director succeeded in injecting considerable variety.

Of course, there is no real story, but there is a connecting thread in the adventures of the three men who select Maxim's for a gay little party and become rashly extravagant in their efforts to meet Tottie Twinkletoes. Having paid for the privilege, they are, in turn, taken to the chorus girls' dressing room and introduced, and thereafter their enthusiasm for the performers and for Tottie, in particular, knows no bounds. Incidents of this kind provide occasional bits of comedy in a production that is unique and extremely well handled in every respect.

Getting Newspaper Co-operation.

Big Four Management Plans Extensive Plan to Establish a Motion Picture Page in Local Papers.

By C. R. Seelye, Assistant General Manager.

THE days of supplying exhibitors with pictures and then letting them worry along and get what they can out of them has gone by. Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay realized this when they affiliated their feature interests.

The Big Four are in business to make money, and they know that the only way to make money is to help the exhibitor make money. The industry has now reached the stage where the manufacturer must help the exhibitor "re-sell to the public." The efforts of the V-L-S-E to increase box office receipts for exhibitors are directed along two distinct lines—the production of exceptionally meritorious features and the equally important work of conducting a campaign to secure proper recognition of motion pictures from every newspaper in the nation.

Every newspaper of any consequence runs a sporting page, while motion picture news is either ignored, or poorly edited, and given very little space. More people are interested in motion picture news than are interested in baseball; consequently, more people will read a well edited picture department than read the sporting page.

We have instructed every branch manager and every salesman on the road that his first duty is to interest the newspaper publishers in the establishment of a motion picture page, and that a page of this kind will increase circulation, which in turn increases advertising.

The V-L-S-E representatives have been furnished with definite, intelligent arguments in favor of motion picture pages, and they have been instructed to present these arguments to the editors and publishers, and to keep everlastingly at it, until every paper in their individual territory gives as much space to motion picture news as is given to sports.

Another condition that we intend to bring about is the readjustment of newspaper advertising rates. We are pointing out to the publishers of the country that motion pictures should not be confused with theatricals, and that the advertisements for picture theaters should not be charged at the amusement rate, which is in all cases higher than the regular display advertising rates, and in view of the fact that a greater amount of advertising can be secured from the picture theaters than is secured from the department stores, newspapers should give to the exhibitor the same low advertising rate that is accorded the department stores.

Our salesmen have been instructed to first go to the newspapers, present their arguments and offer to co-operate with the newspaper, not only for their news columns, but in the matter of advertising as well.

One of the main reasons exhibitors are not at the present time getting a proper return on their investment for feature films lies in the fact that they are not properly advertised.

It pays to advertise an article of merit, provided the advertising rate is reasonable, and we intend to secure proper advertising rates for the exhibitors.

The main reason that many western exhibitors have been so successful with the exhibition of features that they can afford to pay high prices, and in consequence secure the best in features, is because they are big users of newspaper advertising space.

In Seattle the exhibitors spend over $60,000 per year with the newspapers. Several of them use full-page ads. to announce their feature attractions, and they hold the features until the maximum number of people possible to attract in that city have been brought into the theater.

The Big Four realizes that the exhibitor has little time to spend on arguing with the newspapers, and that individually his voice would be small. Also, the average exhibitor, not being a newspaper or an advertising man, would not know how to properly present solid business facts in connection with his demand for a moving picture page.

The Big Four is fighting for him. We are endeavoring to show every publisher that not only is moving picture news of great interest to his readers, but that the publication of such a deparment will be exceedingly profitable in the way of securing a large volume of new advertising.

When we have succeeded in awakening every newspaper to the value of running a motion picture page, and have impressed the value of advertising upon every exhibitor, the theaters will receive the maximum return on their feature exhibitions and the manufacturer will profit to the extent of getting a proper return on the money expended on productions.

How Las Vegas Got Pictures.

An Advertising Campaign That Resulted in Landing a Selig Company.

AS a matter of fact, the pictures didn't go to Las Vegas at all but, like Mohammed, Las Vegas went to the pictures. The enterprising metropolis in New Mexico has long believed that every environment possible to put the punch into motion pictures could be found right there in that garden spot of the world. The trouble was that Las Vegas couldn't induce the motion picture man to see it. He either went through that locality and viewed it from a Pullman or passed it by on the other side.

Then one Phil H. LeNoir, secretary of the Las Vegas Commercial Club, went to the front. Recently arrived, he really perceived things that the oldest residents had been looking at for years but had never really seen.

"Advertise your climatic and scenic wares," he said. "Advertise them just like any other merchandise. Tell the motion picture producers all about Las Vegas and its wonderful scenery through the motion picture trade journals. In other words: 'It pays to advertise.'"

This proposition was greeted with hearty laughter. Such adjectives as ridiculous, crazy, etc., could be heard re-echoing from the beautiful mountains and vales surrounding Las Vegas. Consequently that city remained motion pictureless. Finally the energetic young man was granted the munificent sum of $50 per month to "spend judiciously." He proceeded to spend it judiciously in motion picture trade journals. He had to spend it judiciously because a $50 monthly advertising appropriation will not go so very far, you know. And then, according to Mr. LeNoir, there followed the deluge. The results of that advertising in the Moving Picture World proved that publications devoted to motion pictures are almost universally read. "Replies came from Maine, from Florida and from California," says Mr. LeNoir. "Replies came from director, from author, from promoter and from the 'wild-catter' and from the 'green-goods man.' Some of them had the most beautiful stock-selling schemes you ever heard of, outdoing

Some of the Big Stuff

Mr. Wallingford in every detail. One bunch calmly informed Las Vegas that they would honor us with their presence if the city would deposit the 'mere trifle' of $5,000 in the bank to 'cover their moving expenses.' Another claimed that he could get more work out of a ten-dollar-a-week amateur than a $100 week profession and urged economy. Another has invented a new camera and yet another gentle grafter wished to move a motion picture college of acting into our midst. It was surely a moving occasion.

"To make a long story short, we dropped the advertising and tried the personal work. Nothing doing and so we returned to printer's ink. And then, lo and behold, printer's ink accomplished its work. An agent for William N. Selig visited Las Vegas. He viewed the wonderful scenery and he interviewed the people. The result is that Tom Mix, the western Selig star, and his company are coming to us to produce a series of western picture plays and perhaps remain permanently in our midst. We are tickled nearly to death. The silver cornet band is rehearsing. Advertising pays!"

Famous Players Secure James Durkin.

Noted Feature Director Joins Increased Producing Staff of Famous Players Eastern Organization.

ANOTHER important acquisition to the producing staff has just been effected by the Famous Players Film Co., in adding to its standing staff of directors James Durkin, one of the most renowned feature directors in the world. With the able directors recently secured by this company, the Famous Players' list of producers is now even more formidable than it has been in the past.

Mr. Durkin represents the younger and more aggressive type of motion picture director, yet his past activities have been sufficiently varied and cover a period long enough to place him in the very van of successful motion picture producers. Mr. Durkin was for two years chief director of the Thanhouser Company, during the greater part of which period he produced the Maude Fealy features. Among his more notable screen creations, however, can be recorded "Dope," one of the first six reel features ever produced.

More recently, Mr. Durkin has come into prominence through his direction of Betty Nansen in "The Celebrated Scandal," and "Anna Karenina." His latest subject, "The Running Fight," which was produced for the Paramount Pictures Corp., created a veritable sensation, at its initial presentation. Recognizing the fact that Mr. Durkin typifies the more rugged and vigorous element of directorial ability, the Famous Players Film Co. will assign to his direction the subjects requiring particularly virile treatment. In accordance with this intention, Mr. Durkin's first production for the Famous Players Film Co. will be an elaborate feature film production of "The Incorrigible Dukane," by George C. Shedd, a unique combination of drama, comedy, and spectacle, in which John Barrymore will star.

The comedy of the subject is derived from a series of ludicrous misfortunes of which John Barrymore, as the young and incorrigible Dukane, is the constant victor; the drama from the thrilling manner in which the ne'er-do-well redeems himself, and saves the fortune and honor of his father, and the spectacular effects are accomplished by the explosion of a huge dam in the course of construction by the senior Dukane, which is saved from total destruction only by the quick-wittedness and resourcefulness of Dukane Junior.

These varying elements of photoplay composition should effectively prove the versatility of both John Barrymore and the director.

"In Leash," a Drama of Power.

Marian Swayne Displays Remarkable Emotional Ability in Minister's New United Drama.

A DRAMA must have real dramatic appeal to bring tears to the eyes of the scene shifters who have been hardened against emotion of any kind from constant association with the sham of the stage. So the fact that even the stage hands shamefacedly wiped their eyes and sniffed under their breaths when Marian Swayne finished her powerful scene before the camera in the two-part photodrama "In Leash," at the Flushing studios of the Empress Company the other day is significant of the unusual quality of the work of the young United Program actress in this play. Miss Swayne nerself was exhausted, and the other members of the company were unashamedly in tears. In this play, as in few other plays in which she has appeared, has the little emotional star had an opportunity to display her ability as in this latest study in psychology and morality from the pen of Rev. Clarence J. Harris.

In this drama, the plot centers about the moral regeneration of a wealthy young renegade by the steady, unswerving belief in his better self manifested by a young shop girl in his father's employ. When the love and generosity of parents have failed to bring him back to his better sense. When the young women of his social circle have lost entire grip on him, he is saved by the girl whom he himself would have harmed. Miss Swayne's delicate understanding of the part, her sympathy and her dramatic power make for a splendid success. She is supported by Joseph Levering and Flavia Arcaro.

Interest Shown in Great Northern Feature.

Unusual interest is manifested by state right buyers throughout the country in the next release of the Great Northern Film Company which is a four reel dramatic production entitled: "The Heart Of Lady Alaine," or "A Revolutionary Wedding." The picture is an adaptation of the well-known drama by the famous dramatist, Sophus Michaelis, which had a long and successful run at the New Theater, New York City.

Betty Nansen, the celebrated royal actress, plays the role of Lady Alaine, whose personality of spirit and fire she most charmingly and appropriately interprets.

The picture is most elaborately and tastefully staged, and the magnificent exterior scenery was carefully selected for its harmonious accord.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE STOLEN CASE" (MinA).

In spite of the fact that the first picture of the series was released but a few weeks ago—on June 3rd to be exact—the new MinA Films have already registered an extraordinary success. This speaks volumes for the efforts of the MinA producers to make one-reel comedies along unusual lines.

Each of the pictures so far released has had for its basis a corking scenario which gave action to every foot of film. To this was added excellent work by the cast, cameraman and the director, Milton H. Fahrney.

The release for Thursday, June 24, is called "The Stolen Case," and tells the story of Jerry's adventures, which run the gamut from jail breaking to his entrance into society as a pseudo-prince. The situations arising from such changes in social positions make this picture a laugh-provoker from start to finish.

DUPLEX MACHINE COMPANY ENLARGES PLANT.

The Duplex Machine Company of 316 75th Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., manufacturer of standard motion picture machinery, is adding an additional floor on their present structure to take care of their increasing output, and when completed will be able to take care of the trade more promptly.

Amongst the numerous articles manufactured by this company and most worthy of mention is the Double Duplex Camera, the most unique and up to the minute camera on the market to-day. Camera takes two pictures at one operation, automatic dissolving shutter, with easy counting devices making double exposure work easy. Camera can be used singly if required and is no larger than the average camera of to-day.

The Duplex Polishing Machine is the last word in cleaning machines.

The Duplex Machine Company has completed a rewinder, having all steel gears, and disc turning same direction as handle, geared 5 to 1. It is absolutely fool proof, as gears are all enclosed in neat housing.

The latest model of the famous Duplex Step Printer will be shown at the new plant shortly.

MINUSA CINE PRODUCTS CO. BREAKS RECORD.

The Minusa Cine Products Company, of St. Louis, shipped sixteen Minusa screens to various parts of the country, on Decoration Day, May 31st. The factory force was compelled to work part of the holiday to finish up some of the orders that reached the office late.

E. R. Anderson, who was still at his office in the Houser building at half past seven o'clock, when everybody else in town seemed to be out in the parks and gardens having a good time, said that he doesn't know what a holiday looks like any more, but he is willing to slave on Decoration Day, or any other day, as long as the books of the company are being decorated with orders for Minusa Gold Fibre Screens.

KLEINE ACTOR HAS VARIED CAREER.

Cyril Keightley, who appears with Miss Irene Fenwick in George Kleine's latest feature, "The Spendthrift," recently completed at the Kleine New York studios, is a man of varied attainments and large experience. Keightley is an Australian by birth and received his first theatrical training in that far-off British possession. Like most good Australians, however, he was not content until he had visited the mother country and there obtained the first really serious work of his career. At Stratford-on-Avon he was engaged by F. R. Benson and appeared with him in twenty-six Shakespearean plays. He then went to London, where he played in all the principal theaters, including Drury Lane, where his interpretation of the villain in "The Whip" won him quick fame.

In America Cyril Keightley is well remembered for his excellent Charles Hawtreys in "The Little Damozel," his Hilary Cutts in "The New Sin" and Colonel Felt in "The Spy." His extraordinary work as Richard Laird in "The Song of Songs," Irene Fenwick's starring vehicle which recently closed its long run at the Eltinge theater, New York, suggested him as the ideal actor to portray the interesting character of Richard Ward in Kleine's "The Spendthrift."

"THE OLD HIGH CHAIR" (Majestic).

"The Old High Chair," a two-reel Majestic release of June 27th in the Mutual program, is the sort of drama that touches to life the fundamental emotions and strikes home to the hearts of young and old with a sure appeal. Gladys Brockwell, Marguerite Loveridge, W. E. Lawrence, Ray Myers and C. Elliot Griffin are the principal players in the cast. Miss Brockwell's acting of a difficult and exacting role and one requiring several changes in age and in appearance is deserving of especial mention and commendation. Alone as the result of her children's marriage, death or departure and her husband's death on the field of battle, an old woman wanders into the attic of her home and comes upon the high chair of her children. This stirs recollections, and as she sits there in the attic the events of her life pass in review before her. In a vision she sees again the day of her home-coming as a bride and the happy years spent with her husband and growing children. The first great sorrow, the death of her only daughter, is lived over again.

The call of adventure robs her of her young son, Jack, and when war is declared, her husband and elder son go out. The latter returns without his father and soon marries and goes away to the city to build up a fortune. The old mother has recently visited him and his beautiful wife and despite the fact that they urge her to remain with hem their home does not seem like her own and she leaves. So she returns to her own cottage and as she sits in the attic, brooding over the past, a step sounds on the stairs. A tall figure enters and crosses the room and folds the old lady in his arms. It is Jack, her son, returned from the sea, and the two laugh and cry and kiss as the scene fades out.

"ALWAYS IN THE WAY" (Metro).

The next release of the Metro Pictures Corporation will be the Dyreda Art Film's production of Charles K. Harris' song story, "Always in The Way," in which Mary Miles Minter makes her debut on the Metro program. "Always in The Way" as a song, swept the country some ten years ago and when Charles K. Harris decided to develop a big subject, from one of his most impressive songs he selected "Always in The Way" as the most fitting. J. Searle Dawley of the Scene from "Always in the Way" (Dyreda).

Dyreda had charge of the staging of the piece and succeeded in carrying out Mr. Harris' intent, to perfection. A number of the African scenes were staged at Nassua in the Bahama Islands, with the native colored population reaping a harvest as "Zulus."

Mary Miles Minter was last seen on the speaking stage in the Metropolitan production of "The Littlest Rebel" in which Dustin and William Farnum starred. She was referred to by the New York papers as the littlest and most artistic leading woman on the American stage.

"Always in The Way" will be released by Metro Monday, June 21st. It is in five acts and contains two hundred and sixty-four scenes. The production required three months to make, part of which time was spent in transit to the Bahamas, to Jacksonville, Florida, and Saranac Lake, New York. A strong cast of players support Miss Minter in the picture.

"THE SACRIFICE" (Lubin).

In the twelfth number of the Lubin "Road o' Strife" serial, released June 21, in which the Lubin Company is featuring Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson, the action becomes intensely dramatic and thrilling. Robert Dane solves the mystery of Gilbert Jerome's death and the part played by the silver cup.

Detectives capture Dane, but Daisy, the show-girl, escapes with the cup, breaks into the residence of the governor and tragically proves in his presence that the poison which killed Jerome is contained in the metal of the cup and that this unknown poison is neutralized and even made a beneficial tonic when acted upon by the minerals in the water in the spring. As Alene is led from her cell to the scaffold, word comes that the governor has granted a reprieve.

In this chapter of the serial are Mary Charleson, Crane Wilbur, Francis Joyner, Howard Mitchell, Peter Lang, James Burns, Herbert Fortier and Rosetta Brice.

"THE WOMAN FROM WARRENS" (Majestic).

"The Woman from Warrens," a two-reel Majestic, enlists a cast of uniform acting strength. Lucille Younge, F. A. Turner, "Billy" Hutton and Charles West are the principals.

The central situation deals with Wynona Ware, who has suffered wrong at the hands of Hanson Landing. By chance she meets him again when she registers at a little country resort hotel. She finds him in the full tide of making love to Alice Thompson, daughter of Fred Thompson, manager of the hotel. Landing is arranging a mock marriage with Alice when Wynona, the woman from Warrens (Warrens being the name of the New Jersey town in which Wynona and Landing lived) comes to Alice's aid. Wynona takes Alice's place in the elopement and does not reveal her identity until they are on a lonely road. There she covers him with a revolver and makes him promise to leave the country permanently.

There is a pretty interest between Wynona, played by Lucille Younge and Fred Thompson (F. A. Turner). Thompson gets his foot caught in a railroad "frog" at the crossing. His daughter Alice faints with fright, but Wynona is able to tear him loose. This arouses Thompson's admiration and later his affection. In the end Wynona marries Thompson.

"HIS WIFE'S PAST" (United Pyramid).

"His Wife's Past" sees Ruth Blair, the young emotional actress, playing with Edwin August, Iva Shepard and Bill Bailey in Pyramid pictures on the United Program at her best as a portrayer of highly colorful roles. Indeed her feeling for the part—that of a young wife who comes almost to the point of losing her husband's trust and affections and who now holds the former circumstances over her head for blackmail—makes her interpretation of it very remarkable. The drama itself holds one spellbound by its tense situations.

Scene from "His Wife's Past" (Pyramid).

The scenes are lavishly designed and set, according to the usual artistic methods of Edwin August. This will be the third offering of the Pyramid Company. Those who have seen the highly artistic productions of "The Law of Nature" and "Canned Curiosity" will appreciate the unusual quality of the latest drama by Pyramid players when they learn that it is even more carefully and expensively produced than the first two. It will be released June 26.

"PROVIDENCE AND MRS. URMY" (Essanay).

This is a thrilling three-act romance of an American heiress who weds a nobleman without knowing it. Her mother is determined that her daughter wed a man of rank, but the girl is independent and contrary to the ordinary story of this character declares that she will wed only for love. Her mother takes her to Europe to introduce her into high social circles. When she is being driven alone to the place where she is to stay she proposes to the chauffeur that they enter into a marriage in name only, as she fears her mother will force her to wed against her will. They go to a cottage to live and the chauffeur finally wins her love. He then reveals to the girl that he is the very man that her mother wished her to marry. They then return to the husband's estate and the girl is happy. Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman take the leading parts. Released June 29.

Scene from "Providence and Mrs. Urmy" (Essanay).

"WHICH SHALL IT BE?" (Thanhouser).

Long ago Edwin Thanhouser proved that he was a master hand at children's stories, and he has begun the release again, evidence that he can still excel himself. On June 22d he will release "Which Shall It Be?" in two reels. This is founded on the famous old home-circle poem of that name. To read the lines one's emotions are stirred, but the opportunities in the filming increase the effect. It tells of a wealthy man who offers a poor couple comfort for life if they will give him one of their seven children. At night, when the little ones are all asleep, the parents steal softly in to choose the child to be given away. They stop at each tot, but find a reason why they want to keep that one—and pass on to the next.

"Which shall it be—which shall it be?"

"I looked at John—John looked at me."

The little cripple becomes most precious; and the bad boy of the lot—well, he needs a mother's care. And so they write back that they cannot give one away.

Zana Williams plays the mother in sweetly simple fashion, and Ernest Warde the father. All the Thanhouser juniors come in for a strong share of the work; Helen Badgley, Leland Benham, the Fairbanks Twins and a few additions make up the seven children. The handling of the little story in two reels makes it an offering of standard value that will be heard from.

Scene from "Which Shall It Be?" (Thanhouser).

"THE WAR O' DREAMS" (Selig).

"The War O' Dreams" is a Selig three-reel Diamond Special, presenting a strong and convincing argument against the destruction of human lives wrought by warfare. It was written by W. E. Wing.

Arthur Ensign, an aged inventor, and his wife live together in poverty so that Bessie, their daughter, may receive an education in a distant seminary. Ensign invents a powerful explosive. It undergoes a successful test by the government. Ensign, exhausted by his long hours of work in his laboratory, falls asleep and dreams that he has become a general in an army; that an invading army is ravaging the country, and that finally he is called upon to bring into play his new explosive, "Trixite," which by the ether wave, piles battlefields deep with the slain. Bessie Eyton stars, and is ably supported by Edwin Wallock, Lillian Hayward, and others. This three-reel drama is to be released Thursday, July 1st.

GOTHAM FILM RELEASE.

The second release of the Gotham Film Co., "A Trade Secret," dramatized from the story of the same name by Alfred M. Pote—which appeared in the All Story-Cavalier magazines, will give the picture fan an opportunity to see for the first time one of Broadway's best known actors, Mr. Frederic de Belleville, whose name is a household word from coast to coast, and who is now starring in the all star revival of "A Celebrated Case" at the Empire theatre. Co-starring with him is Miss Betty Marshall, the Gotham Fashion Plate, who is equally well known to Broadway theatre goers through her many appearances in musical comedy.

"THE FLOATING DEATH" (Kay-Bee).

One of the most splendidly spectacular productions released in the Mutual program this year is the two-reel Kay-Bee drama, "The Floating Death," founded on a scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thomas H. Ince and released June 25th. The terrible scenes attending the loss of an overloaded excursion steamer which has caught fire and the sinking of two ships from an explosion of dynamite on one of them when they collide form the big moments in the story. The production was made under the direction of Richard Stanton and Mr. Ince, and Mr. Stanton and Enid Markey are featured in the cast, which also includes Lewis J. Cody.

Scene from "The Floating Death" (Kay-Bee).

"MARRYING MONEY" (World Film).

"Marrying Money" is the name of a forthcoming World Film feature in which Clara Kimball Young plays the leading role, that of a lovely girl whose necessity in life is to marry money.

A Count is the prospective prey of the young lady, but when it is discovered that the nobleman has nothing but his title to offer the girl, the projected marriage does not take place. And here the real interest of the story becomes apparent. "The best laid schemes of men and mice gang aft agley." The young lady falls seriously in love with a penniless young fellow (played by Chester Barnett). There is a great outcry on the part of the girl's parents, but when it is subsequently revealed that hubby unexpectedly comes into money all trouble is smoothed away.

James Young is directing the picture, which is expected to be his finest effort so far. W. W. Jefferson, son of the famous Rip Van Winkle, also appears in Miss Young's support.

ORDERS FOR MINA FILMS INCREASE.

The new series of MinA Films is jumping fast into vogue. The best evidence of this comes from the fact that orders for prints have increased to such an extent that to-day more copies are placed on the market than at any time since the origin of this brand.

This extraordinary jump in favor is the result of merit alone. It crowns the indefatigable efforts of the MinA producers to make one reel comedies that are unusual.

"ONE WOMAN'S WAY" (American).

Vivian Rich is the star of "One Woman's Way," and, in this one reel American release of June 23rd in the Mutual program, she enlivens motion picture audiences (and, incidentally, she enlivened the unsuspecting diners who first saw her do it in Santa Barbara's most popular restaurant) by leaping up in a crowded cafe and diving into a large goldfish tank in order to win a bet. This sensational incident in a way belies the story which is deeply human and concerned with a woman's unselfish devotion to her blind husband and her effort to help him. Miss Rich is supported by the old Flying "A" favorites, Louise Lester, Jack Richardson, and the former San Francisco matinee idol, Joseph Galbraith. The play was produced under the direction of Archer MacMackin.

KLEINE'S "THE SPENDTHRIFT" AT FINE ARTS THEATER.

George Kleine's latest six-part feature, "The Spendthrift," featuring Irene Fenwick, will be given its premier Chicago presentation at the Fine Arts theater. The attraction opens a two weeks' run at the big Hamburger house commencing June 26.

"The Spendthrift" is fresh from the Kleine New York studios and marks the latest addition to the long list of recent Kleine successes, featuring in addition to Miss Fenwick an unusual cast of well known Broadway players. Cyril Keightley, the Australian actor, who appeared with Miss Fenwick in "The Song of Songs" at the Eltinge theater, New York, is seen opposite her in "The Spendthrift." Malcolm Duncan, familiarly known to Broadway for many seasons as a leading man for Harrison Grey Fiske, is also seen in the big George Kleine film.

"The Spendthrift" is founded on the famous stage play by Porter Emerson Browne and is scheduled for general release in the United States through the George Kleine offices June 21.

"THE LORELEI MADONNA" (Vitagraph).

The Western Vitagraph Company, with studios at Santa Monica, California, has just completed a three-part drama, "The Lorelei Madonna," in which some of the most beautiful spots, the length and breadth of the Golden State, are reproduced on the screen as backgrounds for dramatic action. Juan de la Cruz, a well-known baritone, popular throughout the West and idolized by the music loving public of California, played the lead and was given exceptional support by members of the Western Vitagraph Company, including Alma Rueben, Marcia Moore, George Stanley, George Holt, Otto Lederer, George Kunkel, and Master Roy Lederer, one of the youngest moving picture stars, under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon. "The Lorelei Madonna" was written by Lulu Case Russell, with scenes laid in California and Hayti, to which latter place a company of Vitagraphers journeyed by way of the Panama Canal in order to obtain that atmosphere of realism, characteristic of the Island.

"BEPPO, THE BARBER," A KOMIC.

Fay Tincher and Edward "Komic" Dillon's troupe of laugh makers, are now working on "Beppo, The Barber," at the Reliance-Majestic studios. Elmer Booth, Chester Withey, author of "Komic" comedies, Max Davidson, Frank Darien and Louise Aitchel have parts. Miss Tincher is featured.

Beppo the Barber is an ambitious and adventurous soul who longs for social favor. Happening to shave the beard from a Duke, he decides to put it on and be the Duke. He is. Miss Tincher is the manicurist of the hotel where Beppo shaves. While there is no professional jealousy between them, there is considerable trouble.

"THE DREAM DANCE" (Lubin).

The three-reel Lubin drama, "The Dream Dance," released June 24, is a powerful story of lights and shadows in Paris and the Pyrenees—a tale in which art, love, temperaments, joys and tragedies are jumbled about kaleidoscopically.

A young vicomte, with great talent as an artist, goes to the Pyrenees to paint landscapes. There he paints a portrait of a little Gascon maid. He falls in love with the girl and secretly marries her. Later upon his return to Paris the vicomte plunges into the gay whirl of student life in Paris. He meets a dancer, with whom he falls desperately in love, forgetting entirely his little Gascon wife.

From then on the story moves with unusual swiftness, and with many sharp dramatic turns and climaxes. The vicomte plays the game of life with more speed than skill, and in the end pays the heavy scoring against him. In the cast are L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, Mary Coughlin, Velma Whitman, George Berrell, Adelaide Bronti, Natalie de Lontan, George Routh, Riccardo Espino and Leon Routh.

"THE MERRY MOVING MEN" (Kalem).

Although Ham and Bud are among the most popular comedians in motion pictures, they were utterly unknown to photoplay patrons only eleven months ago. "The Merry Moving Men" contains the secret of their meteoric rise. The absolute lack of labored effort to be funny; the happy-go-lucky, devil-may-care spirit which characterizes their work in this comedy is calculated to tickle the risibles of even the grouchiest observer.

As indicated by the title, Ham and Bud land jobs as moving men. The desire to work is a new and strange one to them and ambition wanes after they have moved the Duponts' heavy furniture from the house to their truck.

Scene from "The Merry Moving Men" (Kalem).

A circus attracts the attention of the precious pair while they are on their way to the Duponts' new home. Forthwith they find themselves tired of work, and while the owners of the furniture fume and fret at the delay connected with the delivery of their effects, Ham and Bud visit the circus. That is, they try to take it in, but one of the canvass men sees the pair crawling under the tent and shows them the error of their ways. In this, he is helped by a big bale stick.

Back to the van the moving men hasten. Again they set out for their destination, but before they go very far night overtakes them. Unloading one of the beds from the van, Ham and Bud turn in and go to sleep. As for the unfortunate owners of the furniture, they are compelled to sleep on the soft spots of a hardwood floor.

The moving men deliver the furniture the following morning. Dupont meets them in front of the house, and once again retribution overtakes the adventurers. "The Merry Moving Men" will be released by Kalem Monday, June 29.

"SALAMBO INAUGURATES NEW THEATER.

Montgomery, Alabama, is treating itself to the last word in motion picture theatres. The New Strand is the name of a brand new $50,000 theatre which the capital of Alabama will see opened to the public on Saturday, June 12th.

In respect of exterior design and internal equipment, the New Strand is one of the most beautiful and efficient in the world. Manager W. T. Hix is enthusiastic over the outlook of his company's theatre and in an interview said:

"The question of the picture to be shown at our premiere on Saturday, June 12th, was an important one, and not to be settled in an offhand manner. We needed a big picture for the occasion, something grand and outstanding in its appeal. We chose "Salambo," relased through World Film, because it is the biggest and most imposing production available for our purpose. It is a colossal spectacle; we needed a colossal film on our screen the very first time our patrons looked upon it. In 'Salambo' we have it."

COMPLIMENTS FOR COMEDY STAR PICTURE.

That the Comedy-Star idea is working out according to the expectation of President Phil Gleichman was verified by a glowing compliment paid to it by the New York Evening Sun, one of the most conservative papers in the country. This came during the exhibition of Thomas A. Wise in "The Ready Made Family" at the Hippodrome.

Under date of June 7th the Sun's account of the idea runs in part as follows: "—— Mr. Wise's comedy is proof that refined fun with a sentimental touch will 'go big' and that slapstick is not the only film drawing card On the same programme is a knockabout farce that last night's crowd did not like as well as the Wise picture.——"

Others papers throughout the country have published laudatory commendations and the general trend of opinion seems to forecast a sweeping victory for clean comedy.

ROBERT WARWICK IN "THE FACE IN THE MOONLIGHT."

Robert Warwick, in the Wm. A. Brady World Film photoplay, "The Face in the Moonlight," enacts a dual role: he is simultaneously Victor, a brave aristocratic soldier under Napoleon, and Rabat, his dissolute and sinful half brother. The half brothers only meet once. The good one goes to success and promotion in the army. In the picture, Rabat is seen just prior to his execution. On Mr. Warwick's immediate left stands the priest ready to administer consolation and the last rites of the church to the doomed man. The gentleman on the right is Mons. Albert Capellani, the celebrated French director, who is responsible for the production.

Scene from "The Face in the Moonlight" (World Film).

Observe there is a black cat perched contentedly on Mons. Capellani's shoulder. A black cat is Capellani's mascot. He always has one in his pictures.

PANTAGES SELECTS METRO.

The Pantages theatres in Oakland and San Francisco have inaugurated a moving picture policy with their vaudeville.

After looking over the market very carefully, they decided on two "Metro" productions for the initial performances, "The Cowboy and the Lady" and "The Middleman."

"THE WHITE SISTER (Essanay).

This is one of the most intensely dramatic photoplays ever produced. Viola Allen has put all her genius into the play, with the result that it is unsurpassed in the portrayal of the tense emotions called for in the production. Miss Allen's beauty is of the type that photographs with exceptional excellence and she entered into the spirit of producing the photoplay with an unbounded enthusiasm. While it is her first experience in photoplays she had not the slightest difficulty in adjusting herself to the work. The thrilling scene in the convent where the white sister comes face to face with the man she supposes is dead is especially enacted. There is a moment of great joy at the reunion and then one of overwhelming tragedy when the lovers realize they are forever separated by the veil. The play is the greatest work of the late F. Marion Crawford and its intense human element is attested by the success the play had on the speaking stage. The story is exceptionally adapted to photoplay production. The play is released June 21 through the V. L. S. E.

Scene from "The White Sister" (Essanay).

"THE MECHANICAL MAN" (Universal).

"Phroso," who is known the world over for his wonderful impersonation of a mechanical manikin, is featured in "The Mechanical Man," a Joker comedy which is to be released on June 28 by the Universal. Director Curtis has assigned Max Asher and "Phroso" to the leading roles, and together they have produced a film of the most interesting character.

"Phroso's" imitation of a walking manikin has been seen in Cape Town, Africa, and in Nome, Alaska, in Hongkong and New York, and everywhere experts have pronounced his work wonderful. Not once during the entire projection of the film does he flicker an eyelash; not once does a muscle of his face twitch. He moves like a veritable automaton and one wonders at times whether he is not actually being imposed upon by a real mechanical toy instead of by a skilled artist of the stage.

All through the picture there is not the faintest indication that "Phroso" breathes, and his fall, in which he simulates the breaking of the toy manikin, is without doubt one of the most realistic episodes of the unusual comedy. He falls flat on his face with no attempt to break the force of his tumble and one expects to see him picked up with a broken nose, as that prominent feature of his face strikes the floor first with stunning force. How he does it only "Phroso" himself knows. "The Mechanical Man" is the first of many sensational vaudeville acts around which the Universal will weave stories for presentation in photoplay form.

"JORDAN IS A HARD ROAD" TO BE FILMED.

Sir Gilbert Parker, who was made a baronet on the occasion of King George's birthday, has consented to the filming by the Reliance company of his novel, "Jordan is a Hard Road," and it will be made into a Mutual masterpicture at the Hollywood studios. The cast has not yet been determined. The scenario from the book is being prepared by Mary H. O'Connor, of the Mutual scenario staff. It will be pictured in four parts.

The story deals with the life and reformation of Bill Minden, a train robber. His daughter, a lovely girl who grows up in ignorance of her paternity, is in love with an English lord. In the end Bill gives his life for the sake of his daughter's happiness. The story is full of powerful climaxes.

TERRITORY FOR ASSOCIATED SERVICE SELLS FAST.

Arthur Bard the General Manager of the new Associated Service which is shortly to release a complete service of twenty-one reels a week, is highly gratified at the rapidity with which territory is being disposed of. At the present time, however, it is impossible to give the names of the subscribers, owing to the fact that there exists in some sections a lively competition for the franchise, while those exchangemen who have signed up for various reasons for the present wish to have their names withheld from publication.

MAKE HEADQUARTERS AT GOLDEN GATE.

Visiting exhibitors, manufacturers and all those who are coming a long way to attend the Moving Picture Convention in July are invited to make their headquarters at the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc. Sol Lesser extends this invitation to all.

"THE MELTING POT" SELLING FAST.

John Cort seems to have found that the sale of a feature picture on a state rights basis is just as lively a business as it ever was considering the activity around the offices of the Cort Film Corporation in the Longacre building where "The Melting Pot," with Walker Whiteside in the leading role, was the attraction of buyers from all over the country last week.

Some of the cream of the territory in the United States and its insular possessions has been disposed of and offers have been made for virtually all of the North American continent as well as for sections of the rest of the world. Even the Hawaiian Islands found a buyer in the person of Nat Manger of San Francisco, who also took California, Nevada and Arizona. New Jersey went to N. Edward Mallouf who is said to have paid a good sum for the right to exhibit it there. Then the Herald Film Corporation bought New York City and Long Island. The remainder of New York state and all of Pennsylvania were taken by the Authors' Film company. New England has been sold to E. W. Lynch of Worcester, Mass.

BUY BLOCK OF "PROHIBITION" TERRITORY.

The Rowe-Walker Features, with offices at No. 105 Temple Court Building, Minneapolis, Minn., have purchased the exhibition rights of "Prohibition" for the states of Minnesota and North and South Dakota. The deal was closed Friday, June 11th, by Robert T. Kane, president of the Prohibition Film Corporation, who left the home offices in the Candler Bldg., New York City, some days ago on an extended trip which is expected to result in the final sale of all the North American territory for the picture.

When Mr. Kane left New York he had offers for the rights to exhibit "Prohibition" in the various sections of the country and the formal signatures to contracts was all that remained to close a number of important deals. His first stop was Minneapolis and his business there was quickly closed up—he arrived on the morning of the 12th and left the same evening for Kansas City, Mo., with Denver, Col.; Portland, Ore.; Seattle, Wash.; San Francisco, Cal., and Los Angeles, Cal., as the next scheduled ports of call. Mr. Kane expects to be absent from New York for three weeks or a month.

"THE SANDS OF DEE" (Biograph).

While the Biograph producers were at their Los Angeles studios during the summer of 1912, Mr. Griffith's attention was attracted by a young girl whose likeness he had been seeking for months to fit the exact type of Mary, around whom Charles Kingsley had written "The Sands O' Dee." One look at the girl was enough to satisfy Mr. Griffith that she was the one he was looking for and straightaway cast her for the role of Mary. Mae Marsh was the girl and her work in her first picture appealed to Mr. Griffith in such a manner that he immediately added her to the large company of All-Star Biograph players.

This simple story, told in the Biograph's usual convincing manner, and produced amid the many rugged cliffs which abound the Pacific coast along Balboa and Long Beach, California, will always be welcomed at the motion picture theatres. The photography is excellent, locations are beautiful, and the acting is superb. It is Biograph all the way through. Mae Marsh interprets her role with the skill that bespeaks the author's inspiration. Robert Harron, Claire McDowell, Charles H. Mailes, W. Chrystie Miller, Grace Henderson and Edwin August complete the well chosen cast.

"The Sands O' Dee" is a film classic in one reel and measures well up to the high standard set by the previous Biograph re-issues. It is released Friday, July 2.

HAZEL DAWN AS CLARISSA.

A feature that may be called both thrilling and charming is a rare composition, but this unusual description may be accurately applied to the next Famous Players production, released on the Paramount Program June 17, starring Hazel Dawn as Clarrissa, the central character of Ronald MacDonald's unique story, "Gambler's Advocate," which as a novel has had one of the widest sales of contemporary literature.

The story may be characterized as a melodramatic romance.

Hazel Dawn in "Clarissa" (Famous Players)

It was this novel combination of qualities that made the book, when published, one of the six best sellers of the season, and it is the same variety of interest that gives the photoplay such distinctive appeal.

James Kirkwood, whose last apeparance on the screen was opposite Mary Pickford in "Behind the Scenes," enacts the role of Gambier, and infuses into this characterization all the force and vigor which it requires. The supporting company is further distinguished by the presence of Fuller Mellish, Robert Broderick, and Maude Odell, who also appeared prominently in support of Miss Dawn in "Niobe."

WILLIAM COURTLEIGH, JR., IN NEW SERIAL.

William Courtleigh, Jr., who is to be featured with Lillian Lorraine in the new Balboa made serial, "Neal of the Navy," to be released by Pathe, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., March 8, 1892. His father is so well known as to require no comment. Born into a theatrical atmosphere the young Courtleigh took naturally to the stage and made his maiden plunge at the tender age of five years, appearing in his father's East Lynne company. From then on for a number of years he continued with his father, leaving when he was ten years old to get some schooling. His education was continued through one year at the University of Chicago. His first job, he laughingly tells, was riding after cattle in the Chicago stock yards, but he could not long resist the lure of the stage, for being offered an engagement with a stock company in Bridgeport, Conn., he eagerly seized the chance. Engagements at the Harlem Opera House in New York, with Robert Mantell, and in stock in Los Angeles, Atlanta and Milwaukee followed. His more recent engagements were with Ethel Barrymore in "Her Picture," "The Nightingale," and H. B. Warner in "Under Cover."

ARE SOON TO SHOW "PROHIBITION."

Arangements for the release of "Prohibition," the big temperance picture which "Bob" Kane has so successfully promoted, are rapidly being completed and it is expected that within the next three weeks it will be running in big theaters in New York City, Brooklyn, Boston, Chicago, and other large cities. The Lynch Theatrical Enterprises, who control the New England territory, have contracted to use the feature in the well known Tremont Temple in Boston. Jones, Linick & Schaffer, who have purchased Illinois and other states in the Middle West, are planning to open the picture in the Studebaker theater, Chicago.

Mr. Kane's trip to the Pacific Coast has been delayed but he is leaving this week to visit Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, Portland, Ore.; Seattle, Wash.; and San Francisco, Cal. to close contracts which have been tentatively drawn.

CALGARY CONCERN HANDLE MINUSA SCREENS.

The home office of the Minusa Cine Products Company, in St. Louis, has made arrangements for the sale and distribution of Minusa Gold Fibre Screens throughout the western provinces of Canada, by the appointment of the World Features, Ltd., of Calgary, Alta., as their exclusive agents. A large order of screens that the St. Louis factory of the Minusa Company is working overtime to fill, will go to Calgary within a short time.

"CHIMMIE FADDEN," A MOST UNIQUE LOVE COMEDY.

"Chimmie Fadden," in which Victor Moore plays the stellar role under the management of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., is positively the most unique love comedy on record. It ran for years on the legitimate stage, and contains all the elements for high class film comedy. What Victor Moore, the most celebrated Broadway comedy star yet seen on the screen, is able to do with an eccentric character in photo-drama was sufficiently indicated by his hit in "Snobs."

Scene from "Chimmie Fadden" (Lasky)

Victor Moore is of course ideal for the Irish-American character of "Chimmie." Camille Astor plays the role of the "Duchess." The other leading parts are assigned to Raymond Hatton, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Ernest Joy, Anita King, Tom Forman and Harry de Roy.

The picturization of "Chimmie Fadden," which is incontestably in its own way one of the great and typical American classics, has been done with the utmost care. For some months the Lasky Company has been making the most persistent efforts to raise the standards of film comedy, and characters of this sort are too rare and precious to be handled except with the most painstaking effort.

FAVERSHAM IN "THE RIGHT OF WAY."

William Faversham is working at the studios of the Rolfe Company on a motion picture version of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel "The Right of Way" under the direction of Jack Noble and the experienced eye of a man familiar with Canadian backwoods life of which the novel treats. Mr. Faversham is greatly pleased with the idea and has dubbed the extra

Faversham, Noble and the Watchman in "The Right of Way" man "the watchman." "He spent five years in the constabulary, you know, and knows every inch of the Caribou country; he has made a life study of the modes and types of the country and is as familiar with the furniture and fixtures of the place as to be able almost to build you a Canadian hut with ordinary cardboard. I am proud of the results achieved by our watchman and hope he proves valuable enough to cause every production to install one."

Alice Brady in "The Cup of Chance."

Noted Legitimate Player Will Appear in Powerful Drama of Knickerbocker Star Features.

IT IS announced by Knickerbocker Star Features that the play in which Alice Brady, the youthful and popular legitimate star, is soon to be seen on the regular program of the General Film Company will be entitled "The Cup of Chance" by the Rev. Clarence V. Harris.

The play is one of the most powerful from the pen of this well known author, and, written especially for Miss Brady, affords a world of opportunity for showing herself to the best advantage to her host of admirers in both the legitimate and the picture fields. She plays the part of "Hope," a young girl who never had a chance, whose whole life has been surrounded with the bad in life. She wins the role of the Goddess "Circe" in the opera of the same name. Men flock around the popular prima donna and the tragedy in her life comes when she marries her step-father, the fact of the relationship being unknown at the time to either.

Miss Brady is supported by a notable cast including: Geo. W. Horard, Hope's admirer, Jack; Gladia Acaro, Hope's mother; Geo. Reinhart, theatrical manager; Morse Kaupel, Duncan, rival of Jack; James Levering, Wilson, proprietor and big business man; Fritz Orlamond, Templeton; Mrs. Orlamond, a society woman; Elaine Ivans, Dorothea, Templeton's daughter; Ezra Walck, a cafe manager.

"The Cup of Chance" will be an early three-reel release on the regular program of the General Film Company.

ANOTHER MAJESTIC KID COMEDY.

The latest "kid" comedy to engage the Majestic company of children under the direction of the Brothers Franklin is "The Kid Magicians." The full strength of the company is seen with Georgie Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen De Rue, little Betty Marsh and Edna May Wilson. This time adults act with the children: Vera Lewis and Jennie Lee.

The story concerns the adventures of Tiny Rags, a caddy in the home of a rich little boy. Tiny Rags is ashamed of his own clothing and secures that of a friend of Georgie, the rich litle boy. He locks Willie, the friend, in a coal cellar and appears at the party. The children see a magician breaking eggs, pouring them into a hat, and taking out little chickens. Georgie tries this trick, but it won't work. The only result is that when his father puts on his opera hat the eggs run down his face.

"THE DEVIL'S DAUGHTER."

Produced from an adaptation of D'Annunzio's "La Giaconda," this picture seems like rather a poor imitation of "A Fool There Was." With Theda Bara playing Giaconda, the same stress is placed on passionate embraces and on the maniacal ravings of her victim, in this instance a sculptor, who falls an easy prey after the first kiss. Being all in a lugubrious key, the picture becomes wearisome and occasionally—when comedy was farthest from the intention of the actors—laughable. The hair-pulling encounter between the Devil's Daughter and another stouter daughter of the devil, brought a general laugh from the large audience at a private showing in the Broadway theater. Restraint is not recognized as a valuable asset of art in a production that is weak in its dramatic construction and, truth to tell, somewhat negative in the impression it leaves. The Florida settings are attractive and clearly photographed. Frank Powell was the director.

NOVEL LOBBY DISPLAY.

As a part of a most elaborate lobby display, "The Island of Regeneration," the Vitagraph Company has brought out a most attractive novelty in the nature of a parrot cut-out.

These cut outs are made of a heavy cardboard, notched at the point where the feet of the bird are supposed to be, and when set on any projection, they balance perfectly.

Many exhibitors are using from fifteen to twenty parrots set on strings stretched across the lobby, and the effect is striking, as the breeze sets them bowing and nodding in a most life-like manner.

ST. LOUIS SCREEN BOOSTER ON LONG TRIP.

Nat I. Brown, who has been out for a month on a trip in the interests of the Minusa Cine Products Company, boosting and placing contracts for Minusa Gold Fibre screens, wires from New York that he has found business so good and the demand for Minusa Gold Fibre screens so big that it will be at least a month before he swings back on the return trip to St. Louis.

MORTIMER FILM CLEANER AT PORTLAND.

The Mortimer Film Cleaner, is one of the big displays at The Maine State Exposition, now being held in Portland, Maine.

Catherine Carr, scenario writer of "The Melting Pot," has just finished the scenario for "Greater Love Hath no Man—" in which Emmet Corrigan is to be starred. Mrs. Carr has begun work on future productions for the Cort Film Corporation, the Metro and the Cosmos.

Notes of the Trade

"THE CHOIR BOYS," a Reliance subject now under way at the coast, will have an exceptionally striking rescue scene. Small Bobby Fuehrer is not only a film hero, but a hero in reality, for in making a scene for "The Choir Boys" he saved an associate player from becoming food for the California fishes.

* * *

Jack Clark and Gene Gauntier are working on a two reel Universal story by Ben Cohn, entitled, "The Mate of the Primeval." They are at the same time completing several scenes in "The Ulster Lass" which were delayed on account of certain elaborate sets not having been built in time. Both these pictures are regarded among the best this company has staged recently. Mr. Clark and Miss Gauntier are featured in both stories.

Harry Todd, the Essanay comedian in "Broncho Billy's Word of Honor," takes the part of sheriff, which he enacts with the uncompromising sternness of one who had never laughed nor had the slightest sense of humor.

Although George W. Terwilliger and Shannon Fife have been associated as director and writer, respectively, with the Lubin Company since 1912, it has happened that Terwilliger never directed any of Fife's stories until this month, when he produced "The Phantom Happiness" and "The Path to the Rainbow," each in three reels.

* * *

Myrtle Stedman, of the Bosworth, Inc., studios, is wearing some stunning costumes in the five reel gypsy story being produced by Oscar Apfel, with Lenore Ulrich, starred. Miss Stedman takes the part of an English lady, and is an excellent foil to the star.

Ben Turpin gets the worst of it when he sits on a chimney and tries to smoke out his fellow actors in a scene from Essanay's comedy "Snakeville's Hen Medic." Harry Todd puts a cartridge in the stove and Turpin is knocked off the roof into a tank of water. Incidentally Todd and the rest of the players were blown across the room and buried in the debris.

Burton King is producing a one reel story by Harvey Gates entitled "The Advisor." It is only a one reel story but there is meat enough in it to fill an ordinary three reeler. From start to finish it is a story fraught with the most tense situations imaginable and that it will end satisfactorily is not at all certain until the last moment.

* * *

Marguerite Loveridge makes her debut with the Griffith coast organization, at the Reliance-Majestic studios in "The Housemaid." She is supported by Frank Bennett, Wilbur Higby and Mae Gaston.

General Manager Rowland and Treasurer Engel of the Metro, spent Sunday last at Saranac Lake with Director McGill and the principles in "Sealed Valley" including Dorthy Donnelly, Rita Doettler and William Johnston.

* * *

Several important scenes were staged by Mr. McGill in honor of the Metro head's presence. "Sealed Valley" will be seen on the Metro Program early in July.

* * *

Mary Fuller will play the role of a nun in "The White Violet," a feature film which Lucius Henderson is now producing for release on the regular Universal program.

* * *

Walter Reed, former musical comedy comedian, has been added to the staff of writers in the Keystone scenario department under the direction of Hampton Del Ruth.

Jack Standing, Lubin's English star, recently stepped out of the scenes in the "Road o' Strife" serial, in which he is being featured with Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson, to play a part in the three reel drama "In the Dark," being directed by Joseph Kaufman.

Lillian Drew, clever character actress with Essanay, has left for Chattanooga to join the company playing there. Miss Drew was with the company originally but was recalled to Chicago for special work. She now will take up her work in the photoplays requiring Southern settings.

* * *

With "Shattered Memories" practically finished, Robert Leonard is making haste to start on his next two reel story "Betty's Dream Hero," written by Witt Cochrane and Calder Johnstone. The regular Rex cast will appear in the leading roles, Robert Leonard playing opposite Miss Hall with Harry Carter in the other leading part.

* * *

Henry McRae and his company of 101 Bison players have left the Universal City studios for the Santa Barbara Islands where they have gone to stage a number of unusually sensational exteriors in connection with the recent wrecking of the Norwegian sailing vessel, Aggi Nord. No title has as yet been given the scenario on which the company will work while away. Wellington Playter, Marie Walcamp, Rex de Rosselli and Sherman Bainbridge are to play the principal roles.

Trainmen and "Rule G"

At Clinton, Iowa, Hand-in-Hand Lodge of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen Finds Fault with Temperance Film—Claim That It Is Not Fair to Railroaders —Shows Them in Bad Light—Want It Censored.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

HAND-IN-HAND Lodge of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen at Clinton criticized "Rule G" after it had been shown at the A-Muse-U, for two days. The resolution declares:

"This picture misrepresents the railroad men and leaves a wrong impression as to their standard, in the following ways:

"First. It represents the men as opposing Rule G (or the booze rule), while the reverse is true that the men have always been with the management on this rule, and a review of their rituals, by-laws and rules will show pronounced opposition to the use of liquor. The men also know that when they get into trouble on account of the use of liquor, their organizations absolutely refuse to help them.

"Second. It represents the men following the boozer and ruffian De Lacy in his acts of lawlessness and we challenge anyone to cite one instance where the men ever followed anyone into acts of violence because they were opposed to liquor or for any other cause.

"Third. We object to the singling out of one class of people and making them the object of misrepresentation, insults and contempt, and for these reasons we demand that the picture be suppressed or revised so as to conform to the truth.

"When the legislative board of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen met at Des Moines last winter, of the thirty lodges represented, twenty-four men were teetotalers and of the nineteen Order of Railroad Conductors men eighteen were teetotalers. When it is remembered that the statistics on the use of liquor in the United States gives only 15 per cent teetotalers, it can easily be seen that the railroad men are holding their own."

IOWA JOTTINGS.

A. H. Blank of the Casino and New Garden theaters in Davenport is making a neat publicity turn out of a recent visit to the coast where he met Mary Pickford. He tells his patrons she inquired how the theater-goers in his section liked her and if the monthly release was too frequent. Patrons are invited to write their answers to these two questions and send them to the Casino and later they will be forwarded to little Mary in the form of a testimonial.

J. A. Tracey, deputy state fire marshal has announced that moving picture houses in Iowa will be required to install fireproof booths.

H. G. Ludwig has been contemplating opening a moving picture show at Merrill.

NOTES FROM PRAIRIE STATES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MINNEAPOLIS may have an ordinance establishing patrol limits for moving picture houses the same as for saloons. Alderman Williams says the photoplay house question is entirely a neighborhood matter and he may offer such a measure. This proposition came up at the time the city council refused to grant the request of Alderman Rentz that no more licenses be issued to picture houses in his ward. A petition making a similar request and signed by the principals of four schools, two improvement associations and a clergyman was presented.

The enthusiasm of the children in St. Paul over the pictures selected for them and shown at the Dale theater was only luke-warm, says a reporter. "The Childrens' Hour," "Rip Van Winkle", and "The Legend of Snow White," were the films shown.

Contract has been let for the construction of a new opera house at Ellendale by Nels Norby. It will open early in the fall.

Three shows were given to children at the Yale in Carbondale under the auspices of the Illinois State Pure Food commission. Anti-Fly and other sanitation films were shown. The Garden at Peoria is conducting a contest with twenty-five prizes valued at $300. Monmouth houses will cooperate with the Commercial Club in an anti-fly crusade by showing slides put out by the International Harvester Co.

Bodkin & Keane's films of the Memorial Day parade in Evanston were shown at three houses in that city, the Star, Evanston and Grand. Musical specialties will be added to the picture program at the Globe at Ivesdale.

Legislature and Censors

Illinois Legislature Favors Censorship—Liquor Interests at Work, According to Article in Springfield Paper—New Offices to Be Given to Political Friends Also Quite a Strong Argument Favoring Movement.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the members of the general assembly favors the censorship bill because he believes it will be possible to get a board of censors who will prohibit the showing of moving picture plays depicting the results of intemperance. Such plays, he says, have done much injury to the saloon business."

The above extract from the Springfield News-Record shows an influence in the Illinois legislature that is inimical to the picture business. The writer of the editorial is rated as one of the most reliable political correspondents in the middle-west, and consequently is one who is able to see the evils of political censorship.

Liquor Business Hates Films.

This session of the legislature has been classed as "wet," the pro-liquor advocates combining to elect a speaker. However, it must be said, he is not unfair. The liquor business has no cause to love the photoplay industry and the inroads upon the bar daily receipts are just as heavy in Illinois as elsewhere. On top of that, a crucial anti-saloon fight is developing in Chicago, and another is in embryo in Springfield, where the astounding concession of closing Sunday saloons has been made. Unless Illinois politics has a remarkable uplift it is very easy to see how, as the Springfield writer points, "it will be possible to get a board that will prohibit films depicting the result of intemperance."

The News-Record opposes censorship, especially if it is on the ground that the saloon business suffers.

"That may be true, but moving pictures have done much to aid sobriety and the majority of the people of the state are willing to see the saloon business fall off a little in the interest of a decrease in drunkenness.

"There should be some regulation of moving pictures. Obscene, immoral or injurious plays should not be shown. But the same is true of productions on the stage. No state board of censors is required to keep play producers within bounds. With the existing laws it is possible for local authorities to prohibit the showing of improper films. Strict and arbitrary action by a board appointed by the governor of the state is not needed.

"Moving pictures can do a great good; they are doing a great good. If only innocuous, silly plays are to be shown, however; if everything that is true to life or that offends some petty jobholders' supersensitiveness is to be excluded, we had better close the moving picture theaters and be done with it."

Sinecures for Friends.

The legislative correspondents also pointed to the activity of Secretary of State Louis G. Stevenson in the behalf of censorship. It would be quite a nice thing for Mr. Stevenson's office to have a state board. The fees would be handled by that office and also would add to the number of employees. The secretary of state's office has always been regarded as one of the choicest in Illinois from a political standpoint, aside from its financial attractions. The number of the "faithful" he can reward by giving them places probably is second only to the number appointed by the governor. Censorship would be squarely in politics.

HANDICAPPED BY A NAME.

Experiences of Illinois managers have shown that announcing "Educational Nights" is a deterrent to some patronage, even though the program would be satisfactory to the mysterious average patron. The title is, in fact, ominous and suggests the compulsory study of one's youthful days. It does not fully describe the program which is recreational and inspirational. The Playhouse at Oak Park which has been co-operating with the Fair Hope League in an effort to give one night a week to films that are uplifting as well as satisfying to the public has been aware of this handicap. In order to offset the impression that Tuesday night will be burdened with heavy educational subjects, the management has renamed it People's night. The first of the more properly-labeled programs included Judge Willis Brown's five-reel juvenile problem play, "The Boy and the Law" and Judge Brown himself was present to give an address.

WILL KEEP EYE ON SHOWS.

Committee of Elgin Club women will visit all motion picture houses in that city and make reports daily to the board of censors which was appointed a year ago. Mrs. H. H. West, head of the board of censors, outlined the new policy.

"The standard of the Chicago board is all that we have to go by. We are going under the supposition that all of the Elgin houses are showing only those pictures which have been passed by that board. But that is not all that could be desired.

"For one thing we hope to be able to do away with those horrid big posters in front of the theaters. We would like to have them use photographs instead. The posters are often far different from the pictures themselves. Some of the picture men have told us they will be glad to have the posters done away with.

"There will be a committee of four members from each of the clubs of women in the city, who will take turns in visiting the picture shows. Every show will be visited every day. These committees will report to the board of censors. Upon their report our action will be based.

"In case there should be anything objectionable, which continues after warning, we will have to take away the license from the theater owner who persists in showing that kind of picture."

Y. M. C. A. GIVES FREE FILM SHOWS.

Free open air shows of films with strong lessons were given by the Y. M. C. A. on the streets of Rock Island for a week. This is a departure in the middle west and opens a vast field for something like social center work during the heated seasons. The films included "The Education of Mr. and Mrs. Thrifty," "The Crime of Carelessness," "The Price of Human Lives" and others on fire prevention, city beautiful work, rifle practice and scenics, which were furnished by railroads. The electrical appliance makers also gladly furnished films.

ITEMS IN ILLINOIS.

Elgin picture house owners must test their fire alarm boxes every day, the city fire marshal has announced.

It was a double show all around for the Princess at Rushville when "The Spoilers" was exhibited. The house had two machines, two operators and two orchestras.

Village officials in St. David are kindly to moving picture shows. They refunded John Lakin's license fee for May because it rained and he could use the airdome only four nights.

Fire swept the Star theater in the 3100 block, South Adams street, Peoria, operated by Harry Metcalf. Loss on the building was $4,000, on the seating $1,000 and about $1,000 on the machine films and other equipment.

Two Exits from Booths

Michigan May Require Two Doors for Escape from Operators' Room—Result of Fatal Fire Accident in Savoy at Hancock—Assistant Operator Was Unable to Make Escape from Burning Film.

By Frank H. Madison, Michigan Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

As a result of the fire in the operating room of the Savoy theater at Hancock, in which 17-year-old Bernard Ohman, assistant operator, lost his life, radical changes in operating rooms will be ordered throughout the state.

"There is no question the state will require every moving picture house in Michigan to provide at least two exits from its operating quarters," said Deputy State Fire Marshal Dewey, who has charge of the investigation. "It is also quite certain that instead of employing ladders to reach the room in which the machine is kept, theaters will be required to install a stairway. This is a serious affair and every means will be taken to preclude another of its kind if possible."

The coroners inquest was postponed until June 15 when the investigation of the state officials will be finished.

Mr. Rutterberg, acting manager and regular operator of the Savoy, says that Bernard Ohman in placing a roll of film on the floor of the operating room placed the roll against a charged wire. The film immediately took fire and it is presumed the young man became excited when he threw the blazing film into the film room. In a few seconds the film room was in flames. Ruttenberg dashed from the operating department through the film room and then jumped for the exit, making franctic efforts to drag Bernard along, which he was not successful in doing.

When the alarm was given there were 200 people in the theater, but they marched out quietly.

Just about the time the firemen arrived young Ohman was seen attempting to break the screening, which covers the middle ventilator, in efforts to get out of the blazing room. Adolph Broemer, fireman, in attempting to reach Bernard, was severely burned about the hands. Ruttenberg's face and hands were also badly burned.

While in Hancock, Deputy Dewey visited some Sunday shows at the Orpheum. Business is heavy there and the lobby is generally crowded. Dewey volunteed to make some short talks, to which Manager Noonam agreed. The deputy spoke at all three shows. He told the people that they must not block lobbies, that they must not stand in aisles or in the rear of the auditorium. "I do not want to arrest the manager of this theater," he said, "but if his patrons persist in maintaining the condition I saw in the lobby tonight, I will have to do so."

MICHIGAN WOMEN'S CLUBS WANT STATE-WIDE CENSORSHIP.

The City Federation of Woman's Clubs in Saginaw took steps at its annual meeting toward a state-wide movement for legislation for censorship of moving pictures. Correspondence will be had with similar organizations throughout Michigan before anything definite is done.

Meanwhile the clubs are busy at home. A committee, consisting of Mrs. W F. Paine, Mrs. Chapman and Mrs. F. W. Culver, were appointed to draft an ordinance for local censorship, which will be given to the City Council and its adoption urged.

Mrs. Gertrude Vance Howard, probation officer in Bay City, appeared before the annual meeting of the Civic league there and declared that some of the Bay City photoplay houses were showing films that were unfit for children. She urged the league to take up the matter of censorship and also the enforcement of the curfew law. Bay City formerly had two policewomen and the moving picture men co-operated with them by barring children after nine o'clock. Mrs. Howard recommended that three women be appointed by the Civic league to act as policewomen.

The Bay City Times says editorially:

"Some of these pictures have been raw, and just as Mrs. Howard says, unfit for children to see, and many older persons have been offended by some of the situations which the films have shown.

"One of the frequent exploits in the motion pictures is the attempted criminal assaults upon women by men. This has become so common in motion pictures that it is likely to lead the young and impressionable mind to believe that it is a common affair for men to attempt criminal assaults upon women and girls, whereas, so far as the picture itself is concerned, it could be made more acceptable, and none the less effective, if the objectionable portions were cut out.

"The censoring of pictures by any city would be a difficult task. It can be done only by passing a most exacting ordinance, one which would embarrass the owners of theaters, and this is something that the city would not care to do. There is no one who would have the motion picture theater hampered in any way, but if it continues to throw upon the screen vulgar and suggestive pictures of situations which on the legitimate stage would not be tolerated, the people responsible for them should realize that they are bringing upon their own heads the very condition which they do not want and which the city, as a municipality, does not care to see brought about."

WITH MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS.

The Moose lodge was given a benefit at the Gem at Holly to enable the drill team to compete in a meet at Detroit. Grand Rapids Knights sponsored "Damon and Pythias" for three days at the Powers. Newsboys of the Times in Bay City were the guests of the Washington when the Williamson Submarine pictures were shown. The Marquette Opera house at Marquette had a return date of "The Spoilers." This house recently tried the "pay day" stunt of giving envelopes with cash prizes to every child at a matinee. Firemen at Munsing were given a benefit at the Lyric, a home talent program supplementing the pictures. The films of the Michigan copper country, made by William Forster and William Olsen, were booked for two days at the Calumet in Houghton.

BRIEF MICHIGAN ITEMS.

The Drama League in Grand Rapids gave its official approval to "The Eternal City," shown at the Powers, and "Felix Holt," shown at the Monroe.

Brazell Brothers have sold the Empire at Iron River to C. S. Sullivan, who operates the Grand and Royal in Escanaba and the Grand at Calumet. The owner plans to remodel the house. His first program was "A Fool There Was." He will close the Royal at Escanaba.

An orchestra featured the first week's program of the New Princess, formerly the Gem, which has been opened at South Haven.

C. A. Baldwin and F. Stock of Benton Harbor have purchased the Lyric at Michigan City, Indiana, from J. N. Ledbetter. They will operate a five-cent show except on Saturdays and Sundays.

The Sheldon building in Albion is being remodeled for a moving picture theater, giving that city its fourth show.

The Elk Photo Play company of Flint has changed its name to the Strand Photo Play company.

Darrah & Graham, who took over the Grand Vaudette at Big Rapids from Alex Marcussen, decided to let the public compete in suggesting a new name for the house. It was dark for two weeks for remodeling.

SPECIAL CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Mrs. Victor H. Kriegshaber, chairwoman of the recreation committee, of the Woman's Clubs of Atlanta, is personally supervising an innovation that will be introduced Saturday morning to the children of Atlanta who attend the weekly school, children's special picture performance at the Grand theater, operated by the Woman's Club.

Instead of the dramatic feature offerings heretofore shown in connection with educational films, Mrs. Kriegshaber made a tour of the film agencies during the week and selected a choice program of pictures of educational worth, which, at the same time, have meritorious appeal to the child interest.

DARKTOWN'S CHARLIE CHAPLIN.

A big black negress had gone to a negro fancy dress ball in Atlanta's "Darktown" Wednesday; to be unique and to create sensation among the negroes, she donned masculine attire, big flat shoes, and a little mustache stuck right up under a big flat nose. She was representing Charlie Chaplin, so she stated. Caught on the street at midnight in that striking costume, she was arrested by a big policeman.

"Well, what on earth," exclaimed the police judge. "Say, Fannie, why these masculine togs?"

"I was at de fancy dress ball," she stated, "an' wus actin' de part of Charlie Chaplin. I wusn't doin' nuffin' but going 'long hum when de perlice had to cum up an' lows dat I wus disorderly."

"I think that Charlie Chaplin ought to be protected," remarked the judge as he fined the negress $10.75.

ATLANTA LOCAL NOTES.

The Victoria theater, the youngest of Atlanta's many theaters, will feature Alice Brady in "As Ye Sow" this week.

Mary Pickford, Francis Bushman and Henry Ainsley are three of the big ones to be offered at the Grand theater this week. The Grand is the theater which every Saturday morning fills to overflow with the Atlanta children to see pictures which are carefully picked by the Woman's Club of Atlanta.

Manager Anderson of the North American Film Co., reports a great business over the south with the "Diamond From the Sky."

D. Silverman, southern representative of the Bert Levey Circuit, with headquarters in Atlanta, is back from a brief business trip to the Pacific coast.

The carnival and parade, which was part of the commencement exercises of the Georgia Tech School, was filmed by the Pathe Daily News, and exhibited in theaters over the country, according to representatives of the above company, who are planning to use it in their weekly.

The Strand theater announces Mrs. Leslie Carter for three days "In the Heart of Maryland," as also Marguerite Snow in "The Patriot and the Spy." A full week of war pictures.

Manager Bromberg of the Mutual Film Service, reports a splendid business for his company over the south. Not only has he had to increase his working force in order to take care of the increased business, but also his floor space at headquarters on Luckie street.

Frank Montgomery, who recently let it be known that he would build a number of theaters in residential neighborhods, states that the first of these is nearing completion. This theater is at Peachtree near North avenue, and will be known as Montgomery's Regent. It will open July 1.

Manager Allison of the Pathe Co., is to be chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the Motion Picture Industrial Exposition, so 'tis rumored. If it be true, its the right man in the right place, for the "smile" he wears never comes off.

CALIFORNIA BRIEFS.

Work has been commenced on a new moving picture theater at Williams for E. J. Miller. It will be fitted with a removable roof so that it can be used as an airdome during the summer months.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has adopted the policy of making changes of program but twice a week at its Sacramento house, instead of three times, as formerly.

The Adeline at Oakland has been closed for additions and repairs.

The Fremont at Melrose has been reopened by Smith & Son.

The Grand at Stockton has been taken over by M. D. Serrano.

The Optic has been opened at Roseville by H. G. Thiel.

Arrangements have been made by J. W. Southwick to open the Panama theater at Stockton.

The new theater of Harry J. Leland at Woodland has been named the Strand.

The Lyric at Chico is now being conducted by E. S. Thompson, who also has a house at Kennett, Cal.

Mike Athens has disposed of the Wigwam theater at Fresno to K. S. Cashin, who will change the name at an early date, if another can be found to suit him. Mr. Athens has purchased a ranch near Merced and has also taken over the Colonial of that city and will conduct it as the Victor.

The Lindsay theater at Lindsay has been taken over by F. H. Smith, well known in Tulare county amusement circles.

The new Princess has been opened at Sausalito by J. Elliott. This house is a very handsome one with its own electric generating plant and seats 400 persons.

A new theater is to be opened shortly at Watsonville by Frank Wilson, formerly of Tucson, Ariz. This will make four first-class houses in this city.

Ed Worthington has leased the Maywood Opera House at Corning to Alexander T. Case.

O. J. Pierce, of Chico, has arranged to open a circuit of small houses in Northern California and will conduct these during the summer months.

The Plaza airdome has been opened at Fresno under the management of Frank L. Hesse. Vaudeville and pictures will be shown.

The Frederick Robinson Film and Producing Co. has been incorporated at Los Angeles with a capital stock of $100,000 by Frederick Robinson, Wilbur W. Walker and William Geary.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

Edward H. Kemp has been very busy of late taking moving pictures in the vicinity of the city, including views of the public schools of Marin county, and an industrial farm for boys conducted by the Salvation Army.

A beautiful new stage set has just been installed at the Imperial under the direction of Manager J. L. Partington and a number of other improvements of note made.

The foyer of the Portola has been made an unusually cheery place through the addition of a number of attractive cages containing singing canaries. These can be heard in the theater and the effect at times is charming.

The Tivoli has ended a two weeks' run on "The Eternal City" and has started again on its regular program of double bills changed weekly.

M. Calmy has returned from a trip through Nevada in the interests of the Golden Gate Film Exchange and did a fine business, a marked improvement being noted in that state in the amusement field.

The Washington Square theater in the North Beach district is again being conducted by Roth & Estes.

The New theater on Polk street has been sold to a Mr. Griswold, who has assumed the management.

The Pathe Exchange has been incorporated here by C. Pathe, H. W. Oviatt and W. Loewy, with capital of $5,000.

Club's First Home Party

San Francisco Screen Club Formally Opens Its New Quarters in Tivoli Theater Building with House Warming on Evening of June 5—Rooms Tastefully Decorated—Large Gathering Enjoys Entertainment.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE formal opening of the new quarters of the Screen Club of San Francisco in the Tivoli theater building on Eddy street took place on the evening of June 5, when more than three hundred members and invited guests gathered there to enjoy the splendid program that had been prepared. A hilarious raffle occupied the attention of all until the program of entertainment took place, which followed the closing of the various theaters around town.

Shortly before midnight Art Smith, the aviator, known as "The Comet's Only Rival," arrived at the hall with E. M. Asher, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, and was introduced to those present by President Sid Grauman. He told of some of his experiences in the air and stated that the only moving pictures of his night flights had been taken here and that they were wonderfully successful. Victor Potel, "Slippery Slim" of the Essanay Company, was next introduced and he recited a funny poem in splendid style. Others who were brought forward included Miss Roberts, who was Zone Queen recently at the Exposition, two beautiful Hawaiian girls from the Zone, and some of the best talent from the Empress theater.

The club rooms were tastefully decorated for the occasion with large framed pictures of screen stars loaned by exchange men and at one end a large space was cleared for dancing, which was indulged in throughout the evening. The affair was such a pronounced success that events to which the ladies will be invited will be staged from time to time.

AMERICAN TO BE REMODELED.

The American theater, located on Market street above Seventh, is to be closed at an early date while extensive repairs and changes are made. The balcony will be enlarged and rebuilt, the objectionable posts removed from the orchestra section and the entire house redecorated. This theater, which was one of the first to be rebuilt in the downtown section of the city following the fire of 1906, was taken over recently by Edwin James of Portland, Ore., and has been conducted by him since then as an exclusive moving picture house.

FILM CONCERNS TO MOVE.

The owners of the Mechanics Bank Building, on Market street, in which several film concerns have offices, have announced plans for readjusting the quarters on the fourth floor and a number of changes in location will be made shortly. The Sierra Film Manufacturing Company, of which W. V. Crone is manager, will occupy another front office on the same floor, while the Commercial-Educational Film Co., and E. W. Castle, a producer, will move to other floors. J. L. Warner, formerly of this building, removed recently to the Pantages theater building across the street.

S. & C. HEADQUARTERS TO BE MOVED HERE.

John W. Considine has resumed control of the Sullivan & Considine circuit of theaters, which includes the Empress theater here, and announces that the central booking offices will be removed from New York to San Francisco. He is also negotiating for the control of theaters in India, Australia and New Zealand.

NEW MANAGER FOR APEX.

Marion H. Kohn, who has been in charge of the Apex Feature Service, since this exchange was established here last year, has resigned and left for New York. His place is being filled by Ernest Bru, formerly well known here, but of late connected with the film business at Los Angeles.

V-L-S-E, INC., OPENS BRANCH OFFICE.

C. B. Price, coast manager of the V-L-S-E interests, left for Seattle recently to establish a branch from which the entire Northwest will be served. Tom North, who will have charge of this office, recently visited both Seattle and Portland and decided upon the former city as the most advantageous location for the exchange, after making a careful investigation. He has been very busy since reaching the Northwest and the new service has been taken to Seattle by Managers Jensen and Von Herberg, of the Liberty and Alhambra theaters. "Graustark" was the first production shown at the latter house, and this was featured in the daily newspapers with full-page advertisements.

THE POWER EXHIBIT ATTRACTS MUCH ATTENTION.

The display of the Nicholas Power Company in the Liberal Arts Palace at the Exposition, conducted under the direction of R. W. Horn, is receiving much attention from visiting exhibitors and the general public. On Decoration Day a count was made of those who visited the booth and seven hundred and nineteen persons signed the register. In addition to this several thousand passed the booth and inspected it from the outside.

The Liberal Arts Progressive Club has been formed in this building and an entertainment was recently held on the grounds at which moving pictures were shown, Mr. Horn supplying both pictures and machine. This club has permanent quarters in the building and a section has been set aside for the exclusive entertainment of guests of the Nicholas Power Company.

Mr. J. F. Skerrett, who has been in California for some time, has left for home by way of Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Vancouver, Salt Lake, Denver, St. Paul and Detroit. While here he visited many exhibitors in the San Francisco field, and Mr. Horn is now calling on each one in the business and so far has visited more than sixty theaters in this city.

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

C. L. Williams, manager of the Blinkhorn Exchange, maintained here, has been having a taste of circus life again since being placed in charge of the Selig-Robinson Wild Animal concession at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Mr. Williams was formerly one of the most successful circus men in the country, but of late years has been devoting his attention to theatrical and film productions.

The Globe Film Exchange, located in the Pantages theater building, has taken additional space and has purchased the films formerly owned by the Standard Film Exchange, which has retired from the field.

The first feature production put on at the Pantages under the new summer policy, was the Metro production, the "Cowboy and the Lady." This will also be shown at the Oakland house.

The Progressive Motion Picture Company has added two rooms to its quarters in the Pacific building, one for office purposes and another for supplies. W. W. Hodkinson, of this concern, is expected to arrive here shortly for a month's stay on the coast.

Veto Kills Five Bills

Governor Brumbaugh, of Pennsylvania, Turns Down Five Measures Passed by Legislature Relating to Theaters and Moving Picture Shows—Executive's Reasons Given for Not Approving Each.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

GOVERNOR BRUMBAUGH, of Pennsylvania, recently vetoed five bills introduced in the Senate by Senator Snyder, of Schuylkill, all of the bills relating principally to the moving picture and vaudeville business in regard to the buildings in which they are exhibited and in so far as fire protection is concerned. Most of the above mentioned bills were approved of by moving picture intersts, but the governor ruthlessly applied the veto axe.

The bill legalizing the erection, construction and alteration of buildings for moving picture shows in actual use for such purpose before May 20, 1913, is vetoed because it purposes to exempt these buildings from supervision by the Department of Labor and Industry. "Let the fullest protection of life and health be given the public when they seek recreation and amusement," says the governor.

The bill exempting buildings for moving picture and vaudeville exhibitions from the building inspection act in cities is vetoed because it "would result in the maintenance in the heart of cities places of public amusement which are menaces to the lives and properties of citizens, and give warrant of law to a situation that by law ought not to be allowed."

The bill exempting buildings for moving picture and vaudeville shows from the supervision of the Fire Marshal's Department is vetoed because no act of Assembly should in any manner jeopardize the lives of the people when in these amusement places. "These places ought to be made as safe as human foresight can provide," said Governor Brumbaugh.

The act further defining and regulating amusements and amusement places and the method of licensing the same is vetoed because it was made necessary to carry out the intent of the two last mentioned bills. "It forms part of a series of proposed acts to remove from present supervision and safeguards certain types of amusement places. Since the others were not approved this one is not necessary," says the governor.

The bill repealing a part of the act regulating places of amusement in cities of the first class is vetoed because "it wipes out the power of the mayor to prohibit immoral performances," said the governor, adding, "the surprising thing is that any one should want this repealed."

JOHN C. RICE DIES.

John C. Rice, well known comedian and moving picture actor, died recently in the Hotel Majestic, following an attack of Bright's disease. Mr. Rice had only recently come to this city, accompanied by his wife, in order to rehearse a moving picture sketch with Marie Dressler. He was taken with a severe chill following the first rehearsal. His condition rapidly became serious and his eighteen-year-old daughter, Gladys Rice, hurried to this city from New York. His illness lasted for only several days.

ANNOYED BY CIRCULAR DISTRIBUTORS.

At a recent meeting of the Wilbur Civics Association, of Trenton, N. J., disapproval was sounded against the practice of the management of motion picture houses who annoy the residents of the Wilbur section, by passing advertising circulars, and it was decided to at once lodge a complaint with the city commission in effort to have the nuisance abated. The members complained that the distributors caused considerable vexation by the vigorous ringing of door bells, bringing the occupants to the front on business of a very trivial nature.

MARK L. SWAAB MARRIES.

Mark L. Swaab, son of Luis M. Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, this city, was married to Miss Catherine Westwood on Wednesday, June 9. The wedding was strictly private and only the immediate members of the two families were in attendance. The announcement of the wedding came as a surprise to many friends of the young couple in this vicinity as, while it was thought that they were engaged, it was not expected that a marriage would take place for some time to come. The newlyweds will reside on North Paxon street, West Philadelphia, and extend a cordial invitation to their many friends to pay them a visit in the near future.

WASMAN IN CHARGE OF THE HAVERFORD.

The Haverford theater, located at Sixtieth and Haverford streets, Philadelphia, has recently experienced a change in management. Mr. Wasman is the new manager, having superseded C. Friehofer. This theater is one of the largest moving picture houses in West Philadelphia and enjoys the patronage of a large number of people. Mr. Wasman plans to show nothing but the best of films and expects to double the attendance in the next several months.

NOTED IN PHILADELPHIA.

It has caused the moving picture people of Philadelphia much satisfaction to note that their delegation carried off the cup offered for the largest delegation at the recent convention held in Reading.

The moving picture theater, on the southeast corner of Twenty-sixth and Somerset streets, was recently conveyed by the Somerset Amusement Company to Barbara Ruhland for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $6,000. The theafer occupies a lot 102 by 59 feet and is assessed at $15,000.

Louis M. Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, this city, invites exhibitors to visit his establishment and examine the new Multigram electrical sign which he has on sale. This sign is certainly a masterful piece of work and can either be flashed or remain stationary.

Sea Isle City, N. J., now boasts of a new moving picture theater. This latest addition to the amusement attractions of the famous summer resort is under the management of Moe Rosenfeld and is of the latest design and technique. Much of the equipment in the new theater has been supplied by the Calehuff Supply Co., 1301 Race street, this city, including a No. 6A motor-driven machine.

W. J. E. Collins, proprietor of a moving picture theater at Waynesboro, Pa., for a number of years, has recently announced the sale of his establishment to Harry S. Lesher, a retired merchant of that place. The theater has enjoyed the patronage of many of the residents in that vicinity and should prove to be a good investment for Mr. Lesher.

Another moving picture theater has been added to the list of attractions at Ocean City, N. J., and will soon be opened to the public. The new establishment will be known as the Albert Fogg's theater and will be located on Fogg's pier.

The Moving Picture World welcomes interesting items.

THE VARIETY AND COMIQUE TO BE COMBINED.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

JAMES FREEMAN, who recently purchased the Variety and Comique theaters, in Beaver avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh, from James Mooney, intends to combine both theaters into one and make other extensive improvements on the property, which will result in a theater with a seating capacity of 1,000. Freeman is not a stranger to this section of the city by any means, as he procured the above-mentioned theaters from Joseph Windle, and he, in turn, was followed by Mr. Mooney, as proprietor. John Windle, who put the theaters up when the picture business was in its cradle, died some eighteen months ago. He was the first customer that Rowland & Clark, the big local moving picture firm, had, which will prove that Windle was a pioneer in the business. Every locality had a man, it seems, who got the "jump" on everybody else. Windle held this function in regard to this section.

INVENTS A POSTER MOUNTING MACHINE.

E. L. Harmon, proprietor of the American Poster Mounting Company, of Pittsburgh, recently received word from his attorneys that his application for a patent on a poster mounting apparatus had been acted on favorably by the patent office. All claims were allowed without citing a reference. Canadian protection has also been taken out by Mr. Harmon on his invention.

PITTSBURGH JOTTINGS.

A. A. McTighe, owner of the Empire theater, Pittsburgh, as well as several other amusement places in Western Pennsylvania, including the Arcade theater at Kennywood Park, has installed a Seeburg Solo Orchestrion in the last named place. Mr. McTighe reports that he is very pleased with this instrument.

The Lycoming opera house and office building, owned by the Fred M. Lamade estate, was recently destroyed by fire of an unknown origin. The loss is estimated at more than $100,000.

Manager Harvey B. Day, of the Pittsburgh office of the Fox Film Corporation, has leased the two rooms formerly occupied by the Exhibitors' Publishing Company, adjoining his present quarters in Fourth avenue, and will use them for poster rooms. The present location will be used almost exclusively as offices and this will give the large force of clerks plenty of room to properly handle the ever increasing business.

The Famous Players Film Service, located in Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, recently installed a very complete printing plant, including a Mablstedt multi-color press, which will be used mainly for dating and printing heralds. This machine is a wonderful piece of mechanism, and has a speed capacity of 5,000 an hour and does as good work as any machine.

The Thomas theater, formerly the Orpheum, again opened for business last Saturday, in Sharon, Pa. This house is now under the management of a local company, which is headed by D. J. Lewis, with Charles Offenberg in charge.

At a meeting of the judges held on last Monday evening the name "Lyric" was selected from among the many suggested for the new theater now conducted by Mr. Austraw.

Messrs. Delaney & Clark, managers of the Court theater, in Washington, Pa., recently installed a cooling and ventilating system which, it is said, does the work effectively and will make this house one of the coolest in the country. A Becker daylight screen has also been installed which improves the appearance of the house.

A huge pipe organ has been installed in the Nixon theater in Tarentum, Pa. Manager W. S. Hodge is following the lead of prominent managers throughout the country in providing his house with a pipe organ.

Harry Gerson, who was for twelve years manager of the Grand Opera House, in Titusville, Pa., has bought the Rex theater in this city.

A. A. Weiland, of the Weiland Film Company, Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, announces the securing of "Behind the Fighting Lines of the German Army," with territorial rights for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Moving pictures of all the public schools were taken during the past week by Manager Dunnmyer, of the Grand theater, in Butler, Pa.

The Alhambra theater, in Beaver Falls, Pa., closed its season of stock and began running pictures last week. John Strub, the manager, was a recent visitor in Pittsburgh booking pictures. He stated that as a moving picture house the Alhambra is sure to make good.

Mrs. Josephine Dunkle has purchased her partner's half interest in the Coronet theater in Millvale, Pa., and is now sole owner. Mrs. S. Davis states that she will retire from business. The owner announces that she will improve the house and make general repairs in the near future. The capacity will be increased from 195 to 250 seats.

A new moving picture theater is being erected in Elkins, W. Va., by J. B. Talbot. The new house will have a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of 150 feet, constructed of granite, with a capacity of about 1,500. Mr. Talbot is well known to Pittsburgh exhibitors and is expected to make good, as this theater when completed will be one of the most complete in West Virginia.

J. H. Barclay will erect a one-story brick nickelodeon in Chartiers avenue, Twentieth ward, Pittsburgh. When completed the structure will represent an investment of $5,000.

The management of the Comique theater in Butler, Pa., believes in keeping abreast of the times. This popular playhouse, which has an enviable reputation for high-class pictures, has given further evidence through its manager, Charles Demas, of its progressiveness by installing the "very last word" in theatrical musical instruments, a Wurlitzer orchestra piano and pipe organ.

The Movie Songs Company will release one production each week to be the latest and best in popular and home songs. These pictures are all staged in Carrick, a suburb of Pittsburgh, and are handled by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company.

The new moving picture house, which will be known as the Family theater, at East Ohio and Nash streets, Northside, Pittsburgh, is well under the course of construction. George J. Schweitzer will manage the new house.

Mrs. A. W. Cross, wife of Manager Cross, of the Hudson Film Company, Pittsburgh, has gone to her summer home in Leonardo, in the Atlantic Highlands.

Frank Stewart and Smith, Hardican & Company are estimating on revised plans for the erection of a three story, reinforced concrete, steel, brick and terra cotta theater, to be erected in Pottsville, Pa., for Philip Brenn.

BIG TIME FEATURES ASSOCIATION ACTIVE IN OHIO.

The activity of the Big Time Feature Exhibitors' Association, comprising within its ranks some of the leading houses in this part of the country, has not ceased with its recent victories in the matter of securing attractive features for its members, but has rather been increased, with a view to keeping up the good work. Vice-President Joseph Hennegan and Secretary William K. Howard, both of whom are conspicuous figures, are the exhibitors, were in Cleveland last week, with a view to securing some exceptional attractions for their members, and while they are not saying anything, certain indications are to the effect that they were successful.

Competition in Dayton

Gem City Exhibitors Feel Burden of Having to Run Ten-Cent Programs for Jitney —Attempts to Get Owners Together on United Movement to Better Conditions Have Failed—Small Profits at Present.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

REPORTS from Dayton, O., indicate that conditions among exhibitors in the Gem City are such that there can be little profit for any of them. The trouble has arisen out of the growing practice of giving long programs, worth at least a ten-cent charge, for five cents. It is reported that several attempts have been made to get the managers and owners together in a meeting at which the whole trouble might be thrashed out, but that these attempts have been unsuccessful. The officers of the Dayton Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, therefore, have finally decided that there is nothing to be done. The League as a body has been more or less inactive for a year or so, and as President Val Rayburg has found it impossible to secure anything like a united movement to better conditions, he feels that he is helpless. Five, six and seven reels for five cents will therefore continue to be shown, unless some means of eliminating the competitive conditions which brought on the war can be devised. Leading exhibitors deplore the conditions which exist, but declare that they can do nothing, and must take such steps as are possible to keep their own business. And there the matter rests.

SUPPLY CONCERN MAY MOVE FACTORY TO CINCINNATI.

Prospects for the location in Cincinnati of a leading supply concern in the moving-picture field developed, with the recent visit of L. A. Boening, president of the United States Cinematograph Co., of Chicago. Mr. Boening stated that he came to Cincinnati for the purpose of finding, if possible, a suitable location for his plant, which manufactures moving picture apparatus and supplies of various kinds, employing about 75 men. The number of exchanges and theaters in this vicinity, in addition to its central location, make Cincinnati an ideal place for such an enterprise, and Mr. Boening indicated that the chances were very much in favor of his locating here.

MANY-SIDED CLAY E. BREHM.

Manager Clay E. Brehm, of the Cincinnati office of the World Feature Film Corporation, is nothing if not a "mixer." He took a party of his friends among the exhibitors to Indianapolis for the automobile races in his machine, thereby winning their lasting regard for him, both as a skilled driver and as a first-class film man. As to his management of the local film office of the World, his handling of one of the regular meetings of the road men last week, at which he aroused the selling force to a point where they can sell films like the proverbial hot cakes, makes plain the cause of the unvarying success of the office. His appearance as a public speaker, on the occasion of a contest staged at the Grand last week, consisted only of some announcements, but he handled himself very creditably, except, as he stated, for some shakiness in the knees.

LYRIC GETS FIRST RUN V-L-S-E FILMS.

The Lyric, which had a successful summer season of moving pictures last summer, under the management of Paul Hillman, and which made a good start a few weeks ago, has landed a connection which has at one swoop, as far as any one may tell, enabled the house to leave the five-cent ranks and to assure itself of a series of first-class features such as those which are drawing big houses at the Grand, the Strand, the Alhambra, the Colonial, and other leading downtown houses. Manager Hillman was fortunate enough to secure the first run downtown of the new Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay combination, and will use two features a week, as the other houses do which have a first-class feature service. A highly auspicious start on the new policy was made last week with "The Eagle's Nest," with Edwin Arden and Romaine Fielding, which gave way on Thursday to the film version of Harold McGrath's "The Carpet From Bagdad," featuring Kathleen Williams, the famous Selig star. Manager Hillman is highly elated over the new deal which he has secured, and looks for a big season for the Lyric in moving pictures.

CINCINNATI, TOO, WILL HAVE A LOCAL FILM.

A Cincinnati newspaper has made arrangements with the E. E. Fulton Co. to produce a local photoplay, featuring a Cincinnati girl and other local people, the girl star to be selected by means of a voting contest to which any unmarried girl in Hamilton county, Ohio, or in Kenton or Campbell counties, Kentucky, is eligible. The contest started with a bang last week, votes being taken in the lobbies of the Grand and Alhambra theaters, in Cincinnati, the Lyric, in Covington, and the Temple, in Newport. The winner of the contest will receive a cash prize of $50, besides the glory and the opportunity involved in the chance to star in the leading role, while the runner-up will receive a smaller prize and a less conspicuous role. Judging by the local interest in moving pictures, the contest should be a hummer. It runs until June 30.

PICTURES AT REDLAND FIELD.

After a full month of amazingly cold and rainy weather in May, which was fine for the exhibitors as a whole, but rather hard on the airdome promoters, June has finally produced some weather giving the latter a chance for their white alleys; and the Feature Amusement Co., which operated regular evening shows last year at Redland Field, the ball park of the Cincinnati team, has made its start on a similar enterprise this season, with good prospects for success, especially after the weather warms up. So far, although the rain has let up, the evenings have been rather cool for outdoor shows, and it will not be until really hot weather develops that the ball park and the airdomes can expect good houses at night.

CINCINNATI SHORTER ITEMS.

James Clemens, an usher at the Dome theater, in Youngstown, O., proved his sterling honesty, and was rewarded therefor, when last week he picked up a pocketbook belonging to a steel man, containing $50, and turned it into the management. A card revealed the name of the owner, who was soon located, and he was naturally delighted at recovering his lost wealth. Manager Dyer states that numerous lost articles picked up in the theater are never called for.

The Park theater, of Youngstown, O., extended a neat courtesy to the local G. A. R. post on Decoration Day, and one which was especially appreciated, in inviting the veterans of the Civil War to see free of charge the New York Sun's European war pictures. The changes in methods of warfare which have taken place in the past 50 years were extremely interesting to the old soldiers.

The new Alhambra theater, at Sandusky, O., is to have its own power house, ground having been broken recently for the structure. Geo. Schade, owner of the house, expects to have the power plant in by July 15. It will stand near the site of the old power house, which will make way for the theater.

Goldstein to Build

Detroit Picture Man Heads Company with Plans for New Picture Theater on Woodward and Willis Avenues—Will Be Called the Astor—2,000 Persons Seated on One Floor—Cost of Building and Lease of Site.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE latest announcement is the coming of the Astor and it promises to be the largest and most beautiful motion picture theatre in Detroit, having the entire seating capacity on one floor. This information has just been divulged by Mr. Harry Goldstein, of 22 East Forest avenue, the man who was, in a measure, responsible for the Majestic theatre, at Woodward and Willis avenues, which is said to be "in a class by itself" from the standpoint of beauty and architectural design. The Majestic is the only theatre of its kind in the United States seating 2,000 people without a balcony. Mr. Goldstein and his associates have formed the Astor Theatre Company, and have taken a 40-year lease on the plant of the Wagner Baking Company, which fronts on four streets—Grand River, Bagg, Greenwood and Fifth. The location is about a mile from the center of town. Six car lines pass the property.

The company will be incorporated for $250,000 and as soon as it gets possession of the property, which will be about July 15th, the present buildings will be town down and a new structure erected that will cost $200,000, which will include the theatre proper and stores along Grand River avenue. The total rent for the 40-year period is said to be a half million dollars. While Mr. Goldstein has associated with him a number of very prominent theatrical people, whose names he does not care to divulge for the present, he says that a small block of the stock is to be placed on the market at par value. C. Howard Crane has been selected to draw the plans and the theatre building will be erected by Frank Farrington Co., the same firms that handled the Majestic.

Mr. Goldstein says that the new Astor will be designed somewhat along the lines of the Majestic, following out the amphitheatre idea of arranging the seats, so that there will be no upstairs. The size of the property acquired is 155 by 172 feet. One of the things already decided upon is the installation of a pipe organ costing $35,000, and an orchestra of 27 pieces who will give grand concerts as an introduction to each performance.

The new Astor will be strictly a photoplay house, and Mr. Goldstein has notified his architect to spare no expense to make it the finest in the country, barring none. The Wagner Baking Co., who now occupy the property, are building a half million dollar plant on the opposite corner which they expect to move into about the middle of July. Just as soon as they vacate the present building, it will be torn down to make way for the new theater. Mr. Goldstein says that he expects to have it completed the early part of 1916.

PROSPERITY IN DETROIT.

The remarkable thing about the moving picture industry in Detroit is the fact that business seems to be getting better all the time. On the nights when the weather is cool, all of the houses—large and small—seem to have good-sized audiences, and when big features are announced as attractions, the houses do capacity. Last Tuesday the Gladwin Park theatre put on "The Christian." It poured the entire evening and yet at 6:30 every seat in the large auditorium was taken and people were standing with umbrellas two blocks long waiting for the second show. At the new Knickerbocker there is seldom a vacant seat on the first show; the program there is changed daily; the new Maxine, at Mack and Baldwin, is doing better business than ever, according to Ed V. McGrath, manager; the Kunsky houses are all keeping up to normal; the new Norwood is packed every night, the house seating 1,000; and as for the New Majestic, this theatre is doing a phenomenal business with Big Four (V-L-S-E) features, running an entire week. The weekly receipts at the Majestic are in the neighborhood of $5,000 and the total attendance for Saturday and Sunday is running close to 12,000 people, despite the theatre being more than a mile and a half from the downtown district.

JOHN KUNSKY COMPLIMENTS US.

In June 12th issue of the Moving Picture World several columns were devoted to "As Others See Us," being extracts from letters sent in by subscribers to show how much they thought of the magazine. In that connection, John H. Kunsky, who has a big chain of theatres in Detroit, desires to pay his respects. He told the World representative this week that he actually couldn't exist without the Moving Picture World. He feels that it is the most valuable mail that comes to his office. In fact, Mr. Kunsky thinks so much of the World that he subscribes for enough copies to supply all of his managers. Not only does he gives them the paper free each week, but he insists that they read it carefully so as to keep thoroughly in touch with every phase of the moving picture industry. He wants his men to know all there is to know about pictures and the men and women connected with them. He wants each man to be an "information bureau" so that they can answer any question put to them, not only concerning the pictures which are shown in the Kunsky theatres but about the new pictures which are coming out from week to week, the new people entering the business either as producers or players, and everything that's "news."

NEW KUNSKY HOME ON GRAND RIVER AVENUE.

It looks very much as if Grand River avenue would soon be a rival of Woodward avenue in number of moving picture theatres. At present John H. Kunsky is building a hundred thousand dollar playhouse at Grand River and Fourteenth strets which will open the latter part of August; at Grand River and Trumbull avenues, the Globe theatre is being enlarged and the seating capacity increased to nearly a thousand; the Ferry Park Theatre Co. has incorporated for $100,000 to build a theatre at Grand River and the Boulevard, and along comes the Astor Theatre Co., with the announcement of a $200,000 theatre at Grand River avenue and Bagg street.

IN INDIANA.

James Cruze and Sidney Bracey, who had parts in "The Million Dollar Mystery," are visiting towns in Northern Indiana on their way to the Pacific Coast by automobile. They are featured at houses where the "Mystery" appeared.

The Princess theater, Bloomington, featured a "Mother's Night" recently, playing up the fact that Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, one of the oldest actresses on the stage, would play the part of the mother in "Hearts and Flowers." Every mother who saw the show was given a carnation.

E. B. Moore is managing the once-a-week shows given by the merchants of Waynetown, Ind., on the public square.

James Kolar, manager of the Phoenix theater, Laporte, Ind., for ten years manager of the house and the first to open a picture house in Laporte, is to take his first vacation. He will travel by auto to Detroit, and if the trip pleases him will, on his return, start for California. W. H. Esch is the new manager of the house.

LICENSING AIRDOMES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE legal department of Indianapolis has decided that the airdome is not an outdoor show in the same sense that a circus is, and as a result the airdome owners will pay only the regular $25 license fee and not the $10 a day fee charged for outdoor shows.

For a time the city controller held up the issuance of airdome licenses on the ground that the airdome was an out-door show and therefore subject to the $10 a day charge. The airdome men naturally objected and the matter was put up to the city legal department, which found the law's "intention" was not to prevent an airdome from being operated.

MARION, ILL., JUSTIFIED IN SPURR SUIT.

The suit of Goldie Spurr against James O. Batchelor, Mayor of Marion, and members of the Marion police force for damages for false imprisonment, was won by the city of Marion. Mrs. Spurr was arrested Jan. 31 for operating on Sunday and she charged that she was held in jail several hours without being given an opportunity to give bail, and that during her stay in jail she was made sick by the odor of disinfectant in the jail. This decision of her suit will effctually prevent the operation of picture shows on Sunday in Marion, at least for the time being.

The Spurrs maintained that the theater was open on Sunday for charity, the Marion Goodfellows Club to get the benefit. No admission fee was charged, those admitted being asked to contribute to the club. A portion of the money was to go to the club. This is the method followed in other cities of the state.

WINS CONTEST, BUT WON'T TALK.

Miss Espey Clutch, Columbus, Ind., has been announced as the winner of the contest to name a heroine of the film, "Miss Columbus," to be produced at the Crump theater, Columbus. Miss Clutch when approached by the interviewer said, "Say, if you write anything about this cut the comedy, see." That's why this is so short and sad.

STEINHAUSER GETS BOUQUET.

Burton Steinhauser, who was recently given high praise in a letter to the projection department of the World, found himself the whole show at a subsequent meeting of the union. One operator whose work had been shown up by the letter writer, roasted the work of Steinhauser to a finish, and then as a finish to his talk said, with a grin, "just to show how I feel about it, I have a little token of appreciation for the one operator in Terre Haute who is delivering the goods." With that, Steinhauser was presented with a bouquet of two dozen carnations.

INDIANA SHORTER ITEMS.

Attorney Guy Kinman and Carl G. Thompson have started an airdome at Sullivan, Ind.

Among other exciting things, Miss Edna Northcutt, Crawfordsville, Ind., elected leading lady of the Arc theater contest, was filmed in the act of buying a beefsteak from a sanitary shop.

The film of the 500-mile race taken at the Speedway by the Coburn Company, Indianapolis producers, was exhibited at the Lyric.

Gus Kramer, "Crafty Gus," at the Star theater, Muncie, was rushed by about 500 or 600 students of the Muncie Normal Institute. They had Gus going around like a top to know what to do, but he locked the door until the show was over, and then let them all in. You see, Gus knew they didn't want to see the show. They just wanted to know that they could get in, so when the door was opened they just walked right in and walked right out again.

KANSAS CITY JOTTINGS.

Joseph M. Gilday, manager of the Willis Wood theater, says that the audiences have held up as well as they did all winter. The theater's temperature by automatic methods is kept down to several degrees lower than it is in the winter time and the patrons have not yet complained of the heat at this indoor house.

C. S. Edwards, manager of the Pathe Exchange, states that according to the receipts and orders for bookings that have been coming in from the State of Kansas that the new serial of the company under the title "Who Pays?" has been going much better than it was expected to. He says that in the cities where the moving picture field is rather crowded for the exhibitors and the patrons have tired of the serials it may be different, but in Kansas City they have been drawing large crowds and in the country.

A. L. Sheridan, traveler for the Pathe Exchange, at Kansas City, has been engaged in his leisure hours with writing a book. He says that he is doing it for the love of writing and that he has about finished the first drafting of the book. He says that he intends to put it on the market as an educational book some time during the next year. According to Mr. Sheridan it is a practical treatise on the "Science of Modern Business." Perhaps after it is finished Mr. Sheridan will write a moving picture scenario of his adventures and tribulations in book writing.

Archie Blue, of Salina, Kan., was recently in the city, and he says that his theater there has been drawing large crowds at each entertainment. Mr. Blue has been using the Pathe service exclusively and was visiting Mr. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Company here.

The Empress theater, at Kansas City, which was purchased by Marcus Loew last August from the Sullivan-Considine interests, together with twenty-seven other theaters throughout the country, was repurchased by the Sullivan-Considine interests last week according to news received in Kansas City. The string of theaters purchased by Marcus Loew involved $6,000,000, and was one of the largest theatrical transactions ever made in this country. Because the change in ownership necessitates a change in the bookings of the theater, moving pictures are now being shown there.

H. O. Martin, of Chicago, who has the moving picture rights for these theaters, made the arrangement to open last Monday with "The Spoilers," although the picture has been shown here several times. Mr. Martin says that he has noticed that it has drawn so good that he believes that it will do the same again and that its popularity has not died out. Mr. Martin has been showing travel pictures at the theaters for some time, and the Pathe Weekly. Cyrus Jacobs remains as manager of the theater, and he says that "The Spoilers" has been drawing good audiences.

Marty Williams, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, says that the business at this time of the year, when it was generally expected to decrease, has been steadily increasing, and that nearly all of the indoor houses are still remaining open, while all through the territory the airdomes have been opening up big.

Mayor Henry L. Jost, of Kansas City, recently spoke at the Benton theater in interest of the bonds which were recently voted on. There was a little confusion at the theater when people inquired if the Mayor would speak. Mr. Mayer owns and operates the theater.

IN ST. JOSEPH, MO.

C. Mack is back again in St. Joseph, Mo., with his "Van Dyke & Eaton" stock company, playing in an airdome. Mr. Mack has followed this business, with the same company (its members changing many times of course) for 24 years, and he marvels, himself, how he has escaped the pictures. He hasn't escaped altogether, as a matter of fact—he frequently runs a reel or so of Keystone between acts.

Does Censorship Pay?

Kansas State Censorship Board Pays Expenses and Has a Balance of $1,411 from Month's Activities—Though Money Goes into State Treasury, the Good Films Have Paid as Much Tax as the Bad.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE moving picture censorship has proved to be profitable to the State of Kansas, as is shown by the receipts from censoring films received by the state treasurer. Since the censorship was started, April 12, the state has received, above the expenses and the salaries of the two censors and all expenses incident to the work, a total of just $1,411—not so bad for just a little more than a month. At the present rate of progress the state bids fair to gain something like $15,000 a year through censorship fees paid by motion picture exhibitors in Kansas or rather supposed to be paid by them for the moving picture companies are the ones that are being robbed of this money. The fees for moving picture work goes into a special fund, out of which all expenses and salaries of censorship is paid. The balance left goes into the general revenue of the treasury. Apparently the balance will be a good healthy one right along.

AIRDOMES FLOURISH.

Notwithstanding the fact that some of the largest of the indoor moving picture theaters have provided artificial means of keeping their shows cool during the hot months the airdomes and open air theaters in Kansas which are situated in the residence districts are drawing large crowds every evening.

FEW AIRDOMES IN KANSAS CITY

The reason why, as noted in these columns recently, there are few airdomes in Kansas City, is said to have been a tie-up at the city hall in the matter of granting licenses due to a political graft. According to whispered accounts about the city hall the film companies have had a hand in keeping the airdomes from opening. It is not thought likely, for most of them are complaining that business would be much better if the airdomes would open in full force here. Some of the indoor theaters in the residence districts have had to close during the hot weather and this has hurt the business of the film companies to a large extent, although they do not care to admit it.

SUMMER SHOWS.

The moving picture business is further eating into the stage productions at Kansas City, for those theaters that closed for the hot weather months have put on picture shows. The reason is that the actors refuse to play during hot weather. Yet the theaters are finding that their patronage is not decreasing in the least. One result may be that one or two will do away entirely with the cheap vaudeville acts that they have been using and show nothing but pictures. One of the finest theaters in the city was converted into a moving picture house and had an extraordinary good season all last winter.

WHITE RATS WILL PASS THROUGH KANSAS CITY.

Information has reached Kansas City that the White Rats Club of New York is on a wild scamper and that the stage at Kansas City is directly in their path. A great number who will represent that club in a play here will probably meet themselves face to face if they happen to drop into a moving picture theater, for nearly all of the actors on the role of that play have at one time or another played the moving pictures for Kansas City folk. Some of the stars will be seen in talking picture antics at the Grand theater very soon. The scamper will, it is said, start about June 7, and the club will make one-night stands at the principal cities on its way to the Pacific Coast. The Actors' Association is to get a rich share of the profits of this trip.

WANTS TO BE ON BUSINESS SIDE OF STREET.

B. D. Dyson, an exhibitor who has it practically his own way in North St. Joseph, a community of very moderate priced homes and small shops, nevertheless finds it profitable to put on good shows—at 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children. He runs Universals and features; four reels—a two-reel and two singles—ordinarily, though frequently almost doubling this. When the street carnival was held recently, taking in the block where the Palace is located, he sent an emissary to Kansas City to get specially good features, even though his house would have been crowded anyway. An open air theater across the street has not yet opened definitely for the summer, though it gave two shows before a bad spell of weather caused a temporary shutdown. One of the conclusions concerning the moving picture business that Mr. Dyson has reached is that a moving picture playhouse must be on the business side of the street to succeed. A house on the residence side seems rather "out of it," he says, whereas the people are naturally to be found on pleasant evenings, and even in the day time, on the side where the stores are. The difference between dropping in and going "clear across the street" affects enough people to constitute the margin between success and failure.

GOOD FILMS, SWEET MUSIC.

"There's only one way to run a moving picture show, and that is to give the best of pictures, and the best of music, too," said A. W. Riegelman, manager of the Colonial, at St. Joseph. And that Colonial is some classy house. It has a canopy that makes it look like an enchanted palace; one of the show signs among the many elaborate electric signs of that well lighted city; a lobby as immaculate and brilliant as a ballroom, and an interior that makes one think of Shakespeare's line, "Lulled in these flowers with dances and delight." The dances are the exquisite music, the delight the pictures. Mr. Riegelman has recently reorganized the orchestra, eliminating the drums and brass. They are too crass, the horns and pounding are, for a high class picture show, where the atmosphere is of delicacy and charm and sentiment rather than of riotous emotions. The string orchestra seems to give exactly the touch that harmonizes perfectly with the ensemble of the entertainment, and seems to be mighty satisfactory to the large clientele. The Colonial, in St. Joseph, is one of three houses, the others being the Palace and the Family, at Des Moines, controlled by J. Miloslowsky & Co.

JOTTINGS IN KANSAS CITY.

F. F. Nine, assistant manager of the Big Four Film Company, says that the business done by his company is picking up in fine shape all through the territory. Mr. Nine recently joined the forces of the Big Four after resigning from the Pathe Exchange. He takes a great deal of interest in the local theaters and the pictures that they are now showing. The service of his company seems to interest him most, and the other men engaged in the business accuse him of visiting every show within walking distance that are running any of the pictures of his company.

Making Jules Verne Film

Universal Company, Including the Williamsons, Inventors of Submarine Picture Apparatus, Now at Nassau—Director Stewart Peyton Making Picture of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea"—Buys Yacht to Destroy.

By J. Melville Andrews, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

GEORGE WILLIAMSON, who with his brother have become famous in the moving picture world because of their invention of the submarine tube, is now in Jacksonville, where he has purchased the beautiful yatch Malhoma, which is to be destroyed to make realistic one of the parts in the picture now being taken by one of the Universal companies in the Bahama Islands.

Yacht Bought for Destruction.

Mr. Williamson and his brother, it will likely be recalled, have made submarine or under-water pictures possible, the invention of a tube which can be lowered to a great depth, the operators working from a chamber at the lower end. The pictures taken in this manner have been sufficiently wonderful to receive the endorsement of the Smithsonian Institute. Strange facts and species have been discovered by this novel method of photography, perfect pictures being obtained at a distance of one hundred and fifty feet.

The picture now being made at Nassau, is taken from several of Jules Verne's books, under the direction of Stewart Peyton, with a company of fifty people, among whom are the Williamson brothers, Matt Moore, Jane Gail and Joe Welsh.

Every part in the production of this picture will be made real, irrespective of obstacles or cost, scenes to be made at Universal City, it is said, will contain 5,000 people.

The Universal Company has purchased ten of the latest style, self-contained diving suits, and two of the most noted divers who directed the raising of the F-4 submarine, are now at Nausau working in connection with the Williamson brothers. Mr. Williamson tells of the divers testing the new suits. These suits have no rope or air lines fastened to them, all equipment is carried by the diver, generating his own air for breathing. In making the test the divers walked on the bed of Nassau Sound, from the island on which the studio is located to another island near by, they were seen to appear on the island shore and after a short rest returned by the same route.

"Captain Nemo," who it is remembered was the famous character of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," through the periscope of his submarine discovers his most hated enemy on the deck of a fine yacht. He orders the yacht destroyed. The picture will then show the actual interior of a submarine, the torpedo being placed in the tube and the firing of it, then, through the use of the Williamson's submarine tube the torpedo will be seen going through the water on its deadly mission, it will be seen to strike the yacht and then—the Universal Co. has destroyed a yacht that alone cost six thousand dollars.

The yacht Malhoma, purchased in Jacksonville, is the second yacht the Universal Co. has bought for the purpose of destruction in the picture now being made. The first one, bought in New York, started on its way to the Bahamas in advance of the company, but when only a hundred miles from Jacksonville it was found she was leaking and had to be beached, where the waves battered her to pieces.

FLORIDA NOTES.

Mr. Kalbfield, manager of the Grand, Palatka, Fla., has returned home from a business trip to Atlanta and Macon.

The Temple theater, Ocala, Fla., reports good business the past week with General Film Service and Features.

The Grand, Hastings, Fla., reports business very good.

All houses in Tampa report good business despite hot weather.

The Graystone Casino, at Kissimmee, Fla., J. L. Robinson, manager, was turned into a church last week, excepting one night on which there was a home talent play. The theater was being used for what is known as Holly Rollers Revival meetings.

The Dixie theater, Miami, Fla., closed last Saturday. The Dixie has been playing high-class pictures, but in the future will only play stock two nights a week.

JACKSONVILLE NOTES.

Carl C. Smith, manager of the Republic theater, has returned from Atlanta, where he has been on business. The Republic played to wonderful business, with Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland." Mr. Smith says he has some good ones for the future.

The new Arcade theater is to open on the 22d with Paramount program and high-class singing attractions. Mr. W. L. Whithead is now in New York making preparation for the opening.

"The Goddess" on Monday and "The Isle of Regeneration" on Thursday at the Imperial with the Texas Quartet made plenty of business for this house.

The Prince theater played to capacity on Thursday and Friday with Mary Pickford in "The Dawn of To-morrow."

The New Strand, a colored moving picture house, opened here this week. This house is said to be one of the finest in the South. Sidney Walker is manager.

"Sir" Edwin Baker is still plugging at the Pathe Exchange, and judging by the smile he wears the "Rooster" must be crowing to his satisfaction.

The Republic theater seems to be very fortunate in getting pictures which were made in Florida and containing local people in the cast. This week they will run Howard Eastbrook's "Four Feathers," which he made in and around Jax. Mrs. Leslie Carter, in "The Heart of Maryland," is booked at this house next week.

D. C. Randolph, of the Southern Feature Exchange, with offices in the Bisbee building, who has been in New York for the past few weeks, advises that he has added "The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan" to his list of features for this territory.

Roy Coler, operator at the Prince, is surely the "Running Kid." Besides running the pictures at the Prince he runs his automobile all over the city, and is now the possessor of a speed boat which he will be running up and down the river.

Studio Notes.

Jere Austin, who has been with the Kalem Co. here for the past two years, has resigned and is preparing his new car, a 60 horse-power Sterns, for a trip north, to Chicago, via Atlanta, Nashville, and Louisville. Mr. Austin has arranged with quite a number of theaters along the intended route to stop over and appear with "The Arkansaw Traveler," in which he worked, making a short talk, and to answer the numerous questions which those who are not acquainted with the making of moving pictures would like to ask Joe Gessman, property man of the Kalem Co., has also resigned and will accompany Mr. Austin on his tour.

Bessie Cothran, who is a native of Florida, but has been appearing in stock in the East for the past five years, is now with the Kalem picture players here.

Louise Armour, a clever little actress who has been with the Kalem Co. here, is now in the mountains of North Carolina on her vacation.

"Bill" Hopkins, formerly with the Lubin Co., who styles himself "the unluckiest man in the world," has met with another accident. "Bill" is living on his house boat on the river, and while fishing a few days ago fell, breaking four ribs, but you can't kill 'em.

"Bob" Vignola is now working on his last picture before going to the Cliffside Studio. This is another of the "Broadway Favorites" pictures, with Harold Ford in the lead, entitled "The Weaver of Dreams."

John Macklin and wife, of the Kalem Co., have also resigned and will leave in a few days.

With so many of the local Kalemites leaving, things at the studio are dull.

It is expected that Harry Milarde, who is now directing, will be in charge of the studio when Mr. Vignola leaves.

THREE NEW THEATERS IN BALTIMORE.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ORDINANCES authorizing the establishment of moving picture theaters in various parts of Baltimore figured prominently in a recent session of the City Council. Three were introduced and were referred to the Committee on Police and Jail, as follows: For Harry W. Riddle, the right to establish a theater at Garrison and Liberty Heights avenues; for William H. Whitehurst, the right to convert the buildings at 842 and 844 West North avenue into a moving picture theater, and for the granting of the right to the Goldfield Amusement Company to establish a motion picture theater at 913-919 Warner street. Mayor Preston has vetoed an ordinance authorizing the operation of a theater on upper East Fayette street, stating that it is a residence neighborhood and that the theater was opposed by the churches in the vicinity thereof.

METRO EXCHANGE INCORPORATES.

The Metro Film Service Company, with offices in the Strand theater building, in this city, has been incorporated under the laws of Delaware with a capital stock of $20,000 divided into 400 shares of a par value of $50 each. The charter granted this corporation is very elastic and gives them wide latitude in the conduct of their business. Its primary object is, however, the handling of all Metro releases and such other special films as they may care to take up in this territory. The officers of the corporation are Oliver J. Allenbaugh, president; J. Frank Brown, vice-president, and Lawrence M. Day, secretary and treasurer. The territory to be covered will include the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the eastern half of North Carolina.

SAFETY FIRST FILM MAGAZINE.

E. W. Salmon, jr., of 641 West Pratt street, Baltimore, visited Washington last week for the purpose of demonstrating his new Safety First Film Magazine for the benefit of the local fire marshal. This new magazine comes in from four to ten sections and is of a height that complies with the requirements of the fire underwriters. It has a double jacketed casing which forms a fire chamber with a half-inch air space between the outer and inner linings. Inside the partitions are similarly constructed with an air chamber between each. The doors and frames, as well as the standard which supports it, are of cast iron. The magazine is barrel shaped. The doors are equipped with a lift plate which brings the film up so that it can easily be removed for transfer to the magazine of the projecting machine. There are no springs within the compartments, but the construction of the doors, even without the weight of the film, causes them to close automatically so there is no possibility of fire entering the compartments. Should the film catch on fire, but a very small part, a matter of inches would burn for the reason that being air tight the oxygen within the chamber would soon be exhausted and the fire would be quickly extinguished. The first of these magazines, one of four sections, has been installed in the operator's booth at Crandall's theater, where it is said it is giving great satisfaction.

FILM NOTES IN WASHINGTON.

E. D. Heims, of the American theater, of Roanoke, Va., is receiving the congratulations of his many friends upon his entry into the state of matrimony. He traveled on his honeymoon, however, through "The Land of the Skies," this being a very attractive part of North Carolina in the vicinity of Asheville, which on this occasion was made more attractive, it is said, by the presence of Mrs. Heims.

W. H. Whitehurst will build a modern moving picture theater and dance hall at 842 and 844 West North avenue, Baltimore, Md. Architect J. C. Spedden has been commissioned to prepare the plans.

George W. Smiley, formerly traveling representative out of the Washington office of Pathe, Inc., is now secretary of the Co-Operative Booking Agency, having offices in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Building.

The Hamilton theater, in Martinsville, Va., has been opened with Paramount pictures by John W. Hamilton, a well known hotel man, of that place.

The Columbia theater will open its summer season with Paramount pictures beginning with a week's showing of the "Eternal City" with box office prices of 10, 15 and 25 cents.

Marcus Notes has installed two Simplex motor-driven projecting machines in the Empress theater, which is operated by him.

E. T. Craal, who operates the Olympic and Imperial theaters in Newport News and the Cocade, in Petersburg, Va., was in the city last week booking feature films for these houses.

The Elite theater, which has been operated by a group of New York theater men at 1402 Fourteenth street, Northwest, is about to close its doors.

Cut-outs, mounted on heavy frames, are becoming very popular for use as lobby displays. The craze started when J. Hines, who does sign painting and poster mounting for the local theaters, brought out the first cut-out of Charles Chaplin. Since that time he has been kept busy producing similar effects for six sheets of Mary Pickford, Heine and Louie and other well known stars. These are very effective as well as attractive and novel.

Lion & May are about to erect a new theater in Manassas, Va., which will be known as the Dixie and which will replace another theater of that name now owned by this firm which will then be used for the entertainment of the colored population of the town.

A. J. Harlow is about to open an airdome in Orange, Va.

Charles E. Reded will open an airdome at Colonial Beach, Va.

"The Opium Pipe," produced as a photoplay to be used by Miss Jane Addams in her peace campaign, had its initial exhibition at Crandall's theater last week when it was viewed by a group of society women, the guests of Mrs. Christian Hemmick, the authoress and producer of the play, which was one of the society events of the early spring. The pictures are in colors and were produced for Mrs. Hemmick by the Feature Film Company, of this city. Part of the settings were sections of the beautiful gardens of the Pan-American Union Building. The members of the cast were all seen in their original parts. Another production of Mrs. Hemmick, "The Awakening," a war and peace tableaux, is also being filmed.

Manager Gave a Parade

Louisville's Prize-Winning Beauty in the Universal Contest, Cora Lee Bennett, Has Drive Through City in Automobile at Head of a Parade with Band—A. C. Farrell Has Signs Out on Six Cars.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Nashville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER A. C. FARRELL of the Central Film Service Company's Louisville office, decided upon some rather good advertising for the Universal service on the spur of the moment. Miss Cora Lee Bennett, of Louisville, who was successful in winning the Louisville Evening Post's "Universal Beauty Contest," was about to leave the city on her trip to Universal City, Cal., and Mr. Farrell decided to have an automobile parade in which the Universal would get some advertising, as the newspaper in conducting the contest did not play up the Universal angle on the contest as prominently as it should have. Six automobiles displaying signs, a brass band and twelve men bearing placards were used in the parade, which meandered through the business section of the city. Mr. Farrell and Miss Bennett occupied the front machine. Pictures of the parade were reproduced in the Post and comments made upon Miss Bennett's trip to Chicago and subsequent trip to Universal City.

NOT A MATINEE CITY.

Louisville moving picture men at present despair of ever making a good moving picture matinee city of Louisville. Sunday afternoon shows generally pull fair crowds, but during the week the people just will not go to moving picture shows, and with the exception of four or five theaters in the downtown district the balance of the city is closed up tight. One large theater seating about 1,000 people shows only at night, and several others of proportionate size are in the same boat. Even the downtown theaters do not handle anything like the morning or afternoon business to which they feel they are entitled. Big time stars and plenty of advertising are helping the afternoon shows somewhat, and it is probable that afternoon business will be built up in course of time.

TRIP TO NIAGARA CONTEST.

C. C. White, of Scottsville, Ky., proprietor of the White theater, is advertising a contest whereby one of the patrons of the theater will shortly be given a trip to Niagara Falls through the courtesy of the Universal Film Company, which is backing the contest. The votes are placed in a locked ballot-box, which is unlocked twice a week and the ballots are counted by Mrs. H. L. Hendrix, a lady of high standing socially.

FRED SHELDON RESIGNS.

Fred Sheldon, manager of the Louisville office of the Mutual Film Company, has resigned to take up the management of a theater out in the state with which he has been about to close a deal for several weeks. R. H. Haines, former manager of the local office, has returned from Indianapolis and resumed the active management of this branch.

LOUISVILLE JOTTINGS.

Vic Bloomfield, of Winchester, Ky., and Marvin Gay, of Mt. Sterling, have closed a deal for a building formerly occupied by P. H. Davis, and work has been started on converting the building into a motion picture theater which will start operations about July 1. The theater will be operated in conjunction with the Pastime, of Winchester.

The Children's Feature Film Corporation, Louisville, which is making arrangements to produce Aladdin Films, has adopted a very attractive trade mark consisting of an Aladdin's lamp.

The Bennett Seating Company, of Louisville, against which an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was recently filed by the United States Glue Company, Berry Brothers' Varnish Company and other concerns, has consented to the adjudication and has been officially declared a bankrupt by Judge Walter Evans in the United States District Court. The company specialized on seats for moving picture theaters and schools. George Bennett is president of the company, which came to Louisville from Cincinnati, O., about eighteen months ago.

A building permit was recently issued to the Clay Street Improvement Company for the erection of an airdome at Clay and Kentucky streets at the old Lutz ball park. Very little work was entailed in placing the park in operation and the first show was given the same week the permit was taken out.

Joseph Schnitzer, general manager of the Central Film Service Company's main office at Indianapolis, Ind., was in Louisville last week calling on A. C. Farrell, the local manager.

The General Film Company's Indianapolis office was recently represented in Louisville by Louis Baum, who called on a number of the exhibitors.

W. J. Spradlin & Son, of Hickman, Ky., have sold the Empress theater to J. T. Dillon, who will continue the house as heretofore after making a few minor improvements.

The Stewart Dry Goods Company, of Louisville, recently made arrangements with the management of the Shubert Masonic theater, of Louisville, wherein the dry goods emporium ran the Essanay corset pictures known as "How Marjorie Won a Career."

"Billy," the Louisville production of Ella Hutchinson Ellwanger's popular little book, which was shown with success at Macauley's theater, has been shown in connection with the Paramount program at the Majestic theater. When shown at Macauley's theater a charge of 25 cents was made for admission, while the price was only 10 cents at the Majestic. Col. Macauley, who has been very ill in the East, has practically recovered and has returned to Louisville.

James T. Ford, president of the Highland Film Corporation, of Fort Thomas, Ky., with offices also at 402 Strand theater building, Cincinnati, is reported to be about to erect seven two and three-story concrete and steel buildings at a cost of about $750,000. The architects are Zettle & Rapp, Johnston building, Cincinnati.

A peculiar sale was that of an American eagle, which was recently sold by E. W. Pratt, Jr., of Hopkinsville, Ky., to the Selig Polyscope Company, of Chicago. The eagle was short and stunned by Gussie Crick, of North Christian County, and an effort was made to sell it to one of the zoos. A letter sent to the Lincoln Park Zoo was turned over to the Selig Company.

The Dixie theater, of Russellville, Ky., has just installed several glass poster boxes in which to display posters of the shows for the day and for the day following. The two poster boxes on the front of the columns at the entrance of the theater are used for the current day's posters, while two boxes on the side walls show the pictures to be shown on the following day.

Fred Dolle, the genial manager of the Fourth Street Amusement Company, is becoming interested in several outside concerns just now, which include a large department store at Shelby street and Broadway and a new trading stamp concern which will operate as the Mutual Stamp Company.

Unionism at Salt Lake

Several Leading Picture Theaters Have Trouble with Musicians' Federation—Refused to Employ Union Musicians, and Union Operators Were Called Out—Rex, Isis and Broadway Affected.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SEVERAL leading motion picture houses are in conflict with the Salt Lake Federation of Musicians over the matter of unionization, with the result that some of the houses are operating with non-union operators and the others are without musicians. Meetings are being held with a view to composing the situation.

Without previous warning, according to the picture house managers, the federated musicians last Thursday notified the Rex, Mehesy, Isis and Broadway theaters that unless union musicians were employed the union operators would be called off, beginning with Thursday's performances. With the exception of the Mehesy no heed was given to the warning, and on the failure of the union operators to appear, non-union men were engaged, the houses retaining the musicians heretofore employed. By the elimination of music, the Mehesy retained its union operator.

Though the managements of the houses involved are a bit shy on comment on the situation, it has been made apparent that they intend to continue on their course until the unionists surrender, which, according to the federated musicians, is something like the prospects of skating in the traditional hottest place. With the exception of the Mehesy, it is understood to have been agreed, the managers intend to ignore the demands of the union. The union, on the other hand, is determined that until the houses shall have been unionized, it will not permit the operators to return to work.

Managers of the three houses that have signified their determination to stand by their colors consider that the musicians' organization is making unreasonable demands upon them, particularly because of the fact, they say, that recent business has been exceedingly poor and consequently would work a material financial hardship upon them if they were compelled to unionize at this time. They refer to the situation at the Rex as being particularly interesting.

For the past year the Rex has had no orchestra, the only music at the house having been furnished by a "photo-player." The union in its demands threatened to take the union operator from the theater unless a union musician, at the regular union salary, be placed in charge of that instrument. The management of the house declined to consider the proposition.

The Broadway, which has employed for a number of months a pianist only, also refused to listen to the demands of the union to place a union musician at the piano, and that house, too, is running with a non-union man in the box. At the Isis, the orchestra of five pieces was retained at the expense of the union operator. The Mehesy discontinued its music altogether, retaining its union operator in the hope that the difficulty would be speedily settled. Mr. Mehesy is at present on the Pacific coast and his manager is awaiting his return.

The affair culminated—as a "third act climax"—last Saturday night in a parade of 100 union musicians as a protest against the course followed by the managers.

A feature of the strike has been the discovery that A. R. Wilson and his son, managers of the Rex theater, are operators of projection machines. Both are expert men, but neither has affililated with the union. When the crash came last Thursday, Manager Wilson and his son climbed into the steel box and began turning the crank.

Though there have been meetings of the exhibitors' league, President H. A. Sims has declared that they were merely regular business meetings. He said so far as he could learn the managers of the houses affected were not taking the matter very seriously and he expressed the opinion that the trouble would be of short duration.

SALT LAKE CITY JOTTINGS.

Walter S. Rand, of the combination of father and son, familiarly known hereabouts as "The Rands"—pioneer exhibitors and exchange men of Salt Lake—wandered back into Salt Lake last week to extend greetings to his many friends along exchange row and in newspaper offices and incidentally to attend to some important business which had piled up in his own headquarters. Mr. Rand had just returned from an absence of many weeks, during which time he projected around in the northwestern states drumming up business for Mutual Masterpictures.

"Skirts" Cassidy, late star outfielder of the Denver Western League Baseball club, has hung up his hat in Salt Lake as manager of the Universal's film exchange. Mr. Cassidy quit baseball at the close of last season and went into the selling end of the motion picture business.

W. A. Nelson, owner and manager of the Electric theater, St. George, Utah, the exhibitor who, away down in the hot corner of this state, sixty miles from a railroad, had the nerve to start the practice of closing his doors during the running of a multiple reel feature, paid his respects to exchange men in Salt Lake this week. During his visit he called on several of the larger feature concerns and made arrangements for bookings which will cover a considerable period of time. Incidentally, Mr. Nelson purchased a large automobile while in Salt Lake and will return to St. George by the state highways route.

G. T. Robinson, traveling auditor for the World Film Corporation, is in Salt Lake, looking things over in the local field. Mr. Robinson will go to the coast this week and conclude a transcontinental tour in the interests of the World concern. Though Mr. Robinson's headquarters are at present in New York, he says it is possible that it may be shifted to the Pacific coast.

MANY THEATERS ON GRAND AVE.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

GRAND AVENUE is fast becoming the moving picture thoroughfare of St. Louis. From Cass avenue to Olive street there are ten theaters, either on Grand or within two hundred feet of the avenue. The Fair, at Grand and Cass, the Novelty, at Easton, the Grand Avenue stardome, at Morgan street, the Apollo, at Bell, the New Grand Central, at Lucas, The Victoria, at Delmar, the Duchess, at Washington, and the Princess, the Olivette and Empress, on Olive street. Three of these houses are not running regularly—the Novelty, which is the oldest neighborhood house in St. Louis, the Victoria, which plays German stock once a week in the season, and the Princess, which has seemed to fall into dark days most of the time, but which only needs a good program of short reels changed daily to keep it going and making money. Grand avenue is thirty blocks from downtown, but it is crowding the business district for first place from a general business as well as from a theatrical standpoint.

ST. LOUISIANS ALSO CONCERNED.

St. Louis has been full of persistent rumors for the past two or three weeks that Charlie Chaplin was critically ill; that he was in an insane asylum; that he had slain a man accidentally with his comedy cane; and was so affected with remorse that he was unable to work; that he had made so much money he just had to lay off and spend it; that the board of health of various cities had prohibited him making any more pictures till the people who had laughed themselves sick over his antics could recover. [Same here. Perhaps the telephone company started the rumors. The World needed a special man to sit near a telephone and answer querries.]

EDWARD POHLMAN HEADS PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Edward Pohlman has succeeded John Gentner as president of the Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association. Mr. Pohlman is a well known exhibitor, and belongs to the firm of Pohlman & Zimmerman, who operate the Comet, at 21st and Market streets and the Mutascope on Olive street, both of which are exclusive picture houses.

ST LOUIS JOTTINGS.

Walter S. Donaldson, chairman of the Buy-in-St. Louis League, has arranged to show a series of slides to moving picture audiences advising them of the advantage of buying goods in their home town. One of the slides reads: "Buy in St. Louis, it means much to you." The slides will be run in all the moving picture shows in town.

The Liberty Amusement Company have opened the Grand Avenue stardome at the northwest corner of Grand avenue and Morgan street. The new place has a seating capacity of 2,500, and is very fine and up to date in every respect. There is a main entrance on Grand avenue, and a store entrance on Morgan street. The Stardome is built on the site of the homestead of the Drummond family, who occupied it when the city was young and Grand avenue considered out in the suburbs.

The Olivette Garden, between Grand and Vandeventer avenues, on Olive street, has adopted a plan of interior decoration that is something new and very fine. The large space at the left which cannot be used for seats on account of the position of the screen, has been put in the hands of a landscape gardener, who filled the space in a diagonal line, running from the fence to the screen with a regular park of small evergreen plants and trees. The smaller plants and shrubs, a foot or so in height, are placed in front, and larger ones behind, giving the whole a terraced effect that is very pleasing. The scheme is clever and well worth copying by other gardens. O. T. Crawford is manager of the Olivette.

Since the firm of Pohlman and Zimmerman have opened their new theater, the Mutascope, on Olive street, there has been a division of managerial duties, Mr. Pohlman giving his entire attention to the management of the Mutascope, while Mr. Zimmerman devotes his time to the Comet, on Market street.

Chas. Renzow, manager of the Vandora theater, Cherokee and Ohio avenues, has been winning much favorable comment from his patrons of late by the clever manner in which he advertises school picnics in his neighborhood. Slides are made by transferring familiar newspaper cartoon characters on glass, and changing the wording of the pictures into an invitation to attend the picnic. The Garfield school's outing on May 24 was announced with a "Flooey and Axel" slide, and the Shepard, on May 11, with the Weather Bird, of the Post Dispatch.

Manager Fios, of the Apollo airdome, at Grand and Bell avenues, has replaced the electric globes that were mounted on the top of the wall enclosing the garden by placing the globes on brackets of the gooseneck style that are two feet higher and project out over the pavement. This arrangement adds much to the beauty of the place and makes the Apollo one of the best lighted spots on Grand avenue, a street noted for its brilliant electrical display.

CLEVELAND LOCAL HOLDS SMOKER.

By J. D. Raridian, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

President S. E. Morris and Secretary Walter H. Horsey called a special meeting and smoker for Cleveland Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to be held in the Moose club rooms. Invitations were issued to every exhibitor in the city, whether a member of the league or not, with a view to discussing matters of their mutual interest. Ben J. Sawyer, manager of the Manhattan theater, was booked for an address concerning local conditions with reference to the picture business.

CLEVELAND ITEMS.

The Standard theater, East 8th street and Prospect avenue, Cleveland, appears resplendent in its new interior decorations. The presentation of big productions has brought this house into popular favor, in the attainment of which Manager Joseph Grossman insists the appearance of the theater be kept ever up to date.

Phil Adler, as manager of the Cleveland offices of the Alliance Films Corporation, has again stepped into the limelight by reason of his recent release of "Beulah" and the number of bookings received in this territory. Adler took up the film business in 1906 in Pittsburgh. He handled state rights features in New York for several years and for a time was manager of the World Film Corporation's offices in Pittsburgh and Cleveland.

"Obituary notice. Maurice Spitalny passed away his single life June 1, 1915. He will return in a married state in about a week." Thus did Manager Emory C. Downs tell Knickerbocker, Cleveland, patrons the reason for the absence of his orchestra leader. Mr. Spitalny was married to Miss Dorothy Kahn.

Increase in booking orders and an extension of his business has caused Burton Garrett, manager of the Apex Feature Film Company, Cleveland, to move his offices to 516 Columbia building. Chaplin bookings have turned the Apex offices into a veritable whirlwind of business.

Athens, O., has a new picture theater, the Majestic. On opening night the management made this announcement: "We have booked the highest class pictures obtainable and assure the public that each program will always be a topnotcher. We are offering Paramount program, which includes Mary Pickford." M. J. Gross is manager of the theater.

Local events of Lancaster, O., filmed by a motion picture cameraman there, are being shown in the Grand theater. Recent pictures included a parade, baseball game and various news events.

A steel ceiling, wall decorations and a new electric lighting system have been installed by O. L. Taylor in the Majestic theater, Lancaster.

PORTLAND LOCALS.

George A. Magee, special representative of the Universal, with headquarters at Chicago, spent four days in Portland en route from Universal City, looking after company business.

Edwin James, manager of the Majestic theater, has been in San Francisco for two weeks looking after his interests in the American theater there.

The National theater has installed a new screen supplied by the Pacific Coast Scenic Studio. The management of the theater says the new screen produces a clear, bright picture with a minimum expenditure of current.

The Globe theater is using four or five United programs a week and Mr. Cohen, the manager, advises that the rapidity with which Ethel Grandin pictures have won his patrons' favor has been a pleasant surprise to him.

Censors Hurt Business

Information from Authentic Source Reveals That V-L-S-E Located Its Northwestern Office Elsewhere Than in Portland, on Account of the Drastic Local Censorship Ordinance.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PREJUDICED by the drastic provisions of the new Portland censorship ordinance, representatives of the Big Four indicate that this corporation did not feel inclined to establish its northwestern distributing point in Portland. While the exchange men having knowledge of the workings of the V-L-S-E interviewed by the writer have sought to impress the opinion that they were not antagonistic toward the members of the board, nor that they were other than in accord with its particular acts, except perhaps in one or two instances they intimate that the possibilities for unfair treatment are so great under the new ordinance that for this reason alone the V-L-S-E has passed Portland by as a distributing point.

The recent activities in the Portland field on the part of the Big Four people have been evidenced by visits of two of their prominent representatives during the past two weeks, Tom North and C. B. Price. These visits would indicate some foundation to the rumors of the establishment of a V-L-S-E Portland office were it not for the censorship ordinance.

The fact that Portland has been passed by as a distributing point does not mean that Big Four attractions will not be shown here. Exhibitors know that the Portland photoplay public will demand V-L-S-E productions, and Mr. Conlon, of the Orpheum, has already arranged to run them four days a week commencing June 13. From which, it will be observed, while Portland will see V-L-S-E pictures, it will lose the weekly payrolls incidentally resulting from a distributing agency being located here.

"GUSSLE-JONAH" CASE.

C. J. Kerr, manager of the local Mutual Film Corporations' offices, has appealed from the decision of the Municipal Court fining him $20 for showing "Gussle Rivals Jonah" without the sanction of the new censorship board. The grounds for appeal will be the same as of the other tests of the ordinance now in progress, the most important of which is the denial of the right of appeal and jury trial. Mr. Kerr has submitted the ordinance to the inspection of New York attorneys and is awaiting their opinion on its constitutionality.

"CUT-THROAT," SAYS WINSTOCK

Apropos to the enforced change of policy of one of Portland's picture theaters, Melvin G. Winstock, of the National theater, is quoted for the benefit of Portland exhibitors, as follows:

"I am absolutely opposed to the cut-throat methods of competition which are being practiced by some of our Portland exhibitors. It is placing us all at the mercy of the distributor."

Mr. Winstock is one of the pioneers of the picture theater business in Portland and he intimates that he has seen times more prosperous than the present, when co-operation, rather than the kind of competition above mentioned, brought the exhibitor the greatest returns in the long run.

A LOCAL PRODUCING COMPANY FOR PORTLAND.

Of interest to Portland exhibitors is the experiment now being made to produce dramatic and comic films in Portland for local exhibition. Heading a company of ten people, Monte Collins is directing the second comedy produced with a local background. The first production of the company, "The Flirtations of Flossy," a slapstick farce, is in the hands of the photographer and will soon be exhibited in one of the local houses. The cast consists of Hilda Graham, Arthur Winstock, William Lee, Tom Maher and Charles Rice. A. L. Smith is the camera man.

NEW HOUSE AT HILLSBORO.

Hillsboro, Ore., has another up-to-date picture house in the Grand, recently opened by Harrington & Phillips. The house seats 500 and is equipped with a generating plant capable of furnishing all the power used in the building. A modern ventilating system has also been installed. The theater will run the Universal program.

EXCHANGE INSTALLS RENOVATOR.

The Film Supply Company of Oregon has just installed a Seaborn film renovator in addition to its already modern equipment and is now prepared to renovate 150 reels a week. The renovator was recently imported from England.

PRIVATE EXHIBITION OF UNIVERSAL FEATURE, "SCANDAL."

Within a short time G. A. Metzger will receive "Scandal," the first really big feature produced by the Smalleys under the Universal brand, for private exhibition in Portland. From Portland the film will be shipped to Seattle, where it will also be shown privately. This film, it will be remembered, was booked by J. A. Quinn, of the Los Angeles Majestic theater, at a figure said to be $1,500 a week.

PROGRAM AT ORPHEUM.

Beginning June 13, the Orpheum will show V-L-S-E attractions for the first four days of the week and Mutual Masterpictures for the balance. The first of the Big Four productions will be "The Juggernaut," by Vitagraph.

ORGANISTS' GUILD RECITALS.

The Columbia theater, O. T. Bergner, manager, has been holding weekly recitals for the past two months under the auspices of the Organists' Guild of the State of Oregon, to the advanced pupils of the Portland high schools. Usually the recitals are accompanied by the showing of pictures of some grand opera story when such a film is obtainable. The recitals commence at 9.30 each Saturday morning and last one and a half hours. The enterprise has been very successful and has received the hearty co-operation of the school board.

J. F. SKERRETT, VISITOR.

J. F. Skerrett, general manager of the Nicholas Power Co., was a recent visitor in Portland in the interests of his company. This is Mr. Skerrett's first trip to the coast and he was surprised at the perfection attained in the science of picture projection in the theaters he has visited on the Pacific Coast.

SEASIDE SEASON OPENS.

Exhibitors are already arranging for the opening of the seaside resorts and the Service Film Company, handling the United Program, advises the opening of a new house at Rockaway Beach by Mr. Zink, late of Montana; also that they have furnished the Star theater, of Tillamook, with a Powers 6A machine.

Maine's New Film Laws

New State Regulations in Effect July 3—Appeals, in Matter of Licenses, Provided for to County Commissioners—Theater Fee Throughout State Limited to $10—Fines for Infractions Also Set.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TWO new laws of great importance to Maine moving picture men, passed by the last Legislature on March 31st, will go into effect on Saturday, July 3rd. These laws have not been given a great deal of publicity and a brief summary of their provisions will doubtless prove of interest to exhibitors throughout the State.

Municipal officers, instead of having entire authority in the matter of granting licenses to run moving picture theatres, are now inferior to the County Commissioners. If municipal officers, after written application to them for a license, unreasonably refuse or neglect to grant it, the applicant, by giving them ten days' notice and a bond to pay all costs arising thereafter, may appeal to the County Commissioners, who, after hearing of the parties, may grant the license or not as they judge reasonable.

In the past the fee for moving picture theatres has varied according to the city in which they are located, in some cases going as high as $50 a year. The new law fixes the fee as not exceeding $10, a stipulation that pleases the moving picture men.

An applicant for operator's license shall have the same right of appeal to the County Commissioners as is provided for a theater license. A license to operate shall continue for one year, and the fee shall not exced $5.

Sction 5 of the new law states that any person operating moving picture apparatus contrary to the provision of this shall be punished by a fine not less than $25 nor more than $500, to be recovered on complaint or indictment, but no final judgment on such complaint or indictment shall be entered during the pendency of the appeal, and in case such appeal be sustained, such complaint or indictment shall be diminished.

Chapter 240 of the Laws of 1915, which also goes into effect on July 3rd, provides that no moving picture machine, involving the use of a combustile film more than ten inches in length, shall be kept, used or exhibited in any public building unless a license or permit shall have been first obtained from the municipal officers. This act shall not apply to any cinematograph, or similar apparatus operated with only cellulose acetate films not more than one inch and one-fourth in width, and using only an enclosed incandescent lamp; provided also, that the manufacturer of such cinematograph or similar apparatus shall apply for and receive the approval of the State insurance commissioner; and provided also, that no such cinematograh or similar apparatus shall be used where an admission fee is charged, except in social, fraternal, charitable, religious and educational organizations, where the machine so used is owned by said organization and used in the city or town where said organization is located, and the proceeds of such admission fees are to be devoted to the uses of said organization.

MUNICIPAL PICTURE THEATER TALKED OF IN LEWISTON.

A municipal theatre in Lewiston, managed by the city government, is being talked of around Lewiston city hall. The idea originated with H. V. Wilson, president of the Board of Aldermen, and is said to have a large backing. Alderman Wilson suggests that the city inquire into the advisability of the plan and mentions the Lewiston theatre as the place to conduct the experiment. It is not known whether the city could manage the theatre legally. County Attorney Hines, who was asked regarding the question, said, "if the city could not run an ice company, how is it going into the theatrical business?"

HIGH CLASS MUSIC.

The Colonial theatre in Augusta is said to have the finest moving picture orchestra in the State of Maine. As a sample of the high class programs regularly rendered, the following program is appended:

Coronation March from "Folkunger," E. Kretschmer. Overture, "Phedre," J. Massenet. Selection, "Ernant," G. Verdi. Chime Solo, "Angelus," from "Scenes Pittoresque," J. Massenet.

Mr. Carl Liberty. Overture, "Italians in Algeria," G. Rossini. Symphony, No. 8 in B minor, F. Schibert. Selection, "Carmen," G. Bizet. Suite, "Peer Gynt," E. Grieg. 1st, "Morgenstimmung"; 2nd, "Ases Tod"; 3rd, "Anitras Tanz"; 4th, "In der Haile des Bergitonigs." Overture, "The Barber of Seville," G. Rossini. Ernest R. Hill, musical director.

ITEMS NOTED IN MAINE.

The Keith Kourier, the "Daily' issued for several months by the Keith theatre in Portland, has been bought out and absorbed by "The Stock Ticker," an independent sheet which will continue to serve the public with both foreign and local news in the same fearless manner as its predecessor.

One of the big film corporations which have until recently been quite inactive in this state, have of late put out two of the most successful films of the year to Pine Tree exhibitors. These are "As a Man Sows," and the "Spirit of the Conqueror" from the studio of Sawyer, Inc. E. B. Tinker has the exhibition rights for Maine.

The Bijou theatre, Bangor, which has been showing vaudeville and moving pictures, has closed for the season and the handsome theater will be dark until Monday, August 23rd.

Several theatres have already closed contracts with Earle B. Tinker for the new Phoenix services. Among them may be mentioned the Star, Skowhegan, the Pastime, Madison, the New Toy at Oakland and the Crescent of Lubec. The Graphic at Bangor has first run of this company in Maine.

Arthur A. Allen, one of the best known of the Bangor moving picture men, has leased the Palace theater from Pope D. McKinnon and has started with Universal service.' Mr. Allen was the first manager of the Palace theatre and for the past year has been engaged in moving picture business in Oldtown, Bangor and other parts of the State. He is a capable proprietor and doubtless will make good.

George D. Pullen, manager of the Toy theatre, Oakland, last week used the first run in Maine of the Sawyer release "The Life of Shakespeare," a six-reel production of which Mr. Stockton of this paper says "the picture should rank as one of the great productions of a great year." Mr. Pullen runs every night and though his town is small, he uses one big feature weekly and charges twenty cents.

A benefit concert and moving picture show was given at the Park theatre, Bangor, for the Bangor Festival Chorus, on Tuesday night, June 15th. The members of the Festival Chorus sold a large number of tickets, the m ney from which was given to the chorus. The kindness of the manager, Stephen Bogrett, in giving the Festival Chorus members this privilege was indeed appreciated.

The new Metro Company has released one of the London Film subjects recently in Maine, it being Albert Chevalier in "The Middleman."

BEGIN WORK ON INMAN SQUARE PICTURE THEATER.

By Edwin McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WORK has been started on the erection of the new photoplay theatre in Inman square, Cambridge. The lot has been cleared and the general construction work has been started. The contract calls for a completed structure by September. The building is to be equipped with every modern convenience. It will have a frontage of fifty feet on Cambridge street and a depth of one hundred and thirty-six feet. It will be three stories in height and there are to be two stores on either side of the main entrance. The building will be of brick throughout, the front to have a face of tapestry brick with the main entrance of marble, with terrazzo floors. The seating capacity of the auditorium and balcony will be 1,000. There will be a special system of heating and ventilating installed with a device for cooling the atmosphere in hot weather.

The company which is constructing this house is capitalized for $50,000. The cost of the theatre will be $75,000. Dennis D. O'Leary is president, and Michael A. O'Leary, who is chairman of the Massachusetts State Democratic Committee, is treasurer.

NEGROES STILL PROTEST.

Although the newly appointed board of censors for the city of Boston have refused to prohibit the production of the Griffith photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," the negro protestants against the film are still continuing their fight. The executive committee of the Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, have adopted resolutions protesting the board's refusal to bar the film from further production in the city.

NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

W. Fred Bossner has assumed the management of the Park theatre, succeeding George Robinson, who has gone to Onset, Mass., for the summer season, where he will manage the beautiful playhouse owned by Green and Abrams. Mr. Bossner or "Boz," as he is familiarly known needs no introduction to picture men. He is a native of Pennsylvania and has been connected with many picture enterprises during the past nine years.

Joseph Harris, the widely known and efficient operator of the New England office of the General Film Company, is now reciving the congratulations of almost every New England exhibitor on his approaching marriage to Miss Alice Penn, a stenographer in the office of the New England Universal Film Exchange. The ceremony will take place on Wednesday evening, June 23, at the Temple Mishkan Tefila, corner Moreland and Copeland streets, Roxbury. After a reception at the home of the bride, the couple will start on a trip to Washington, D. C.

George Boldsen has succeeded Charles Webster as manager of the New England office of the V-L-S-E, Inc. Mr. Webster will open an office in the western territory for the combination. Mr. Boldsen was formerly general manager of the poster department of the General Film Company and has also been connected with the management of several large picture theatres. It is understood that in his capacity as a district manager for the "Big Four," he will put the New England office in running order and then a local man will be placed in charge.

"Sol" Phillips has resigned as manager of the Scenic, Mattapan. He is succeeded by Jacob Nathan.

The Lyric at Beverly, Mass., has been sold by John B. Vitalle to Louis Rosenblatt.

Herman L. Craig, manager of the New England office of the Picture Playhouse Company, Inc., is now carrying his right arm in a sling. He was visiting the Pit, a Revere Beach amusement place, and while watching several persons at play on one of the large revolving wheels, was accidentally pushed. He fell on the wheel and was thrown several fet, landing on his head and shoulders, breaking his collar bone.

Alden Washburn, manager of the Unique, Washington street, Boston, has contracted with Manager Fred B. Murphy of the New England office of the United Film Service, for the use of the "Fourth Program."

Frank Vine, formerly manager of the New England office of the World Film Corporation, and Manager Harry F. Campbell, of the Fox Film Corporation, are summering at Marblehead, Mass. Both claim that it is the only place to live during the warm months. Harry states that the boating is excellent and Frank asserts that bathing is far superior to anything he has ever experienced.

The new Eagle theatre at Oak Bluffs, one of the most popular Massachusetts summer resorts, has been opened for the season under the personal supervision of A. P. Eggleston, the proprietor. The playhouse, which has a seating capacity of 1,000, is one of the most beautiful summer theatres in New England. It is equipped with every modern improvement and is up-to-date in every detail.

Arthur L. Griffin of the Bowdoin Square theatre, Boston, and George Delmore, are enjoying a vacation in Bermuda.

Mitchell Granby, roadman for the New England office of the Fox Film Corporation, has returned from a most successful trip through Vermont and New Hampshire. He states that business was exceptionally good and that he sees no signs of the so-called hard times. According to him, prosperity holds supreme reign.

Many requests have been received by Manager Samuel Bernfield of the New England Pathe Exchange, regarding the New Elaine serial "The Romance of Elaine," featuring Clayton Hale, Lionel Barrymore and Pearl White. This is evidently due to the tremendous hit scored by them in this territory by "The Exploits of Elaine."

Thomas Charet, manager of the Casino and the Idlehour theatres, New Bedford, Mass., and M. J. Senner of the Columbia and Pastime theatres of the same city, were among the visitors to the New England office of the United Film Service during the past week.

The Home theatre at Glendale square, Everett, Mass., has been purchased by Raymond Braun and Frank E. Owens, both of Waltham. This house, which has a seating capacity of 800, is the newest and most beautiful theatre in Everett. It was first opened in November.

Miss Helen Noonan, who recently resigned a clerical position in the office of the New England United Film Service, to be married, was presented with a handsome silver tea set by her former office associates.

Manager James A. O'Brien of the Empire thatre, Lewiston, Maine, has changed the policy of his playhouse for the summer. He is now using pictures. He has contracted for the use of United Service, changing his program twice a week, with nine reels to the change.

Max Carmusin has been added to the road staff of the New England office of the General Film Service.

Manager Edward J. Farrell of the General Film Service of New England is relating the following incident to his friends. He recently purchased a new automobile. A week ago he decided to take a trip to New London, Connecticut, over Sunday. The machine stalled, according to him, about ten miles from nowhere. He did everything to start it. All was useless. Finally a farmer came along and he was towed to the nearest garage after separating himself from a large sized greenback. The mechanic in the garage after examining the auto told Mr. Farrell that it was in perfect condition. Farrell was astounded and asked why it wouldn't go. The mechanic said if the tank was filled everything would be alright. Eddie said he never thought of filling the tank.

Chance for Sunday Shows

Nashville, Tennessee, to Have Three Open Sundays—Police and Fire Departments Will Use Theaters to Raise Funds for Recreation Grounds—May Serve as Wedge to Get Permanent Sabbath Opening.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BEGINNING with Sunday, June 6, three Sundays will see the motion picture houses of Chattanooga, Tenn., running in spite of the fact that heretofore the Board of City Commissioners and the Pastors' Association insisted on enforcement of the Sunday-closing laws. This will be the first time on record that the show houses have all been open and a regular admission price charged and collected. The occasion for the opening is due to the fact that the police and fire departments require financial aid, and the members of these organizations are endeavoring through means of the motion picture houses to raise funds to assist in promoting recreation grounds at Pan Gap.

The movement establishes a precedent in Chattanooga, which may have lasting effect, unless the gentlemen of the cloth make too much objection. Various previous attempts to obtain the aid of the motion picture houses for charity purposes without charge of admission have been successful only on a very few occasions. When the old board of commissioners held office the idea was strenuously opposed by a majority of the board members, who were said to be influenced by the Pastors' Association.

The movement to hold "open house" on Sunday originated wholly with the police department, and no evident objection has been forthcoming from the Board of Commissioners. The entire fire and police departments undertook to sell tickets to the shows, with the result that 5,000 were sold on the first day the tickets were placed on sale. It is believed that the attendances during the trio of Sundays will be record breakers. The usual run of week day films will be shown.

WILLIAM WASSMAN TO BUILD.

William H. Wassman, Nashville's pioneer motion picture man, is preparing to erect what is declared will be one of the finest and safest motion picture theaters in the country, and the first house in Nashville to be built from the ground up. The building will be on the west side of Sixth avenue, North, and just north of Church street, extending back to the Capital boulevard, on the property owned by the Sixth Avenue Property Company. The plans, which are being prepared by Marr & Holman, Nashville architects, call for a three-story building which will be the last word in theater construction.

The building will be of reinforced concrete, steel and brick construction. The only wood used in the entire building will be that employed in the backs and arms of the opera chairs, according to Mr. Wassman. There will be wide entrances on both Sixth avenue and Capitol boulebard, and there will also be four exits on each street, besides exits at the side. A washed air cooling and ventilating system will be installed and arrangements will be made to place a small mushroom ventilator under each seat in the house. Warm air will be supplied in winter and cold air in summer.

The frontal space on both streets will be of ornamental terra cotta and white enamel brick, with large ornamental marquises. There will be two store rooms at the front on each street and offices will occupy the space on the second and third floors over these store rooms. The theater will occupy the center space, which will be 50x150 feet, with a seating capacity of 1,500. The balcony will contain twelve private boxes, each of which will seat six persons. The operating booth will be equipped with a separate fireproof room for storing films, re-winding, etc. On the mezzanine floor will be the manager's office and the retiring rooms for both ladies and gentlemen.

This theater when completed will be the only one in the city facing on two streets and with both entrances exactly alike. A large pipe organ will be installed and a mirror screen 18x24 feet. A heavy velvet curtain will be used to cover the screen when the latter is not in use. The front of the building will be studded with about 1,000 electric lights, and the sidewalks will be of white tile. Many other unusual features will be incorporated in the building. Work on the new theater is to commence almost at once and the contracts will call for its completion by Jan. 1, 1916.

FOR BETTER ELECTRIC SERVICE.

At Clarksville, Tenn., the management of the Elite theater, and the new Lillian theater, which is now under course of construction, are very much interested in a movement of the Chamber of Commerce to secure better electric service for the city. For some time past the service has been very poor and frequent interruption of electric supply service has worked as a detriment to business. A committee has been appointed by the Chamber of Commerce to investigate the situation and confer with the Kentucky Public Service Company concerning better service. Since the removal of the local plant, which formerly supplied the service, a good many complaints have been registered. A conference has been held with H. D. Fitch, the general manager of the company, and Mr. Fitch has made arrangements whereby one of the company's expert engineers is now on the ground and is making a number of changes.

SHORTER NASHVILLE NOTES.

The Orpheum Theater Company, of Nashville, Tenn., took out a building permit on May 26 for general repairs and painting to cost about $2,000. The work on the theater will be pushed along and as soon as completed the theater will reopen.

At Memphis, Tenn., East End Park arranged for out-door moving pictures, which were run until the opening of the regular season of the vaudeville theater Such pictures as "The Call of the Heart," "From the Valley of the Missing," "Storms of Life" and "Vengeance of the Flames" were among those shown. Numerous new concessions have been installed at the park this season and now that good weather has at last set in business is coming along nicely.

The Glendale Zoo, at Nashville, Tenn., has started a free motion picture show in the old Casino building now known as the Glendale Zoo theater. Arrangements are being made whereby an open-air picture show will shortly be inaugurated. Free sets to seat 10,000 people will be arranged, it is stated. Only good pictures will be shown at the zoo.

IN LOUISVILLE, KY.

A new picture show which was recently started in the Opera House, at Flemingsburg, Ky., closed following a comparatively quiet season. It is probable that the show will be opened a little later on.

At Danville, Ky., a Chicago motion picture concern recently took a number of pictures which will be shown at the Colonial theater as soon as completed.

The Hazard Motion Picture Company, of Hazard, Ky., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000. The incorporators are: Tony Zoellers, W. B. Oelze and B. P. Wooten. The company will shortly install a small house at Hazard, which is in the mining district of the state.

EFFICIENCY AND ECONOMY

Four Years of Use { "Just as good condition as when newly bought." "Never had any occasion to spend any money for repairs, parts, or otherwise."

Chicago, May 19th, 1915.

The Precision Machine Co., Inc., New York, N Y.

Dear Sirs:

It is a great pleasure for me to tender my idea on the machine in question as the magnificent services which I have procured from same absolutely demand it. It is, without doubt, the most durable moving picture machine I have ever operated in my 13 years of experience in this line of business. The machines are now completing their fourth year of professional services and up to the present date they are in just as good condition as when newly bought, and, furthermore, the writer, as well as the management, has never had an occasion to spend any money for repairs, repair parts, or otherwise. Not only can I, without default, pronounce the Simplex as being the strongest machine on the market, but it is also regarded by brother operators as carrying a very sharp, accurate and steady picture, and, therefore, is considered a machine of superior quality and will surely meet with the approval of the most particular demands.

I am ready at any time to confirm the foregoing statements as I deem it a just duty to make assertions of this nature on features of objects as are found in the Simplex Projector.

Yours very truly,

PARKWAY THEATRE,

(Signed) MONTE A. GLOSS, Operator.

THE BONDWOMAN (Special—"Broadway Favorites"—Three Parts—June 28).—Horace Blanchard, head bookkeeper for a city bank, works hard on the invention which for several years has made inroads into his savings. His daughter, Amy, also cherishes hopes for success—but along different lines. The girl aspires to win fame and wealth as a writer. Lewis, president of the bank, spends his time in dissolute living. His favorite of the hour is La Reine, a musical comedy actress. Lewis sees Amy and becomes enamored. Blanchard, knowing his employer's character, balks the latter's efforts to become acquainted with Amy. As time passes, Blanchard, pressed for funds with which to continue his experiments, steals money from the bank. His cashier discovers the theft and reports it to Lewis. The latter, however, bids the cashier remain silent. Thus Blanchard is allowed to continue his peculations.

When the amount stolen by the bookkeeper has assumed large proportions, Lewis calls upon him at his home. Amy, learning of the fate which confronts her aged father, is horrified. Lewis, madly infatuated with the girl and anxious to get her on any terms, promises to drop action against her father, provided she marries him. Amy agrees, but upon the condition that she shall remain Lewis' wife only until she, by her literary work, shall have repaired what her father has stolen. Believing by that time he will have tired of her, Lewis agrees. In her new home, Amy begins her martyrdom. Although Lewis showers her with every luxury, the girl does not hesitate to show the aversion she feels for him. This has the effect of increasing Lewis' love for her. Unable to break down the barrier, the husband mockingly taunts Amy with the conditions of their bargain—she is his until she can purchase her freedom. Amy remains silent and continues the literary efforts which are gradually winning her fame. La Reine meets Lewis, but her beauty has lost its charm for him. Milton Lacey, head of the publishing house which is purchasing Amy's works, falls in love with the girl. The latter, believing she returns Lacey's love, works night and day to purchase her freedom.

As time passes, Lewis continues his desperate efforts to soften his wife's heart. Then comes the time when Amy hands him the check which she has received in payment for her latest book. The money represents the last instalment of her purchase price. Free, the girl leaves her husband and takes up her home in the country. Lewis daily scourges himself for the contemptible part he has played. Amy becomes a mother. She accepts her maternity with bitter rebellion. Gradually, however, the sight of her son brings her back to her better self. Lewis unable to endure his life, goes to the country to catch a glimpse of Amy. The sight of his own child adds the last straw to his heart-hunger. In reverent wonder, the man kneels by his child's cradle and glories in his parenthood. Amy, coming upon him suddenly, snatches the child to her bosom and refuses him any rights over her little son. Her old housekeeper, touched by Lewis' grief, tries to effect a reconciliation. Amy wonders if it is her duty to forgive Lewis. She finally tells him that some day she may relent for their child's sake. Lewis, hopefully, waits.

THE MERRY MOVING MEN (June 29).—The mood for holding down a job temporarily possesses Ham and Bud. Applying to a moving concern, the adventurers secure positions. The Duponts decide to move to their summer home. Ham and Bud are ordered to transport the Dupont household effects. By this time, Ham's and Bud's ambitions have died down somewhat. They languidly pile the furniture aboard the motor truck and set out for the country. After losing a few pieces of furniture on the way, the two spy a circus. Deserting the van, Ham and Bud try to take in the show.

But the Boss Canvasman sees the adventurers crawling under the tent and, assisted by a barrel stave, convinces Ham and Bud that they don't want to see the show. By this time, night has fallen. Tired because of their exertions, the moving men run their van into a meadow and, after unloading bed and bedding, go to sleep. In the meantime, the Duponts frantically endeavor to trace the whereabouts of their furniture. Unsuccessful, they are compelled to sleep on a couple of soft spots on the floor of the cottage.

Ham and Bud awake bright and early. By the time they arrive at the Duponts' cottage, Dupont is ready to commit murder. Menaced by his revolver, the moving men work at top speed in unloading the furniture. Then comes the discovery that all the shots in the weapon have been discharged. Inspecting the pistol to make sure, Ham turns upon Dupont, knocks him down, and then blithely trips away with his little pal.

THE ACCOMPLICE (Special—Two parts—June 30).—Millionaire Harris requests the police to aid him in locating the son whom he has not seen since the latter was an infant. That same day, a young man is found near the river. The victim is bound and gagged, while a heavy stone is fastened to his neck. Shortly after the man is taken to the hospital, the attendant guarding him is found unconscious. The patient has disappeared. Evelyn and Strong are sent to the scene. The girl recognizes the attendant, Ritchie, as an ex-convict. At her request, the man is discharged. By trailing Ritchie, Evelyn and Strong find that the missing man is a prisoner in a house out in the suburbs. Meecham, another crook, guards the man. The two sleuths, trapped by Meecham and Ritchie, learn that the mysterious patient is the son of old Harris.

Evelyn and Strong also learn that the crooks had engineered the kidnapping from the hospital, and that they had previously attempted to drown their victim. This, because of Meecham's plot to pose as Harris' son. Meecham had actually succeeded in fooling the millionaire into believing him to be the long lost son when the appearance of the real son made it imperative that the latter be done away with. While Ritchie is left to guard the three prisoners, Meecham returns to the Harris mansion. A clever ruse on the part of Evelyn, brings about the capture of Ritchie. The sleuths then hasten to the millionaire's home. There they surprise Meecham. Exposing the scoundrel's plot, they restore the long-lost son to his father.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES, NO. 13—"Mr. Jarr and the Captive Maiden"—(June 28).—Paper bags full of water have a tendency to burst when dropped on a solid object, and Willie Jarr, Emma and Izzy Slavinsky are well aware of this. While experimenting, "Zeppelin" style, from the roof of the Jarr apartment house, one of the liquid bombs "accidentally" drops on Gus's bald head, and when Jarr happens into his place on the way home Gus tells him of the cowardly assault. At home Jarr finds all is bustle and preparation for the Gladys Cackleberry-Jack Silver wedding, soon to take place. Mrs. Jarr is helping to trim the wedding gown, and when Willie spies the full-length dress dummy the women are using, he tells the others, and they later purloin it to play Indian with, using it to illustrate their latest Indian outrage, wherein the "captive maiden" is thrown over the cliff. Finding the dummy gone, the women suggest using Jack Silver as a temporary dress model, and despite his protests, they make him put on the beautiful gown. Gertrude, the emotional servant girl, exclaims he looks sweet enough to kiss, but Jack—in a panic—ducks out the door. He runs into Mr. Jarr, and drags him with him into a taxi. The machine collides with a big brewery truck, throwing Jarr and Mr. Silver out in front of Gus's place. Jack rushes into the saloon, where he gets rid of his bridal clothes, then "beats it" for home. Jarr, as usual, gets arrested. He asks Gus to use his political influence, but that gentleman angrily tells the officer, "I don't know him, nor any of his friends." The police are about to drag him off when the women folks arrive, and beg so hard they let him go, then compromise by clubbing all the innocent bystanders.

THE HAND OF GOD (Special—Two Parts—June 29).—While looking through the family album with Gladys, his wife, Hugh Rawn, a successful and well-beloved minister, is brought back to sad memories of the days when Jessie, his sister, was lured from home. He sees his austere father denounce the girl and tear her picture from the family album and erase her name from under it. Aroused from his day dreams, he happens to see the face of his "lost sister" at the window, for a moment. Stepping outside, he finds and speaks to the girl, but she refuses his hospitality, not wishing his wife to know she had disgraced his family. Hugh finally succeeds in introducing her to his household as his new Secretary. Gradually, an uneasy feeling of jealousy grows on Gladys, and she makes it unpleasant for Jessie. The girl soon realizes this and announces to Hugh her intention of leaving. He goes to her room and tries to dissuade her. Hearing voices, Gladys looks in and sees her husband's arms around Jessie's shoulders. Overcome at what she believes to be his perfidy, she staggers back to her room, where she falls prostrate. On regaining consciousness, it is found a paralytic stroke has rendered her incapable of speech or movement. Jessie, caring for her, is greatly puzzled at the strange look of accusation and hatred in the woman's eyes. One day, during a terrific thunderstorm, a lightning bolt strikes the house, and the shock performs an apparent miracle. Gladys regains the use of her limbs, and can talk again. In an equally marvelous manner through the innocence of her child, she finds a note explaining the circumstances surrounding Jessie's presence there. When Hugh returns from church, he finds that the hand of God has indeed been at work.

THE EVOLUTION OF CUTEY (June 30).—The widow of Sweezy, president of the Athens Uplift Society, for vanity's sake, regards her son, Cutey—"Pickles" for short—as still a child, and dresses him in Buster Brown suits. The widow is in love with Mat Swirl, the Master of Greek and Modern Dancing, and has a deadly rival in Amanda Bones, an old maid. Pickles, who is really a full-grown young man, is in love with Lizzie, the pretty maid-of-all work at the Sweezy home, but on learning of this, the widow threatens to disinherit him if he dares disclose that he is of marriageable age. During a dress rehearsal of the play to be given by the Uplift Society, Lizzie mysteriously shows Pickles a suit of man's clothes, and confides her plan. While the classical dance is in progress, Pickles puts on the suit, and looking a very spruce young gentleman, stands in the hall, unseen, watching the dancers. Lizzie attracts the attention of Miss Bones, and the latter is amazed on stepping into the hall, to behold the splendor of Pickles in his new clothes. The young man is flirtatious, and Miss Bones responds in kind. Pickles proposes, is accepted and suggests they speak to mother. Amanda gets there first, rushes up to Mrs. Sweezy, in the midst of the crowd, and flinging her arms around her neck, cries, "My dear, new mother!" For a moment, all is consternation, then indignant inquiries bring out the fact that Pickles has "evoluted" into a full-fledged young man engaged to be married. Pickles announces that if Mrs. Sweezy won't take Lizzie for a daughter-in-law, she will have to take Amanda Bones. With a struggle, the widow gives her consent to Pickles' marriage to Lizzie.

THE HONEYMOON PACT (July 1).—On their return from their wedding journey, Lillian and Billy make a pact to have "no girl friends, no club friends—only their two selves—always together." At first the plan works beautifully, but after a time the inevitable reaction back to normal begins. They become less demonstrative towards each other, and while their love is just as strong, both entertain secret longings to sit down and have a good chat with an old friend. At this opportune time, their maid leaves suddenly, to get married, and Lillian quietly goes to see Jean, an old school chum of her's. After some persuasion, Lillian gets the girl to take the maid's place, just for a joke. Billy hits on the same plan and invites an old club friend to stay at his home in the guise of his chauffeur. On the arrival of the new adjuncts to the household, they are introduced, and take an immediate liking to each other. Billy and Lillian see the two spooning and begin to worry, as, of course, each thinks the other's servant is the real article. A few days later, Lillian receives word that their erstwhile chauffeur and maid have eloped. Lillian feels terribly as she pic-

Viola Allen Immortalizes "The White Sister" in Film

The enchantment of sunny Italy cast its mystic spell over F. Marion Crawford and held him in its thrall. He spent years in this land of sunshine, of gorgeously painted seas and skies, dreaming of love romances that blossomed in ancient castles, of sorrows and tragedies buried within convent walls.

A wonderful inspiration came to him. He conceived a story of a great love, of a heart rending separation, and his soul poured forth all its depths of feeling, all its wealth of imagery in "The White Sister." Then was born the greatest work of his master mind.

Viola Allen was captivated by the great dramatic possibilities of this romance. She felt the soul stirring tragedy of the white sister with all her intense nature, and she put her entire heart into the interpretation of the part. How well she succeeded in bringing out all the great human qualities of the play is attested by its wonderful reception on the speaking stage.

Essanay was quick to see and grasp the exceptional opportunity to reproduce this great work of fiction through the medium of one of the greatest actresses. It used all its artistic and technical mastery of production to immortalize the inspiration of F. Marion Crawford through Viola Allen's genius of interpretation. And it has given to the world the greatest and most stupendous photoplay ever produced.

This six-act masterpiece now is being booked through all the V. L. S. E., Inc., branch offices.

Brooklyn, N.Y. June 7, 1915

To the Exhibitors of the United States.

The Vitagraph Company has recently released through the V.L.S.E., "Hearts and the Highway"

This picture is a good five reel feature, but in justice, must be placed in class "B" as compared with "The Juggernaut" and "The Island of Regeneration"

Accordingly, the V.L.S.E.Inc., at the request of the Vitagraph Company, has instructed its sales force not to charge any exhibitor in the United States more than $50.00 per day for "Hearts and the Highway"

This ruling is made, because it is feared, that without it, exhibitors, by reason of their success with the other two features, would readily agree to pay an equal price, believing that "Hearts and the Highway" possessed the same degree of merit as the other two.

In other words, the Vitagraph Company does not desire to perpetrate any imposition upon the exhibitor by allowing them to believe that it is equal in merit to "The Juggernaut " and "The Island of Regeneration"

This action must not be taken to mean that "Hearts and the Highway" is not a good feature, for it is; or that the Vitagraph is lowering its prices; for such is not the case; but merely that both the Vitagraph and the V.L.S.E.. by comparison, have placed this picture in class "B", and want the exhibitor to know the facts, and to realize that he is being asked to pay only according to the merit of the product.

tures to herself what will happen when Jean introduces her chauffeur husband to her aristocratic parents. Billy sees the note and experiences the same sensation about his friend. Then the two gloomily start in to explain their mutual breaking of the honeymoon pact. Surprise and delight follows, and after a hearty laugh, both look into each other's eyes and realize they are no different from the rest of the Newlyweds.

HUNTING A HUSBAND (July 2).—The receipt of a pathetic note from an old friend asking him to care for Julia, his little girl, touches the heart of big, good-natured, but womanshy, Jud Livingston, a ranch owner. He sends for the child, and buying some toys, including a big doll, meets her at the station. The "child" proves to be a pretty young girl of 19, and poor Jud feels terribly embarrassed, particularly when the girl laughs outright at the doll and toys. He falls in love with Julia in no time, but never dreams that she could return the feeling. When Mrs. Bell, the housekeeper, sees the girl, she reiterates her oft-repeated advice: that Jud ought to get a wife. It does not occur to him to apply her meaning to Julia, so he only smiles good-naturedly, but later, a slight accident to Jud awakens the girl to a realization that she is in love with him, so woman-like, she takes special pains to avoid him. This puzzles Jud immensely, but the housekeeper knows the reason and tells him plainly he should find a husband for Julia. She thinks this will surely bring him to his senses—but no, he misses the point entirely, and feeling it his duty, rather reluctantly lines up all the eligible bachelors in the place. Without telling them the reason, he tries to pick a husband for the girl! All have faults and his despair is comical to behold. Mrs. Bell, after a hearty laugh at his stupidity, tells him he is the man with whom Julia is in love. Then Jud wakes up, and dashes out to find Julia. She sees him coming, and pretends to be reading, but correctly judging her agitation to be caused by love, turns her book right side up and proposes on the spot. Thus Julia finds her husband.

THE CRIMINAL (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—July 3).—Gordon West, a young lawyer, in love with Anna Stevens, is suddenly called out of town. Anna learns that she is about to become a mother and begs Gordon to marry her before he goes, but because of her not making the situation sufficiently clear, he puts it off until his return. He stays longer than expected, and goaded on by the cynical words of her relatives: "Young lawyers with a career don't marry poor girls," she disappears. Her baby is born and she leaves it in a hamper with an explanatory note, on West's doorstep. Unfortunately, Jim Wells, a crook, steals the hamper, and Maggie, his wife, persuades him to keep the child. Maggie finds the note giving the child's name as Nell, and keeps it. Gordon West meanwhile returns, and puts detectives on the track of Anna, but without avail. Many years later, Gordon is now district attorney and hot after the gang of which Wells is the head. Nell has been forced to aid the crooks in small thefts, and Reeves, a secret service man, purporting to be an insurance collector, becomes interested in her. Wells learns who Reeves really is and kills him. Nell is found on the scene with a revolver in her hand and arrested on a murder charge. Gordon West is to prosecute the case. Then he learns that Nell is his own daughter, and tells her so. Free at last to confess, Nell tells her story. It clears up everything and reunites father and daughter.

ROAD O' STRIFE NO. 13 ("The Man Who Did Not Die"—June 28).—Seriously wounded, Robert Dane lies in the hospital, a screen separating his cot from the next. On this cot lies Professor Gershom, who disappeared on the day Alene left the House of Secrets, and who was supposed to have been murdered; even Caleb Jerome, the man who struck him down, having been so convinced of his victim's death that his conscience had brought about his own end. Gershom had been rescued from the river, into which his supposedly lifeless body was thrown by Caleb Jerome, and for long weeks has lain in a comatose state in the hospital. His consciousness now returning, he becomes aware that on the other side of the screen someone is speaking. It is a nurse reading aloud to Dane the newspaper anouncement that Alene has been pardoned and is to be released. From the article, Gershom gets an idea of the events that have transpired since his disappearance, and finding strength in his iron will, rises and demands his discharge from the hospital. While waiting in the office, Gershom learns the date, and also discovers the famous silver cup, which has been sent to a specialist in poisons, for experimental purposes.

Possessing himself of the cup, Gershom escapes undetected, and reaches the jail just as Alene is made free. The girl finds no happiness in her escape from death. She is unaware of the part played by Dane in her deliverance, and is brokenhearted at the thought that in her hour of peril he deserted her. She shows no surprise at the reappearance of Gershom, and allows him to conduct her to the office of a distinguished old lawyer, Madison, whose name Gershom is able to recall. Gershom tells the lawyer of the case he wishes to put into his hands—that the fortune suposed to belong to Caleb Jerome was really held in secret trust, to be given Alene, the rightful owner, should she be living on this, the day she is of age. With a penknife he cuts out the bottom of the silver cup, disclosing the fact that this bottom is double, and from the space between the bottom takes several documents and a wonderful jewel, all of which he places in the lawyer's hands. As he reads, Madison's expression changes from incredulity to amazed conviction. Gravely Gershom rises, bows to the weary and indifferent girl, who seems to take no interest in the strange revelations concerning herself, and replies: "This is Her Royal Highness the Princess Alene, rightful heiress to her father's crown and the throne of Urania."

HER CHOICE (June 29).—The love affair of Betty and Harry is progressing smoothly, when Count Lamont, who is a favorite of her father, appears, and father immediately tries to discourage Harry and to supplant him with the Count. Betty's mother does not favor this, for she has introduced Lord Chase, and it is her intention to encourage a match between Betty and him. Betty and Harry are temporarily discomfited, but Harry gets an idea and the lovers start to carry it into execution. She writes a note to the Count and one to the Lord asking each of them to come to a meeting place at a late hour and to be dressed as a woman, and that neither must speak a word but to proceed to the minister's to be wedded. Each telephones to the parent who has been his particular ally, and tells of the planned elopement.

The father and mother are delighted and they take no apparent notice of Betty when she makes an excuse to go out to a friend's for a few minutes. Harry is waiting and they are whisked away in his car to the minister's, where they are married. In the meantime the Count and Lord have disguised and met at the appointed place. They in turn hurry to the minister's and arrive before the young couple has departed. The young folks hide and the others are admitted. The wedding is interrupted by both of the parties producing rings and the minister whisks off their hats and exposes their identity. They leave in disgust and hurry to the parents who meet them with surprise, but when all is explained and the young lovers enter and tell their story they are forgiven.

THE PATH TO THE RAINBOW (Special—Three Parts—June 30).—Henry Grayson, a bank teller, and Briggs, an artist, are both in love with Julia Mills, a society girl. Julia eventually marries Briggs and they go to Europe. Henry, having a longing for a child, adopts Frances, an orphan of nine years. Later Henry becomes president of the bank and finds complete happiness with Frances, who has reached the age of eighteen, and visualizes her as the possible mother of his child. He, however, through timidity of nature, delays a proposal. Frances, during frequent week-ends at the home of her friend, Jean Hardy, falls in love with Jean's brother Ed. At a dance Ed receives news that through his uncle's will, he is to take charge of the latter's factory at Chicago, the town in which Frances lives. He immediately proposes and the girl accepts him, but refuses to marry him until he has made good in the management of the business left him. For the time being they agree to say nothing of their tentative engagement.

In the meantime, Henry has gone secretly ahead with plans for a little cottage on an estate known as Rainbow Hill, resolving to propose to Frances when it is finished. Affairs go badly with Ed. The workmen are dissatisfied, creditors begin to press their claims and reports of bankruptcy creep into circulation. Ed can see his way clear with a loan from the bank, and Frances decides to ask the favor of Henry. He has just come from Rainbow Hill. The cottage is completed, and it is now time to propose. He enters the room and finds Frances. Slowly at first he explains how long he has sought the happiness of wedlock and fatherhood and his great love for her. Half-stunned, she tells him of her promise to marry Ed Hardy, and of her intention to ask for the loan that will save him from bankruptcy. Henry is astounded. Frances exits upstairs, miserable. Confronted by the sight of Ed's photo on the table, all of the bitterness in Henry's nature surges to the surface. In his anger the opportunity to deny Ed assistance seems like a god-send.

Next morning Ed, hard-pressed by creditors, comes to Henry for assistance. Frances is to wed his rival on condition that he is not a failure. He refuses flatly to make the loan, but the appealing face of Frances appears before him. Is he to destroy the happiness of two people and financially ruin one of them? He calls Ed back and makes the loan. Next day Henry takes home a photograph of the little house on Rainbow Hill and tells the newly engaged couple that it is to be his wedding present. Not twenty-four hours after, Henry receives a caller at the bank in the person of Julia. Her husband died in Europe and she has returned to America to place her bank account with Henry. Their tales of the past unfold the great desire of their future, and soon there is a double wedding at the little church.

BY THE FLIP OF A COIN (Special—Two Parts—July 1).—Colonel Owen Coll, of the British Army in India, is greatly perturbed when he receives word that Lieutenant Gerald Netter is to be stationed at his post. Years ago Gerald and Coll were rivals for the hand of Marian Denby. Marian favored Gerald. Then the Boer War started, and both men left for the front. In a charge one day, Coll surreptitiously shot Gerald from behind, and the doctors said there was little chance for his recovery. Coll put Gerald's name on the casualty list as dead. Gerald wrote a note to Marian, and gave it to Coll to deliver. Coll destroyed it, and told Marian that Gerald was dead. He courted her ardently with her father's consent. Finally Marian wrote to him, addressing him as her dear friend, but relating how she could never marry him, as she did not love him. Coll put the letter in another envelope, and sent it to Gerald. Coll refused to take Marian at her word, and urged by her father, Marian finally consented to marry him.

Gerald meets Marian at a ball given by the British officers. She is greatly agitated, but Coll calmly introduces her as his wife. Gerald treats her coldly, and she slips him her dance card, on which is written to meet her in the grove without. Gerald does so, and explanations are made. The old love surges back, and Gerald seizes her in his arms. And thus Coll finds them. He tells Gerald they will avoid scandal, and that he will give him cause to act at the club the next night. At home, Coll sends Marian to her room. He reads in a book of army regulations that duelling is forbidden. Then he conceives another plan. The next day he has some business with a native goldsmith, and that night at the club, he seemingly starts an argument with Gerald. It ends with Gerald's flinging his glove in Coll's face. Since duelling is forbidden, Coll tells of his plan to obtain satisfaction. They will flip a coin. If heads turn up Gerald must suicide by ten o'clock the following night and if tails turn Coll must. The coin is flipped, and turns up heads. Without a word Gerald leaves the room.

It is eight o'clock the next night. The officers at the club sit in tense groups. Coll has been drinking and goes home intoxicated. Marian meets him and begs him to tell her what was agreed upon the night before. Coll relates how her lover will be dead within an hour, and drunkenly explains how he flipped the coin. He lets the coin fall, and Marian picks it up. It is heads on both sides! She sees through her husband's villainy and rushes to the door to inform on him. He catches her, locks her in her room. Marian descends from the balcony by a rope of sheets and rushes to the officers' club. There she explains matters, and begs the men to save Gerald. They look at the clock—9.55! There is but one chance—by telephone. And luckily they catch Gerald in the nick of time. With the whole affair explained, the officers decide to get an explanation from Coll.

Meanwhile Coll realizes that he is in grave danger. He takes up a revolver, and says meaningly, "This won't be the first time a revolver has been accidentally discharged." He cautiously enters Marian's room and discovers her escape. All is lost! He sees the officers coming up the road. Terrified, he locks himself in the library. The officers pound at the door, and he decides upon the one way left for him. He unlocks the door and hastily retreats to a little alcove. The officers see a puff of smoke, and rush up to find the man dead.

HER MOTHER'S SECRET (July 2).—After twenty years of absence, in which time he has become wealthy, Lloyd Kent returns to his home town. During his journeying he has kept the memory of his boyhood sweetheart, Emily Lester who jilted him in a moment of pique, and married his rival, John Rand. Kent finds her a widow in moderate circumstances with a daughter eighteen. The mother's happiness at the return of the man whose image she has held enshrined during the years, is soon repressed by mother-love as she realizes that Kent's attention is directed less to her plain, unattractive self then at the daughter, who is the counter-part of the sweetheart he remembers. Betty is dazzled by his attentions and wealth. Hal Edwards, "the boy next door," shines less brightly in her imagination than before the advent of Kent. With the affections of both men within her hand, Betty is far inclined towards the older suitor, when, unknown to her mother, Betty comes upon her in an unguarded moment and is given to see into the sacred places of her mother's life and she unveils the secret of her love and sorrow, uncloaked of mother-love.

In that moment of revelation, Betty's choice is determined and a plan evolved for turning Kent's errant affection into its rightful channel. Realizing the manner in which her mother's charms are hidden: that of her manner of dress, she brings out of an old clothes press a pretty, old-time gown reminiscent of girlhood days, and, after much coaxing, a transformation is performed in Emily's appearance. Waiting for Betty in the candle-lighted parlor, Kent thinks of the past. At this moment, as though in answer to his mood, there appears, not the girlish, immature daughter, but the reality of the girl of his dreams older, more mature and fitter for his companionship but still charming. In an instant he realizes the trick time has played upon him, their old vows are renewed and cemented. Betty, peeking through the door, sees the success of her unselfish plan and reaps her reward as Hal Edwards, who, coming over to tell her he is going away, comprehends the meaning of the tableau in the other room, claims and receives her love.

A DAY ON THE FORCE (July 3).—Bill decides to takes a stroll through the park. He encounters an unwelcome person in the form of a policeman whom he decides to follow, and after seeing the attention that is lavished upon the policeman, it becomes Bill's one ambition to become an officer. After making his rounds, the policeman decides to take a nap. This is Bill's chance. He hurriedly secures the policeman's hat and coat and sets out to get some of the attentions that have been bestowed upon the policeman. But in this Bill does not meet with any great success. In the course of his rounds he meets Nora, the cook, who invites him in the house to have a bottle of beer. While sitting and talking to the cook they hear a strange noise. The lady of the house enters and tells Bill to come quick, as there is a burglar in the parlor. Bill tells them to remain where they are, that he will soon capture the burglar.

As Bill enters the hall he sees the portiers moving in a strange manner. Thinking it the burglar, Bill hits the portieres with his club. Imagine Bill's surprise when he finds that he has hit the owner of the house. Not desiring to make any explanation, Bill beats a hasty retreat. He wanders into the park, where he meets a Frenchman and his sweetheart. Right away Bill starts a flirtation with the girl, which is resented by the Frenchman chasing Bill. In the course of the chase Bill knocks several men down, who get up and pursue Bill along with the Frenchman. After a long chase, and being close pressed, Bill leads his pursuers to the creek. Bill drops on the bank and the men stumble over him, falling into the creek. Bill wanders off.

BIOGRAPH.

HIS FATAL SHOT (June 28).—Disdained by the woman he loves because he uses drugs, Hillman seeks forgetfulness in the country. His physician accompanies him. Chance brings to the same locality Bartlett, his former rival for the woman's affections, who finds solace in the love of his landlord's simple, sweet daughter. Hillman escapes the doctor's watchfulness and, taking his gun, goes hunting. The doctor finds a note indicating that he will commit suicide, and rushes out in search of him. Bartlett and his sweetheart's brother also go hunting, each in his own direction. Bartlett hears a shot and finds Hillman dead by his own hand. The girl's brother comes upon him bending over the body, and, believing him a murderer, so informs the sheriff. Bartlett is arrested, despite his protestations of innocence. He has been locked up for some hours when the doctor arrives at the sheriff's office, bearing the suicide note and Hillman's gun, which he had picked up on finding the body, just before Bartlett reached the scene. He had lost his way and wandered in search of the sheriff.

LOVE'S MELODY (Special—Two Parts—June 29).—The young actor becomes engaged to a beautiful girl, whose stepfather is a wealthy man. One evening, after the performance, there is a bachelor supper on the stage, given him by his comrades in celebration of his approaching marriage. Toasts having been drunk and speeches made, some one suggests that they have a little music. The orchestra has long since gone, but an old blind musician has stopped to talk with his friend, the stage doorkeeper. The actor asks him to come in and play for them, and he gladly consents. His music enthralls them. No one in the party can recall ever having heard it, and the blind musician is asked whether, perchance, it is his own composition. He says: "Yes, it is inspired by something in my own life. It seemed to me most suitable to such an occasion as this—I call it 'Love's Melody.'". And he tells them the story of his music.

Years before he was recognized as one of the most brilliant young musicians and composers. At a concert he met and fell in love with a young singer. She had another suitor, a wealthy man; but she chose the musician. It was then that he wrote "Love's Melody." After a few years of happy married life, in the course of which they were blessed with a child, a dreadful misfortune overtook him. It alarmed him to find that his sight seemed suddenly to fail; but the sensation passed, and, after reassuring his anxious wife, he set out for the theater. In the musicians' room he again experienced the feeling, and suddenly he gave a great cry that startled his fellows: "I'm blind!" That meant hardship; gradually the family drifted to poorer and poorer quarters. In despair the wife appealed to her former suitor for aid; he offered to arrange a concert tour for her, but her husband demurred. She insisted on going, and, taking the little girl, left him. And he never heard from them again. His old friend, the stage doorkeeper, was all he had left. On the day after hearing this sad story, the actor calls on his fiancee and hears her playing "Love's Melody." She answers his eager questions: "My mother taught me that when I was a child." The lost is found.

FATE'S HEALING HAND (July 1).—John Calvert and his neighbor, Judson, have a dispute over a boundary line, and come to blows. Calvert's wife sees what is happening and runs toward them. Judson has picked up his shot gun, and in the struggle that ensues the gun is discharged, killing Mrs. Calvert. Judson is haunted by the memory, and on his deathbed adjures his son, Bob, to refrain from evil passions, so that his life may be a blessing, and not a curse, like his father's. Bob determines to enter the ministry, and attends a divinity college. Calvert's daughter, Hallie, reaches womanhood, and the mountain missionary persuades her father to send her to school. Here she meets Bob Judson by accident, and, after scorning him as she has been taught to do, is touched by his sincerity. After their graduation the young folks start home together and are married by the missionary. Hallie runs ahead to surprise her father. When he learns that she has married the son of the man who embittered his life, his wrath is terrible. He snatches up his gun and goes forth to kill. Just as Judson and the missionary round a bend in the trail, he fires. Hallie, running to warn her husband, crosses the trail just as her father pulls the trigger, and receives the bullet. As she falls, Bob and her father simultaneously rush forward and recognize each other. Calvert's rage is unloosed, and, although horror-stricken, he still endeavors to wreak vengeance on Bob. The minister restrains him, saying: "This is the result of your desire for vengeance." Hallie recovers from her wound, and by her love for both brings the two men together as friends, Calvert having learned a bitter lesson from the terrible whim of fate.

THE SANDS OF DEE (July 2—Biograph Reissue No. 4).—Mary was a fisher lass, the idol of her parents, and betrothed to a young man of the village. One of her duties was to call the cattle home at eventide, across the sands of Dee. On the shore, one day, she met a stranger—an artist, who painted her portrait and made love to her. Her sweetheart remonstrated when she stole out to meet the artist by night, but she tricked him and went to keep the tryst. Later the artist's love grew cold, and she learned that he had a wife. Heartbroken, Mary went home, where her tragic secret was soon discovered. Her father turned her out, and she wandered along the shore.

LUXURIOUS LOU (July 3).—The woman who alighted from the stage on the arm of Tim Bryant was such a figure as Willow Creek had never seen—an angular, ancient female, tricked out in clothes that made the feminine population gasp. Tom Evans, the camp's woman hater, took one look, ejaculated: "Luxurious Lou!" and departed hastily on the outgoing stage. The rest of Tim's friends extended hospitality to his wife, but she soon showed them that they were not in her class. Tired of the simple life, she left Tim and went to Seattle, whence she wrote that after his outrageous treatment she wanted a divorce, and nothing less than $50,000 would square it with her. The boys escorted Tim to Seattle and offered to buy him off for $10,000. Luxurious Lou laughed at them. Suddenly the door opened and Tom Evans walked in. Luxurious Lou gasped. "Don't give her a cent," said Tom. "She ain't got any claim on Tim, being still Mrs. Evans, as far as I'm aware." And he told the story of his unfortunate marriage. "Send up a ticket for Utah," he telephoned the office, and gave Luxurious Lou money for current expenses.

ESSANAY.

TRAPPED (June 28).—Jack Lawrence is a detective unknown to his friend, Kirk Weston. Lawrence simulates fear because of a pretended murder committed in the same manner as one committed by Weston years ago. Lawrence demands Weston's protection and is taken by him to a low rooming house kept by "Dutch" Charlie, where Lawrence is concealed in the attic. Weston makes an excuse to leave and tells Charlie to call the police as there is a murder upstairs. Charlie does so. Weston returns and Lawrence threatens to kill Weston as a "squealer." Weston pleads for his life and confesses his early crime as an extenuation to Lawrence whom Weston really believes to be guilty of murder. Lawrence reveals himself, tells Weston he has been after him for a long time. The police come and Weston is taken to the jail, charged with the old murder.

PROVIDENCE AND MRS. URMY (Special—Three Parts—June 29).—Mrs. Urmy is so anxious for her daughter, Jeannette, to marry a member of the nobility that she has inserted in an English newspaper that an engagement is pending between Jeannette and Lord Chilminster, notwithstanding the fact that neither has seen the other. Jeannete reads the announcement and runs away with a chauffeur who has driven up to the house of Lady Hartley, her aunt. To end her troubles quickly, Jeannette suggests that the chauffeur marry her, but that she be allowed to remain a wife in name only. She tells Barton, the chauffeur, that he can name his own terms if he will consent. They are married and start on an automobile trip through the country. Barton finally exerts his husbandly authority and angers Jeannette, who flies homeward to escape him. He follows and arrives just as Jeanette is explaining matters to her mother and Lady Hartley, and hears Lady Hartley tell Jeannette that Barton is only his family name and that he is Lord Chilminster. Jeannette is angry awhile, but relents and everyhody is happy, thanks to "Providence and Mrs. Urmy."

DUD RESOLVES NOT TO SMOKE (June 30).—Dud and Wag, his dog, always looking for mischief, find Dud's father's pipe and the pipe is strong. Dud resolves to smoke. He does so with dire consequences. The Spirit of Smoke appears and carries Dud away into the clouds, far above the stars, and leaves him hanging on a corner of the moon. Wag weeps so many tears that he forms a lake and drowns himself. Dud tells the moon a funny story and gets dumped off into space for his pains, because of the moon's boisterous laughter. Dud falls and falls and falls. He wakes up on the floor of his bedroom and declared to Wag that he will never smoke again. The children will scream with delight when they see this picture and the older folks will laugh until they cry.

A COUNTLESS COUNT (July 1).—The daughter and sweetheart are in love, but their affairs move anything but smoothly, because the father has other ideas for his daughter's marriage.

He has already selected the Count as a future son-in-law, but the daughter has a nasty temper of her own and refuses point blank. The father has never seen the Count, and finds an Irishman in the park whom he mistakes for the Count and invites him home to dinner. Amazing complications result when the real Count arrives. The sweetheart disguises himself as the butler and makes everything end happily by throwing both the Count and the Irishman out of the house while the daughter falls into his arms and the father gives his parental blessing.

BRONCHO AND THE LAND GRABBER (June 18).—Broncho works for a despicable land grabber who treats his help like a brute. The men finally plot to lynch the land grabber. Broncho races on his horse ahead of them and tells him of the plot. They barricade the doors, but the lynching party breaks them down and drag the two men away to string them up. But the girl has seen them and raced for the sheriff, who arrives just in time to prevent the lynching. The land grabber experiences a change of heart. He appoints Broncho foreman and the men have won their point and return to work satisfied, while Broncho falls in love with the girl who saved them.

WORK (Chaplin Subject—Two Parts—June 21).—Charles Chaplin, assistant to a paperhanger, is called with his boss to decorate a beautiful home. The boss makes him haul the wagon with all the paraphernalia upon the top of which he rides. Chaplin, dragging the wagon with difficulty, blocks traffic, bumps into a street car, falls down a man hole and beats up a policeman, among other mishaps. Arriving at the house, they proceed leisurely to work, while the master of the house is clamoring for his breakfast. They daub the rooms indiscriminately with paste and nearly wreck the place. Finally Chaplin is called to the kitchen to fix a stove which insists on exploding with malicious regularity. He drops the scaffold on which the boss is standing, spilling him on the floor. The boss accumulates a bucket of paste in the tumble, which sticks to his head.

Chaplin succeeds in lighting the gas, accepts the grateful thanks of the family and is about to gracefully retire when there is another blast, shooting him out of the room. A flirt comes to call on the lady of the house and is discovered by the husband, who pursues him all over the house, shooting his revolver. A bullet goes through the floor and hits Chaplin. Both he and his boss are drawn into the mix-up and hurl paste. Finally they all rush down stairs just as the stove blows up completely. The walls of the kitchen are blown out and everybody is buried in the debris. Chaplin opens the door of the stove which has fallen over his head, and comes out smiling.

HER REALIZATION (June 25).—The girl rejects her sweetheart, telling him that she loves him but prefers a career. She takes up nursing, by which she hopes sometime to become famous. The girl is called to the home of a famous singer, who has broken down. In her delirium the singer calls for the sweetheart of her girlhood. She tells of the disappointment in life despite her fame, and that she longs for a home and the simple things of life, with love. The girl is awakened to a realization of the folly of her course and goes back to her sweetheart in time.

THE INNER BRUTE (Special—Two Parts—July 3).—Jake, the son, is a victim of parental influence, having all the brutishness and ferocity of the tiger by which his mother was frightened. Jake grows to manhood and loves Helen Parker in his brutish way. He is jealous of Will Hammond, whom Helen favors, and kills him in a terrific fight, throwing him over a cliff. He eludes his pursuers by hiding in a tree. He goes home and peers into the cabin window, seeing his mother alone. He scratches at the door as the tiger did years before. The mother hears and is frightened. She looks and sees the brutish face of her own son which fades into the head and gaping jaws of a tiger. She seizes a rifle and fires through the window at the head, killing young Jake, but easing her heart of a greater sorrow than even his death brings.

EDISON.

CARTOONS IN THE HOTEL (June 30).—The film opens with a scene in a hotel lobby. Bobby, the bellboy, is busily engaged in a perusal of "The Grouch Chaser." Mae, the telephone operator, is attending to everything but the switchboard. A travelling man enters and soon is telling a story. Bobby is apparently dissatisfied with the way in which the story was told and refers them to "The Grouch Chaser," which contains a cartoon illustrating the same idea. "Tales of Silas Bunkum" is the first tickler. Silas tells his yarns in such a way as to hold the attention of all in the lobby. The salesman takes hold of Mae's hand, and caresses it fondly. There is a large solitare diamond on the hand. The book is again referred to and Silas is seen to be the target for all kinds of fruit and vegetables.

A crook, meantime, has entered and removed the ring from Mae's finger, she being too absorbed in "The Grouch Chaser" to notice it. She discovers her loss later and accuses the salesman. The crook is unsuspected and goes to register. He is joined by the salesman, and they turn the pages of the book to "A Chip of the Old Block." In this story an artist draws a girl and leaves the studio. The artist's son enters and draws a picture of his father adjoining it. The drawings come to life and some funny situations are resultant. The salesman throws back his head to laugh, and the crook tries to remove his scarf pin, but is caught in the act and turned over to the police.

"Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland." — Hicks dreams he has a powder that will neutralize his wife's irascibility and starts to blow the magical powder into the air upon returning home from a cafe. He wakes up to find that he is blowing into his wife's face. Mrs. Hicks is thus irritated, and kicks Hercules into the waste basket.

THE TRAGEDIES OF THE CRYSTAL GLOBE (Special—Three Parts—July 2).—It is in Paris, Mirza Morris, an American girl, is in love with Paul Devine, a sculptor. Her answer to his proposal is to be given him that evening. Muzaffer Mansur, infatuated by Mirza, seeks to prevent the meeting by promising to show her something if she will come to his apartment instead. By hypnotic power he gets her to go to his apartment, and during her stay there, Paul searches in vain. Muzaffer Mansur exercises a hypnotic influence over the American girl, and she is transported back hundreds of years to an ancient nunnery. Her guardian, enamored of her, succeeds in getting her away from the convent. While she is at her home, Mirza falls in love with a young knight. In a fit of jealousy her guardian orders the knight murdered, and his wishes are executed. When she witnesses the tragedy, Mirza plunges a dagger into her heart, and dies with her lover.

Mirza next gazes into the crystal globe and sees reflected there, herself as she was in the days of the barbarians. Mirza's father has consented to give her in marriage to King Amede, in appreciation of assistance rendered against tribes invading the country. Mirza accompanies the warrior to the court of King Amede and on the way falls in love with her escort. He is apathetic, and she is given a vial of love potion by the witches, who direct her to give it to her escort. She does, and the effect is marvelous. Her love is at once reciprocated. Arriving at Amede's court, the king and the escort duel for the possession of Mirza. She offers to stand in the fire of the temple to be cleansed of earthly love. A maiden, devoid of earthly love, can pass through the flames unscathed. Mirza, in love with her escort, is consumed by the flames.

The third story relates to Mirza's experiences in an Oriental garden. Paul eventually finds Mansur's card and subsequently leads the police to the latter's apartment, arriving in time to save Mirza, who is about to drink some poison offered her by Mansur.

WAS IT HER DUTY? (July 3).—Margaret's place always has been with her dependent mother, a rather irritable person, who could scarcely bear to have her daughter out of her sight several minutes at a time. Jack Alliday, a young bank clerk, is in love with Margaret, who finds time occasionally to slip away from her sewing to spend a short period in Jack's company. Margaret's mother is averse to the match, and when Jack breaks the news to her that the couple have become engaged, she refuses her consent to their marriage. Margaret continues to work as a seamstress, caring for her mother continually. Jack has become attracted to Ruth Maitland and in time they are married. To add to Margaret's sadness, Ruth engages her to make her wedding gown. On one occasion, as Ruth is trying on the gown at Margaret's home, Mrs. Maitland remarks to Margaret that she thought, at one time, she and Jack would make a match. The remark cuts Margaret's heart like a keen-edged knife.

Some years have passed. Margaret, showing the effects of worry, work and years, is still attending to her mother, now an invalid. The latter remarks that she feels that she has only a short time longer to live and wonders what will become of Margaret. With a sigh, Margaret suggests that it is rather late to be thinking of that. After her mother's death, Margaret happens to be passing through the park and sees Jack and Ruth with their children having an enjoyable time at a picnic. Other children are there, and each seems to be mocking her. Slowly she returns to her room—alone. She has faded, as have many others, for

THE STOLEN CASE (June 24).—Jerry, a member of the ball and chain gang, weary of the arduous labor imposed upon him, escapes his servitude and wends his way to a nearby town. There he meets His Royal Highness, Prince Flivver, just arrived via fast freight to visit the wealthy Simpkins family. Jerry shows his appreciation—or lack of it—of the Prince's pro-offer of friendship by purloining that worthy's suit case, which bears in large letters the name of its owner. Running to escape the Prince, whom he knows will follow as soon as the loss is discovered, Jerry reaches the railroad station where Simpkins has gone to meet the nobleman as per appointment. Seeing Jerry with the suit case bearing Prince Flivver's name, Simpkins surmises that the possessor is the real Prince, and soon has Jerry muffled in an automobile on the way to the Simpkins mansion.

Jerry, of course, becomes the center of attraction. He is wined and dined. His slightest wish is anticipated and gratified. He is in the seventh heaven of delight. Meanwhile the Prince has not been idle. He invokes the aid of another of his nationality, who, in turn, notifies the police, and together they set out for the Simpkins home. They enter just as Jerry is regaling the family and a party of guests with stories of his wealth and position in a far-off land. The scene that follows ends with the Prince coming into his own, while Jerry is going out—in the custody of the officers. However, Jerry eventually escapes while the officers decide a little quarrel between themselves, and everything ends happily for all concerned.

THE FORTUNES OF MARIANA (Special—Two Parts—June 21).—Mariana, a typical child of the streets, and an orphan, sells newspapers for a living. One evening she accidentally encounters Northrup, a prominent attorney, and they become friends. Hinky, Mariana's brother, a pickpocket, pursued by the police, comes home while Northrup is there. Mariana hides Hinky and she and Northrup deny any knowledge of his whereabouts. Northrup, fascinated with the girl, and pitying her somewhat, induces his sister, Mrs. Lacey, to give Mariana a position as maid in her home. However, in the midst of her happiness at the home of Mrs. Lacey, Hinky swoops down upon her. With threats and blows he forces Mariana to permit him to enter the home and rob it.

Mariana, feeling she cannot impose any longer on the kindness of her friends, leaves. Six months later Hinky is a prominent figure in the underworld, and Northrup is prosecuting Henry Hay, the president of the traction company of the city, who has put over several shady deals. Hay decides that he must secure Northrup's papers. He engages Hinky to steal them. In the midst of the plotting. Mariana comes into the room and overhears all. Northrup is sent a note telling him to come to a certain address at 4 o'clock sharp that afternoon. Mariana goes to the police station. A detail of police are sent to Northrup's aid. Exactly at 4 o'clock Northrup is bound and gagged by the gang. The police break into the house and capture Hinky and his confederates. Mariana frees Northrup.

WITH THE AID OF THE LAW (June 22).—Lee Russell, a young business man, leaves the city for a vacation sojourn in the mountains. Jeff Smith and Joe Butler run a moonshine still in the mountains and Jeff is in love with Butler's daughter, Rose, but the love is not returned. Lee Russell, seen near the still by Jeff and Btuler, is shot by Jeff and wounded.

Under Rose's care Lee fully recovers from his wound, and learns to love Rose. Jeff sees Lee kiss Rose, and in a rage tries to shoot him, but Rose knocks the gun aside, and the men start fighting. Revenue officers, who have a warrant for Jeff's arrest, hear the noise of the fight, rush in and capture Jeff.

THE ONION PATCH (June 23).—Jane Darrow, a maiden lady, receives a letter from her Aunt Lucy, that Jane has been left sixty acres adjoining her own little farm. Joe Boyce, a young fellow down on his luck, appears in the village and is given work by Jane. He proves a faithful employee. Six months later Jane is so satisfied with Joe's work as a farmhand, that she proposes that he work the onion patch for her on a sharing basis.

Daisy, a young schoolma'am, is introduced to Joe. He realizes that she is beautiful, but he also realizes that Jane owns all the land. Some time later, Joe asks Jane to marry him, but she hides her emotion and tells him to wait and see how the onions come out. Joe's onions turn out well, but he finally marries Daisy. Jane gains happiness elsewhere.

SANDS OF TIME (Special—Three Parts—June 24).—Dr. George M. MacGregor has devoted his life to science and eventually becomes a surgeon. Dr. MacGregor, now well along the pathway of life, finds time to woo and win Enid. Dr. Gordon Blake is Dr. MacGregor's assistant. Enid MacGregor longs for the undivided attention of her husband, and she cannot understand why he must devote almost every minute of the day to professional pursuits. Theatrical and dinner engagements are repeatedly interrupted when Dr. MacGregor is called to minister to the sick. Enid turns to Dr. Blake for comfort. Dr. Blake is a "heart-breaker" and attracted by Enid's beauty, he cultivates her acquaintance. One night, after escorting her home from a ball, at which her husband failed to arrive, she agrees to leave her home. When Dr. MacGregor returns after an all-night vigil at the bedside of a sick child, his heart is broken upon the discovery that his beloved wife has left him. He seeks comfort and solace in his surgical work.

Time passes, and Enid MacGregor applies for and secures a decree of divorce from Dr. MacGregor. Living with Dr. Blake, she is overjoyed when she receives the certificate of legal separation, never dreaming but that Dr. Blake will marry her. However, the tares and the thistles of sin flourish for Enid, for she, to her horror, discovers that Dr. Blake is not willing that she should bear his name and appear in the eyes of the world as his wife. She leaves Dr. Blake and goes into the streets. She sinks lower and lower until finally she is obliged to pawn her wedding ring for a pittance in order to keep her body and soul together. Dr. Blake finds consolation in the charms of another woman. Dr. MacGregor only finds partial consolation for the loss of his beloved wife in his scientific pursuits. Late at night as he is repairing to his lonely home from the hospital, he passes Enid. He is unconscious of her presence. As he pauses upon the street corner, thinking again of former joyous days, the woman creeps up behind and kisses the hem of his overcoat. He passes on.

Dr. Gordon Blake, returning home in his automobile from the theater where he has been entertaining a lady friend, hears a splash in the waters of the lake. Others hear the splash and hurry to the water's edge, and watch the lifeless body of Enid being recovered from the waters. Blake is overcome as he gazes upon the lifeless form of the woman whom he has tempted to sin. Dr. MacGregor stands in the dissecting room, ready to make a scientific demonstration to the assembled medical students. A body covered with a sheet is rolled into the pit by attendants. Dr. MacGregor prepares to demonstrate an important surgical detail. He removes the sheet from the face of the lifeless form. He stands rigid with horror. It is his long-lost wife. With one despairing gesture, he dismisses the students and attendants, and they silently leave the room. Then again he turns to the lifeless form of the one he loved so well, and sinking beside the body he gives way to his grief.

THE TIGER CUB (Jungle-Zoo Picture—June 26).—Jack Norton, an African settler, has a tiger cub for a pet. Two years later, John Blake, a missionary, and his wife, Helen, call on the Nortons and ask Jack to guide them through the jungle. They near a hostile village and resolve to make a detour. They are attacked by the chief and natives. Ammunition running short Jack says that he believes their only chance is to surrender. He parleys with the hostile chief, who points to the dead bodies of his followers, and says: "For the three lives you have taken you shall give three in return." They make the whites prisoners, who are escorted to a tiger pit. Jack Norton, facing the tiger, shows recognition. It is his pet of years ago.

THE GIRL AND THE REPORTER (Special—Two Parts—June 28).—Billie Benton, a cub reporter, goes to the home of Violet Reynolds, a society girl and settlement worker, and asks for an interview, which is refused. Billie returns to the reportorial room, expresses his failure and the city editor assigns Ned Pelton, another reporter, to get the story. Ned summons Billie and explains a scheme by which Miss Reynolds may be interviewed. In the meantime, Violet goes about her settlement work in the tenement district where she is followed by Ned and Billie. Billie again accosts Violet and asks for an interview. She is indignant. Ned pretends not to know Billie, approaches and scores him for annoying Violet. Ned thus wins Violet's gratitude. He tells Violet that he is one John Blake, a settlement worker, and that reporters are very annoying.

Ned accompanies Violet into the tenement house where Pete Davis, an office boy, is convalescing. Pete's mother is grateful to Violet and Ned for their ministrations. Violet asks Ned for a pencil and card in order to take Mrs. Davis' address, and Ned thoughtlessly hands her his business card, upon which is lettered: NED PELTON, "The Daily News." Violet utterly ignores him thereafter and leaves. Ned follows after finding Violet's glove on the floor. Ned Davis in his tenement home, reads the "Arabian Nights" sent by Violet, who tells him in a note that she is going to Europe. He tells Ned, who calls, of his disappointment in not again seeing Violet.—Ned offers Pete a position in the newspaper office when he recovers his health.

At the end of the summer Mrs. Reynolds and Violet are sailing for home. Huri Singh, an Oriental, aboard the ship, falls in love with Violet and annoys her. Ned and Pete go to the dock to meet the steamer. Violet promises Ned an interview because he got her protege a position. Huri Singh, the Oriental, plots to secure Violet. He forges a note summoning her, and makes her a captive. Pete and Ned, alarmed over Violet's disappearance, trace her. They discover Violet's place of captivity and with the aid of the police overcome the Orientals, but Pete is badly wounded. Later, Edward Pelton, reporter, and Violet Reynolds, society girl and settlement worker, are united in marriage through the instrumentality of Pete, the office boy.

ON THE BORDER (June 29).—Joe, the line rider, is in love with Ruth. Joe leaves to ride the boundary line. Mason, a smuggler, and his accomplice Nash, meet Ruth, who is flattered by Nash's attentions. Mason, the smuggler, conceals opium in the tire case of the automobile. Nash and Ruth enter the car. Joe sees Ruth with Nash and later quarrels with her.

Joe is informed of opium smuggling. Suspicious officials search Nash's automobile. Fearful of capture, Nash abandons the car. As Joe approaches, Ruth is discovered and Joe finds the opium in the tire case. He pursues Nash and Mason. After an exciting chase, he captures the two crooks. Ruth asks for Joe's forgiveness, which is granted.

THE MYSTERY OF DEAD MAN'S ISLE (June 30).—Robert Wayne, a young mining engineer, and his assistant, Ben Wilson, are in camp on Dead Man's Isle. Robert, looking through binoculars, sees a woman and wonders who it can be, for he knows that no one lives on Dead Man's Isle. He decides to find out who the mysterious young woman is.

Hulda, a beautiful young girl, lives on Dead Man's Isle. She hears Robert's approach, turns and runs and Robert sees her fall. He goes to her and they are mutually attracted. Then Hulda tells Robert: "I dare not tell you what your danger is, but you must leave the Island and never come back." Then Hulda sees her foster father, Tom Hilton, appearing, and the couple hide.

Robert makes repeated visits to Hulda. He watches Hilton and discovers that he is a counterfeiter, and that he has forced Hulda into criminal work. Robert discovers Hulda's danger, takes the counterfeit bills from her, destroys them, and says: "To be in possession of counterfeit money is a crime. Unless you come with me we go to prison together." Hulda shows her pleasure at Robert's love for her and accompanies him.

THE KICK OUT (Special—Three Parts—June 23).—The people's interest tremble in the hands of a Mayor, cunningly entrapped by a city boss. The "Clarion," an insignificant daily paper, champions the people's cause, and its enthusiastic editor, Mark Evans, sustains the Mayor, and wins his daughter, Edna. The pending gas bill involves the poor seriously while the big railroad deal means the selling of a city's rights to the profit of the boss and the grafters. The Clarion editor, playing the part of a detective, secures the facts of the deal; the Mayor's daughter is game in the fight, the Clarion sounds its challenge to the city robbers, and a fight begins.

The Mayor unconsciously walks into an open trap, the railroad deal is successfully laid to him, false affidavits are secured and the Mayor's downfall seems assured. The stenographer for the boss, suffering because of her father's abuse through the cunning of the railroad men who are profiting by the boss' craftiness, turns against the boss, secures valuable papers and places them in the hands of the Clarion editor, furnishing facts for the big fight. Trouble follows the supposed doubtful relations between the Clarion editor and the boss' stenographer, resulting in the breaking of the engagement between the Mayor's daughter and the editor, and presaging his downfall in the estimation of the people of the city. The loss of the valuable papers of the boss and the disappearance of the stenographer demand severe measures and "tools" are engaged, through whom the boss secures the papers again as the Clarion editor is assaulted and his safe robbed. Facing a lawsuit and ruin, the Clarion editor continues to seek new evidence, and in his strong defense of the Mayor, wins back the hand of the Mayor's daughter.

The Clarion editor and a detective follow the boss' "tools," who are escaping from the city; the editor follows the one who goes by train, the detective follows the other in an automobile. An exciting race follows. The train is wrecked, the Clarion editor rescues one "tool" from the wreck in a dying condition while the detective catches the other "tool" and brings him to the scene of the wreck. The dying "tool" of the boss confesses; his pal turns state's evidence. The boss gloats over his triumph; the Mayor trembles before gathering mobs who believe he has sold the city, while news reaches the boss of the forthcoming edition of the Clarion, containing a confession of the dying "tool." The boss orders the wrecking of the Clarion office; the Mayor's daughter is helping the old printer, and the Clarion editor is struggling to get back to the office. The entire office is wrecked, but the cunning printer had hid the chases with the story. The editor reaches the scene in his automobile, the press is intact, chases secured, the automobile backed up to the side of the office, and through a hole chopped in the wall ropes are attached and the automobile engine runs the press, bringing out the edition which is the means of the "kick out" of the boss, the saving of the city, the restoration of the Mayor to public confidence, and the happy culmination of the editor's romance with the Mayor's daughter.

WHEN HUBBY GREW JEALOUS (June 29).—Hubby is insanely jealous of his wife. One day she is taken ill and Hubby hurriedly takes her to the hospital. She is assigned to the ward which is in charge of Dr. Watt. The doctor is interested in the patient only in a professional way, but wife admires his looks and Hubby's jealousy comes to the front. He takes her back home. Wife has left her purse at the hospital accidentally and the doctor, feeling that she will be worried, goes out of his way to return it. Hubby leaves the office early to be with his wife, and coming in, finds the hated doctor with her. Angrily he orders him out and tells wife that the next time he will kill the doctor.

Wife decides to spend a day with a friend and as she is going up the steps of the friend's house, she sprains her ankle. The doctor, who is accidentally passing, sees the accident and decides to take her to the hospital for treatment. Hubby is worried over his wife's prolonged absence, and, 'phoning to the friend's home, finds that she is in the care of Dr. Watt. He fears the worst has happened and, getting a large revolver, goes to the hospital and demands to see his wife. The attendant tells him that she is in the care of Dr. Watt and that no one can see her. Hubby pushes him aside and rushes into the hospital. There is a lively chase before he finds her but at last he breaks into the room just as the doctor is holding her hand to test her temperature. Hubby is caught and put in a straight jacket and put to bed. The doctor feels his pulse, which is above normal on account of his anger and orders him strapped up. Hubby escapes, however, and, eluding his pursuers, gets home. Wife and the doctor arrive and the doctor tells Hubby he has had a good example of what jealousy will lead him to and cautions him to control himself. Hubby agrees that the advice is good and as the picture closes all is serene.

WHEN THE SPIRITS MOVED (July 2).—Both the boy and the girl work in "The Emporium" and have become quite chummy. The boy has made quite a hit with the girl, so one day she invites him to her home to meet father. Eddie resolves to go and has quite a trying ordeal getting acquainted with the old folks. The girl's family are all spiritualists and Eddie arrives in the midst of one of the meetings. The spiritual "carrying ons" are too much for the boy and even a kiss from the girl can't bribe him to stay. The next day the girl again invites Eddie up to the house and he is about to decline when he takes pity on the girl's disappointment and promises to go. She tells him that the party is in honor of the famous Dr. Bunk. Eddie regrets his decision but there is no way out of the party.

That night Dr. Bunk is the first of the guests to arrive. Eddie sees several unnerving omens, such as a black cat crossing the road ahead of him, and wishes he had not given his promise to be present, but goes on. The party starts and all are intently listening at the table, when Eddie's knees knock together in terror. The longer the party is in session the more Eddie's fears grow. Finally he can stand it no longer and says he must go. They all try to persuade him to stay but he gets as far as the front door, when he sees that it is raining "pitchforks." Baffled in his attempts to escape, he reluctantly agrees to stay and wants to go to bed at once. They show him up to his room and tell him that he and the professor will have to bunk together. Eddie tries to sleep but every creak of the blinds and every flash of lightning is a manifestation of spirits to him. When the professor gets in bed there is more "business." The bed pitches and jerks, but finally there is a lull and Eddie prayerfully tries to sleep, thinking the spirits have all gone to bed. The girl has a habit of walking in her sleep, and as she has been thinking of Eddie, she unconsciously goes to his room in her nightdress. Eddie uncovers his head long enough to see her and he knows that at last he sees real "spirits." Nothing can hold him now and, hurriedly dressing, hollering help at every breath, he starts out for home. The old folks try to quiet his fears by telling him that he saw their daughter walking in her sleep, but, nothing doing, he says he will do some walking of his own and joyfully sets out for home and peace.

HER OWN BLOOD (June 20).—Jane and her brother live in the north woods. Jim, a ne'er-do-well, is in love with Jane and she reciprocates his affections. Jane's brother, Tom, is a member of the Northwest Mounted Police and, while on a furlough notes the growing change in Jane. One day he surprises her while in Jim's arms.

Tom recognizes Jim as a card shark and drunkard and warns his sister of the man. Jane, loverlike, refuses to believe any ill of her sweetheart. Tom goes back to his patrol and one day receives a summons to arrest a murderer. Jim has engaged in a card game, is caught cheating, and kills his accuser. He escapes and goes to the girl's home.

While he is trying to get her to help him get away, her brother Tom comes on the scene. He tells Jane of the man's record and she tells him she knows it and that he must help Jim escape. Tom thinks of his oath and refuses. He and Jim engage in a fight. Jane gets Tom's gun and is going to hold him while Jim escapes. The murderer gets a knife and is about to attack Jim when the call of her blood rises within Jane and she shoots her former lover, thus saving the life of her own blood brother.

THE OLD GROUCH (July 1).—John Agnew, head of the Agnew Construction Company, is atheistic in his beliefs. He is constructing a dam, and his fortune is pretty well tied up in the enterprise. His wife,, about to keep a dinner engagement, offers to remain home with him, but he coldly repulses her kindly offer. Hurt and chagrined, Mrs. Agnew goes her way. Agnew endeavors to interest himself in a book, but the effort is not a success. Nature finally asserts itself, and Agnew gives way to sleep. He dreams that he is in his office. His stenographer brings him a telegram which informs him that the unfinished dam has burst. Shocked, he shows the wire to the stenographer. Instead of sympathy, the stenographer gives way to hysterical laughter and hurries into the outer office. Agnew follows her, to find the clerks reading the telegram. He expostulates with his employees, but they give him the laugh, jeer at him, etc., dance merrily about him, then exit in a disorderly manner. He returns home. His wife receives the news in a jocular manner, and informs him that she can no longer remain with him. His servants, too, give him the laugh, and leave in a manner similar to that of his office force. He collapses on his library couch.

His appeal to Mrs. Agnew changes her mind and she drops traveling bag and hat and ministers to her shaken husband. As the dream progresses, Agnew descends from affluence to dire poverty. His wife labors to keep him alive. His old manner asserting itself, he decides to brave nature and go forth to seek work. But each individual to whom he applies, from former business acquaintances to a bank president, turn him down, at the same time showing him how he antagonized them, or failed them at a time when his support was necessary to them. Reduced to the point where he is forced to accept manual labor, he secures a job with pick and shovel. But here, again, he loses for a politician, an old enemy, demands his discharge, and the forman is forced to carry out the demand. Sick and discouraged, Agnew returns to his squalid home. Here he meets his landlady, a shrewish woman, who demands her rent, and threatens to put him and his sick wife out unless the rent is forthcoming. In the midst of this last calamity, Agnew receives a letter. The letter is from the man whose son he turned down, and encloses a trifle of money, with a few words of friendly sentiment. Also, he receives a call from the Salvation Army girl, who brings her food and stimulants, for the ill Mrs. Agnew. Such coals of fire sear him deeply, and he drops, sobbing, beside his wife.

We next find him, still asleep in his chair, his uneasy movements evidencing that his dream is disturbing his sub-conscious being. His wife, returning from her engagement, enters the library, registers her alarm, and gently awakens him. The butler and Mrs. Agnew's maid enter. Instantly Agnew's mind reverts to the period where these two jewels made undignified exits, and his cobweb-hung brain, or his effort to clear it, opens the way for a comedy situation. With his wife's assistance, Agnew succeeds in regaining his mental equilibrium. He relates the dream, and the picture ends with his complete surrender, his confession that he has seen himself as others saw him, and his good wife's demonstration of her approval and her loyalty.

THE ADVISOR (July 4).—Before Madge married, Dr. Carr had been her family's physician for years. To Madge, a sensitive, high-strung girl, he was more than a physician—he was much the same as a father. Jim Rothwell, Madge's husband, is a rising young attorney, a fighter, who has been nominated by the reform party for Court Attorney. The political machine fears his election and its results. They search his private life for campaign material. There is nothing. In desperation they determine to compromise him, and to create a scandal that will attract the ill-favor of the public. Mrs. Wiley is brought from another city for the purpose. According to the plan, she visits Jim at his office, to consult him relative to purchasing some real estate. In preparation for the denouement of their scheme, a confederate has established himself in a neighboring office as a broker. Mrs. Wiley lays down a liberal fee and Jim, unsuspecting, gladly accepts it. As the woman leaves the office, Jim bids her a temporary adieu with marked politeness. Madge, who has been out on a shopping tour, approaches in the hall. She is inclined to treat the incident lightly. She secures the necessary shopping money from Jim and departs. Jim leaves a bit late that evening; the janitor has entered to start work. As Jim throws on his coat, the janitor calls his attention to a lady's handbag on the chair. Examination shows that it contains money. Jim decides to take it home and call Mrs. Wiley on the phone to inform her of her loss.

That evening a member of Jim's party, who in reality has been secretly bought over by the crooked politicians, finds an excuse to visit him. He is there when Jim calls Mrs. Wiley over the phone about the pocket-book. Madge has stepped into the room adjoining. As the phone message is about finished the friend knocks a vase to the floor to attract Madge's attention. Madge enters in time to hear her husband's closing sentence, which, in itself, sounds compromising. At sight of the pocket-book her first suspicions are aroused. After the friend's departure, Jim turns her inquiries aside with the characteristic remark of a busy man. Several days later, Jim complies with Mrs. Wiley's request to accompany her to the real estate in question to appraise it. On the way to the place in a taxi, the pair are observed by Madge coming from a matinee. She hurries to her old doctor, Carr, and confesses her fears to him. He is inclined to laugh them aside, but lightly tells her that if she is suspicious she should watch her husband. Madge leaves, taking the advice to heart.

While Jim is looking over the vacant house he first becomes suspicious that some sort of trap is being laid for him. He catches a glimpse of a man lurking near the house and observes Mrs. Wiley in a suspicious attempt to signal him. Once back at his office Jim gets in touch with the campaign chairman. Two detectives are sent to consult with Jim. He explains his suspicions and it is decided that the detectives shall keep a close watch to forestall any attempt to compromise him. Returning home, Jim is about to tell his wife of the affair, but he decides not to cause her any unnecessary worry. It may all be a mistake. Next morning Jim leaves the house to be followed shortly by his wife. At the office Jim receives Mrs. Wiley. Madge has observed her enter the building and has followed, pausing in the hall.

Mrs. Wiley, her back to the door, has quietly slipped the lock. She approaches Jim. Madge tries the door, and finds it closed against her. Mrs. Wiley plays her card on the instant—she rushes to Jim's arms and embraces him. Madge, looking through the keyhole, sees enough to convince her of her husband's perfidy. She staggers from the building and rushes home. Jim, meanwhile, has tried to fight off the woman. Mostly as the result of her own efforts, her hair is torn down, and her dress badly disarranged. The confederate from the adjoining office, breaks in the door and throttles him. And then Jim's detectives, waiting near by, rush in. Mrs. Wiley and her companion are arrested. Jim leaves for home to tell his wife of the whole affair, as a huge joke to be laughed over now at the politicians' expense.

Meanwhile, Madge has called up Doctor Carr. Over the phone she says: "I took your advice—good-bye!" She writes a hurried note: "Jim—Jim, how could you do it? I saw it all—the other woman—the kiss. God be kind, it is the end for me."

When Jim reaches home, he finds it empty. Doctor Carr, now fearful his advice has gone amiss, makes for Jim's residence. He arrives as Jim finishes reading the note found on the table. He sees the haunting, fearful, questioning look in Jim's eyes and, his lips trembling, the doctor confesses.

The old doctor is heart-broken. Madge, after all, was like an own child to him. Now she may be dead. Jim jumps to action. Hailing an auto, he makes inquiries and learns that his wife went in a certain direction—toward the lake. Jim follows with the doctor, crushed and broken. They race for the country. They arrive in time. Madge, her face turned toward the sunset wades, like one in a dream, out into deeper water. Jim calls her, rushes to her aid, and in the final scene matters are explained, with the old doctor sorely repentant.

JOKER.

THE MECHANICAL MAN (June 28).—Professor Shultz invents a mechanical life-sized doll. By pressing the right button on its back it will dance or sing. Now little Lillian, the spoilt daughter of Heinie Gotrocks, reads a newspaper account of Prof. Shultz's invention. She will not let up on dad until he promises to buy this mechanical doll for her nursery. The family go to inspect the toy, and Gotrocks promises Prof. Shultz $20,000 for his invention, to be paid when delivered. Gotrocks and his family depart. Prof. Shultz and his helper, all flustrated at the prospect of securing the $20,000, are carefully packing the big doll when the janitor, cleaning the toy shop, carelessly upsets the doll box and puts the manikin out of business. Shultz and his helper are enraged. Something must be done, or the twenty thousand is lost. They then notice that the offending janitor is exactly the same size as the injured manikin. They force him to imitate the doll and don its costume. He rebels to no purpose. They promise to relieve him as soon as the doll is repaired and carry him in the doll's place to the home of Gotrocks.

Little Lillian is more than delighted with her new possession. The janitor's imitations of the actions of the real doll get by. It was all very fine at first, but as time passed, it ceased to be a joke. He was made to perform day and night at little Lillian's parties, and his stomach grew more and more empty. His frantic appeals over the telephone to Prof. Shultz only brought him the advice to stay on just a little longer as repairs were being rushed on the real doll. Now, Gotrock's butler had caught the janitor off his guard several times and had a well founded suspicion that the supposed manikin was a fake. In fact, later events proved to him he was certainly right. The butler's endeavor to prove to Gotrocks got him "in bad," however, for Prof. Shultz arrived in the nick of time with the real mechanical doll, thereby allowing the mighty thankful janitor not only to escape his dreadful position but to get back on the butler for the indignities suffered at the latter's hands. When Gotrocks and his family are shown the mechanical doll is no fake, they put down the recent escapades of the janitor to the fact that the twenty thousand dollar doll must have slipped a cog.

A SKIN GAME (July 3).—Mons. Dauber, an eccentric artist, induces the wife of the proprietor of a ladies' physical culture school, to pose for a picture that he is painting. The husband hunts for his wife and finds her posing in scanty attire for the artist. He orders her to her own room, and warns the artist never to speak to his wife again. The artist gets an idea that he will paint only animal pictures in the future and keep out of trouble. He stops a man passing by and pays him to pose with a bearskin on. The artist leaves the room for a few minutes, and while he is gone, a real bear that has escaped from an organ grinder, climbs up the fire escape to the studio and scares the man away. The man with the bearskin on runs out on the street and is chased by the organ grinder, who thinks it is his bear.

The artist returns and starts to apologize for his absence, and finds that he now has a real bear in the room and rushes madly out into the hall followed by the bear. He sees the door to the gym and rushes in and hides in one of the dressing rooms, while the bear jumps in the tank and takes a swim. The wife tells her husband that she is going to take a swim and goes to the dressing room to put on her bathing suit, and finds the artist there. Her husband comes out and calls to her. She is afraid to answer on account of the artist being there. Finally the husband sees them and is about to shoot the artist, when the man with the bearskin on and the organ grinder fall through the skylight into the plunge. They all go to see what the noise is about and the artist gets a chance to explain how he came to be in the dressing room. Everything ends all right.

LAEMMLE.

THE GRAIL (Two Parts—June 30).—Dean Griswold, a banker and a loving father, has become involved in speculation and lost his private fortune. He is in the midst of a gripping market campaign when his daughter, Jean, and his young cashier, Williamson, reach the most beautiful part of their courtship. Jean, a girl of romantic disposition, has absorbed the spirit of romance from the books she has been reading. She worships the chivalry and gallantry of the ancient knights. She insists that her sweetheart, Williamson, shall make a modern knight of himself and seek his Grail, pledging herself to marry him when he has found it. Williamson accepts the charge and before the tapestries of "The Grail," she dubs him her knight. She gives him a knot of ribbon as her favor and he goes out into the world to conquer sin and relieve distress.

He learns of her father's embarassment and as his first sacrifice he gives the banker his entire personal fortune to help him out of his difficulties. But this money is absorbed by the hungry "market" and the father, in a moment of weakness, yields to a temptation and uses additional funds from the bank. He is ruined and about to destroy himself when the youthful knight discovers him, saves his life, assumes the blame for the shortage and disappears, asking only that the father explain his sacrifice to his daughter and protect his love. The bank breaks, and with the scandal made public, Griswold has not the heart to confess to his daughter. He allows her to believe that Williamson was, in reality, an absconder and she puts him out of her heart.

Eventually all the characters go West to renew their fortunes or forget their griefs. They meet at a dry water-hole in the desert. The father, almost crazed by thirst and unable to go further, is left by his daughter while she seeks aid, and during her absence the hero arrives. Embittered by what he considers the duplicity of the father, he gloats over his sufferings and refuses him a drink of water, until the old spirit of knighthood is brought back to him in an impressive manner. The denouement, the regeneration and the discovery of "The Grail" form a strong climax.

BILLIE'S BABY (July 4).—Frank Herrod is a detective with a conscience; Irene Morris, a stenographer for Oliver Morton, an unscrupulous mining promoter. She and her little sister, "Billie," live with Mrs. Benson, a motherly old lady whose only means of support is the board she receives from them. Billie has a puppy she calls "Baby." One day, furious at a proposition made to him by a client, Frank throws himself into a chair by the window. His frown changes to a smile as he looks across a narrow areaway and sees Irene working at her typewriter. She glances up and, seeing him smiling at her, is annoyed and pulls down the shade. Mrs. Benson, with a child-like faith in the advertised richness of Morton's mine, sends him her scanty savings to invest. He chuckles in satisfaction and, handing the latter to Irene, tells her to mail a receipt. Irene knows Mrs. Benson and, for her friend's sake, asks Morton if the mining property is all right. He declares that it is, but his manner increases her suspicions and he sees that she does not believe him. He becomes angry and discharges her. Frank, anxious to make her acquaintance, pretends to be interested in mining stock and goes to the office. She passes him as he enters. He secures some circulars and leaves. Morton learns that Frank is a detective and begins to get nervous.

Irene tells Mrs. Benson of her suspicions and sends her to Frank for advice. Morton sees her with Frank, and his fears are increased. Frank sees him watching from behind the curtain and, in order to catch him napping, says to her in a loud voice, "I will investigate the matter tomorrow." He then slips over to Morton's office after calling up the police station and, giving them a description of Morton. He catches Morton just as he is about to flee with his ill-gotten gains. Morton tries to bluff but caves in when he is confronted with the receipt. He gladly pays back the money and Frank allows him to go. He hurries away but is unexpectedly nabbed by the cop waiting for him outside. Frank goes to Mrs. Benson's to pay the money over to her and finds Irene there. He is introduced to her and is overjoyed. Billie has gone to the store on an errand and calls up the house. The 'phone bell rings, and Irene answers it. Frank's happiness is changed to consternation and despair as he hears Irene say: "All right, Billie dear, hurry home; baby wants you." He is about to leave, his dream shattered, when the little sister returns and is introduced as "Billie." Hope is born again but he is still mystified. Irene guesses the reason for his actions and in a spirit of mischief says: "Don't go till you have seen 'Baby.'" She goes out and return with a basket and to his astonishment, he gazes upon a cunning little puppy. In great relief and joy he grabs and hugs the puppy and Irene smiles at him as the scene fades.

VANITY (Two Parts—July 1).—James Gordon, a machinist with the Dubar Machinery Company, has the brain of an inventor and spends his spare time working upon an invention, which will make an improvement in the machinery manufactured by his employers. His wife has grown tired of their humble lot in life, and gives her husband no encouragement in his work upon the invention. Henry Dillon, a trusted employee in the office of the Durbar Machinery Company, secretly uses company funds to gamble with and makes false entries in his books to cover the shortage. Gordon, knowing Dillon's high standing with the company, tries to interest him in his invention. Dillon calls at Gordon's home one evening and falls in love with Gordon's wife, whom he persuades to run away with him. She takes with her their small child.

Dillon's shortages are discovered at the office, and a search is made for him. They go to Gordon's home and find him a broken man, he having just found his wife's note, telling of her departure. While there, the superintendent of the company becomes interested in Gordon's invention, and Gordon is finally given a position of trust with the company. As a representative of the company, he goes to the west, two years later, to visit a mining town regarding machinery of a certain company. It happens that the company is located in the same town in which Dillon and Gordon's wife now live. Dillon abuses the child, which is protected by Jack Western, who gambles with Dillon. Gordon catches sight of Dillon as he enters a gambling hall, and, stepping inside, watches proceedings. Dillon finally wins by cheating. Gordon witnesses the cheating and accuses him. Dillon recognizes Gordon and draws his revolver, but, before he can shoot, is wounded by Western, who then makes his escape on horseback. Gordon vainly endeavors to persuade the men that Western was justified in shooting Dillon. Revealing himself to Dillon, who is dying, he demands to know where his wife and child are, but before he can answer death overtakes him.

Meanwhile Mrs. Gordon has given the child to a family by the name of Bryant, who are leaving for California, knowing that they will be able to care for the child better than she. She then starts for the river to end it all. An old man gives her a lift in his wagon and they continue the journey. Western stops them, forces the old man to change clothes with him, and ties the old man to a tree. He then mounts the wagon with Mrs. Gordon, who recognizes him as the one who has been kind to her child. As they drive on, Western in his disguise, the posse catches up with them. Western learns of Mrs. Gordon's purpose in going to the river, and persuades her that suicide is cowardly and reminds her of the child she left behind. A change comes over her and she asks him to try to catch up with the Bryants, who are on their way to California. Western consents.

Back in town, Gordon learns that Dillon has been known under the name of Harry Dalton. He locates their shack, where he finds a note left by Mrs. Gordon, telling him where he can find the child. The old man has escaped from the tree where he was bound and returns to the town. Knowing the truth at last, Gordon starts in pursuit. Mrs. Gordon and Western catch up with the Bryants, as they are encamped at a stream and Mrs. Gordon clasps the child in her arms. Gordon arrives and a happy reunion follows.

THE CHEVAL MYSTERY (Three Parts—June 28).—A murder is discovered by two men on the Streeter grounds. John Waring, out for his morning ride, is summoned. He orders the men to carry the body to the house. Nana comes along in a dazed manner carrying a revolver which she drops. She breaks down and loses consciousness. Harrison, a guest of the Streeter family, sees her fall and is about to assist her when she stirs and in a dazed manner leaves the river bank. The men carry the body into the house. Waring, leaving the house, is confronted by Nana, who asks if her aunt, Mrs. Streeter, lives there. He calls Mrs. Streeter, who cannot understand the girl's statement that she, Mrs. Streeter, is her aunt. Nana gives her a note which Mrs. Streeter reads. Then with much motherly affection she takes Nana, her dead sister's child, into the house. Harrison, who has just heard about the murder, comes in, and sees Nana in Mrs. Streeter's arms. He is much embarrassed and leaves the room, after Nana is presented as Mrs. Streeter's niece. John Waring visits the scene of the murder and finds a woman's black hand bag, which he takes home. Upon entering the house he meets Harbison, who has also gone to the stream and found a gun, engraved "Nana." Nana has been very jealous of Waring. She is shown her room, and as she begins to unfasten her gown, she discovers the case of her handbag.

Gaston Cheval, a hypnotist, is near trying to work his spell again on Nana. Finally Nana decides she will ask her aunt and leaves to do so. Gaston feels that he is accomplishing what he wants to do lay hypnotism. Nana meets Waring outside her room, and sees him carrying her bag. Gaston again appears much more absorbed for he is influencing her. Waring returns to Nana after putting his bag in his room, and Nana shows much interest in him, he finally leaves, and Nana, who has been much smitten, pleads with him. Gaston gets his control, and she immediately turns into a raving fiend, dashes into the room of the murdered man, and hysterically laughs and cries until she hears a noise, which makes her leave and rush into her own room, where she drops exhausted upon the bed. That evening Harbison asks Nana to take a stroll. He tries to embrace her; they struggle. He shows her the revolver marked "Nana," threatening to convict her of murder. Nana rushes madly into the hall, and, fearing someone is coming, goes to Waring's door. Waring hears the noise and switches off the lights. He hides behind the curtains and sees Nana enter, take her handbag and leave. He comes out, turns on the lights and ponders. Nana enters her room, takes out her papers, and again Gaston Cheval works his spell, causing her to faint. He then forces her to rise and come to him. Harbison, wondering what to do, hears a noise, goes to the window and sees Cheval working a spell over Nana. Harbison leaves the window.

Cheval hears the noise, sees Harbison upstairs on the outer porch, and flees. Harbison jumps to the ground and watches for Nana, who comes to where the supposed Cheval is. Harbison goes to her and shakes her to her senses. Police have been stationed upon the premises, watching for the murderer. When Cheval appears, they call upon him to halt, and when he fails to do so they fire and hit him. Waring and Mr. and Mrs. Streeter come out of the house, having heard the shot. Harbison leads Nana to them, telling that when her niece knew that he knew she had committed the murder, she tried to escape. Nana pleads innocent, but Cheval is brought upon the scene by two detectives, and he also accuses her. She emphatically denies accusation, but when the detective reaches out, she rushes inside, where, in a hysterical fit, she tells her story; how when she was a little girl her mother died, and she was put under her Uncle Gaston Cheval's charge, who later made her his subject in a side show. There she met Maurice Manon. When she was of age, she was to come into her inheritance from her father's mine, but both would divide her fortune.

Nana overheard the plot and fled with her papers and a revolver for protection. They followed her and Maurice caught her. Cheval picked up Nana's revolver, and fired, missing her, but killing Maurice, Nana accused her uncle, but he put her under his influence, and also the revolver into her hand and sent her off. After Nana has finished her story, Gaston comes in and, knowing that the end is near, admits he committed the murder. Nana is exonerated. Later we find Waring waiting for Nana. They chat very merrily, planning for the future, as the picture fades out.

BISON.

JANE'S DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE (Two Parts—July 3).—Jane Howe Proctor, daughter of Alexander Proctor, a business man, is in love with Richard Benton, a lieutenant in the army. Her father objects to the match. Jane is affiliated with the Daughters of the American Revolution, and is imbued with a high spirit of patriotism. The father also is a patriot, but has decided upon a social career for Jane. The Howe family ancestors in earlier days had been associated with many of the important events of Revolutionary history; Proctor's family being associated with latter day events. Richard Benton, on the other hand, is a product of the melting pot of America, and has to his credit, manhood, brains and loyalty. He comes of poor but honest parents of the Middle Western type. The story opens with Richard at the Proctor home trying to gain the father's consent to his marriage to Jane. This the father refuses. Young Benton returns to his post at the Presidio, San Francisco. Later, Lieutenant Benton receives orders from the War Department informing him that there is a possibility of his transference to the Philippines.

Benton telegraphs Jane, asking her to consent to an immediate marriage. Jane asks her father, who again opposes. The girl, pointing to portraits on the wall, reads her father a lecture on the patriotism of the originals. (This in the forms of dissolves, each embracing episodes of the Revolutionary period. Civil war and Spanish-American war periods.) Mr. Proctor refuses to surrender. Jane decides to take the initiative, informing her father that it is her intention then and there to sign her own Declaration of Independence. She retires to her room and begins a letter to the Lieutenant in which she tells him of her decision, and setting a date for their next meeting. Jane's young nephew, in company of other youngsters, is discussing the close approach of Independence Day, July 4th. To decide a point in their discussion, the nephew seeks his Aunt Jane, thus interrupting her. Child-like, he asks Jane to whom she is writing and, upon being informed, requests permission to write a letter himself to Lieutenant. Jane acquiesces and the boy begins his letter.

Mr. Proctor, below stairs, wishing to resume further discussion with Jane, sends for her. Jane leaves her bedroom and joins her father in the library. The nephew concludes his letter, and placing it in the envelope addressed by Jane, seals it and runs down stairs, leaving Jane's letter in her room. The nephew's entrance terminates the discussion. The boy shows the envelope ready for mailing and Jane and he go out to post it. Mr. Proctor wanders upstairs, discovers Jane's letter open on the desk and pockets it. Jane prepares for her trip to San Francisco. A friend of Mr. Proctor speaks somewhat disparagingly of the American army. Proctor resents his friend's attitude, and finds himself giving vent to some latent patriotism of an original character. He leaves in high dudgeon.

On his return home he finds that Jane has departed for 'Frisco. He remembers her letter to the Lieutenant, re-reads it, and decides to follow her, hoping he may be able to induce the Lieutenant to resign from the service by offering him a partnership in business. In the interim, Lieutenant Benton is agitated over the reception of a letter, which, while the envelope is in the handwriting of Jane, reads as follows:

Dere Lutenant Benton:

i have 9 packs of fire-crackers and 7 roman candles but need some pin wheels and caps for my toy pistols, hoping you are well. WILLIE STRAFFORD.

In a few days he receives Jane's telegram, informing him of the date of her arrival.

At the Presido, we find Jane and Lieutenant Benton discussing plans for their wedding. They are surprised by the arrival of Jane's father. In an interview with the Lieutenant, Mr. Proctor offers him a business partnership. Benton thanks him, but refuses to abandon the service. In this he is backed up by Jane. Defeated at every angle, Mr. Proctor finally surrenders, and is an active participant in the military wedding which follows.

THE RIDDLE OF THE SILK STOCKINGS (June 14).—King Cole, formerly a clerk in the dry goods department, later a soda fountain expert and now floor walker in the women's notion department, wants to take a vacation, because pretty Jane Clark, his sweetheart, now working in his department, has decided that she needs a rest. King and Jane go to the former's old home, where to their horror they find everything locked up tight. Jane flies into a rage and berates poor King for not notifying his parents of their visit and weeps with anger.

Meanwhile, Jefferson Spangler, a genial traveling salesman, has allowed himself to be unloaded bag and baggage at Elmyraville, and, being absorbed in a magazine, he does not discover his mistake until the train is gone. Jefferson Spangler is beside himself with rage and sits down to mop his brow and think. Jane appears on the scene. Then King hurries in just in time to catch her limp body as the agent nonchalantly tells them the next train will arrive—maybe. Spangler laughs and King turns upon him in rage which changes to a look of wonder and delight for in Spangler he recognizes an old schoolmate and pal. The two shake hands and leave poor Jane all by herself. In a rage she steps between them and sternly asks King what he intends doing. King then introduces her to Spangler and the latter suggests that they put up at the village tavern and try and get some fun out of the town till the next day. Accordingly, the three set out for the tavern and they are duly installed. Jane in a narrow, ugly looking room on the second floor and the two men in a room on the floor below. Down below Spangler has sent for his trunks and taken one of the large bedrooms to make a display of his goods, for he decides he might as well make a few sales as do nothing. King offers to help him. They pull the shades down, leaving about four inches open at the bottom. Spangler's trunks arrive and they lock the door. Spangler opens the trunks, revealing two or three dozen leg forms, several pairs of fancy pumps and a wide assortment of hosiery, most of which is loud and in wild colors.

Meanwhile, a couple of kids outside look into the window and are much amused at what they see, namely, a lot of legs. Attracted by the children's curiosity, Obadiah Speckles peers into the window and judges from what he sees of the legs and silk hose and actions of the two men smoothing out the wrinkles that there is something wild going on in the room. He is shocked completely and sends the boys for the crowd at the general store. The Deacon declares that such disgraceful proceedings have gone far enough and commands the constable to do his duty. Inside, Spangler and King hear the knock and the sounds of talking and wonder what it means. Spangler opens the door and is pushed aside by the angry Deacon, who steps in and orders them to leave town at once. Jane also pushes her way in and recoils in amazement at the forms sticking up out of the trunk. She is about to jump onto King, who holds the forms in his hand, when she understands and bursts into laughter. The serious assemblage are startled and then she explains. The Deacon and constable are stunned and know not what to say or do. Spangler takes advantage of their helplessness and brings forth his famous hosiery and they are forced to buy, while King and Jane look on in delight. After the last one has bartered with Spangler and gone, the genial traveling salesman holds up a roll of bills and says: "We'll hire a rig and be driven to the nearest railroad."

THE MARBLE HEART (Four Parts—July 2).—Raphael, a modern sculptor, dreams that in the days of Phydias, about five hundred years before Christ, he lived as Phydias, the sculptor, and was the friend of Diogenes and that he made some beautiful statues on commission for Georgias, the richest man in Asia. His female statues come to life and, disdaining his love, smile upon the wealthy man.

Raphael awakens and in real life his of poor love swept aside by great wealth and how misery, ruin and death follows in the train of Marco, a beautiful and merciless coquette, termed "the marble heart" on account of her cold nature.

FIFTY YEARS BEHIND (July 3).—Joshua Winters ekes out a precarious living in an antique shop by fixing watches and clocks. He, his mother and their adopted daughter live happily in the shop. It is tacitly understood that he and the girl are to be married some day and there is no room in the girl's mind for any one but Joshua. One day a rich young society girl pays a visit to the shop to have her watch fixed. She makes a powerful impression on the simple minded Joshua and, in a spirit of fun, she invites him to come to her coming out ball the same night. The society woman seems to throw a spell over Joshua.

There is great preparation getting him ready for the ball; his father's wedding suit is dug up for him and it is the loving hands of the adopted one which fixes it up for him. He takes out a peculiar pin intending to take and give it to the heiress. He arrives at the house and is shown into an ante-room, where he catches a glimpse of the heiress and her lover in the next room, making love. He realizes his folly and silently slips out, going back to his humble home. He comes in and finds the adopted girl asleep in a chair fondling one of his coats. He is overcome with love for the one that is so faithful to him and, waking her, takes her in his arms.

THE CURSE OF WORK (Two Parts—July 4).—Bill was a bootblack, but that didn't stop him from having social aspirations. He rescued an heiress from a burglar at no particular risk to himself, but it looked big and Bill got away with it nicely, even meeting father and getting himself invited to call. Back at the shinorium, however, Bill's boss was getting peeved because Bill was so late and when Bill did get back, the boss talked harshly to him. Meantime father and the heiress needed a shine. Bill's stand was the one out of a thousand in a great city they shouldn't have picked out. But they did.

Bill saw them first, however, and put on whiskers and a plug hat for disguise. This didn't help as the boss knew him and didn't care whether it hurt Bill's feelings to be seen shining shoes or not. He ran into a barber shop next door, but this didn't help him, as there were too many razors lying about and too many ill-tempered parties who didn't like Bill to wield them. Bill is slammed in the stomach and knocked clean through a brick wall. Papa and the heiress got lost in the shuffle. The boss pulls out a big knife but, through unforseen developments, attacks himself from the rear.

RELIANCE.

THE CHOIR BOYS (June 21).—Wilbur and Clinton, choir boys in an Episcopal church, have a falling out on account of Gladys, a pretty little girl, who has captured the youthful fancy of each. At a church picnic, however, Wilbur saves Clinton from drowning, and the rivals become as Damon and Pythias. Years later, Wilbur is ordained a minister, while Clinton has drifted into idleness and vice. Unknown to one another, the boyhood chums are living in the same city. Wilbur's long courtship of Gladys has ended in a happy marriage. Clinton, desperate from hunger and poverty, is drawn into a plot to rob a certain house. Not until the crooks are throttling Wilbur does Clinton discover that they have attacked the home of his old friend. He then flings himself upon the burglars and in a fierce struggle is fatally wounded. Clinton dies in Wilbur's arms, glad to sacrifice himself for the friend who, in boyhood, risked his own life for him.

A BAD MAN AND OTHERS (Two Parts—June 26).—The "bad man," Mesquite Mike, with Sawed-off Sam and Pink-eye Pete, crosses the Rio trail into New Mexico, and terrorizes a small town. Mesquite Mike and his pals shoot and wound George Hewitt, a young rancher, who has ridden in to get the doctor for his wife, Lucy. Lucy, before her marriage, had been the much sought after beauty of the county. Mesquite Mike was desperately in love with her then. Now, pursued by Sheriff Claude Britton, Lucy's uncle, and a posse, the outlaw makes for the Hewitt ranch. There he finds Dorothy, the eight-year-old daughter of George and Lucy, who leads him to where her mother lies ill. The bandits believe that she has Mexican fever. They leave, terror-stricken, imploring Mesquite to go with them. He lingers, however, for he believes that if he can get the sick woman to the mission, the monks may be able to save her life. Fastening an Indian drag to his horse, he places Lucy upon it. Then, setting the child upon the horse's back, he leads the way across the desert. On the second day, the water gives out and the horse drops dead. Mesquite hitches himself to the drag, and at night, exhausted, reaches the mission. There it is discovered that Lucy is victim of a disease closely resembling Mexican fever, but not nearly so contagious nor so dangerous. Soon she is on the road to recovery. Hewitt, informed by a Spanish pedlar, who has seen the "bad man" at the mission, arrives with the doctor and the sheriff. They rush in to seize and lynch the outlaw. But Hewitt is called aside by Lucy, who whispers to him how his enemy had saved her life. Hewitt tells the sheriff that he has mistaken the man who shot him, that Mesquite Mike is innocent.

THE SILENT WITNESS (June 23).—Carl Rogers has risen from the position of bookkeeper to that of a cashier in the small and only bank of Santa Paula. The president of the bank, John Blackwood, does not look with favor upon the affection which is shown by Rogers for his daughter Lolita. His prospects of marrying Lolita being small, encourages him to work harder than ever on his invention, an electrical device for melting steel.

Rogers advertises his invention in the papers, and two crooks, Handsome Jack and Blue Beard, lay a scheme to get his invention and make use of it in their line of occupation. Rogers sees them in a room in the city set for the appearance of an office, and after receiving a receipt for his model, leaves it with them for supposed consideration. Returning to Santa Paula, Rogers goes on about his work at the bank. Handsome Jack and Blue Beard then round up two of their gang and plan a big robbery in Santa Paula. In the meantime, mostly at night, they look the bank over, planning entrances and exits. On the day planned for the robbery, Lolita visits her father and Rogers at the bank, after taking a few camera pictures of her friends. She leaves the camera on a desk near the safe and forgets it when she leaves. Rogers and Blackwood close the safe and bank after she departs, and, not noticing the camera, leave for the night. Near midnight Ryan and Stevens enter the bank from a rear entrance, and after covering the windows to keep out the flashes, set to work on the safe with Rogers' invention. The wires are connected and Ryan tests the device on the safe's door. The flashes are bright and the heat intense, causing Stevens to move back. His hand accidentally pushes the shutter release on the camera and exposes the plate as a tremendous flash comes from the safe. The touching of the release and the flash from the electrical device serve to produce a flash light picture, unknown to the crooks.

The safe is easily opened with Rogers' device and the contents extracted. The crooks make their escape up an alley leading from the hotel. Unknown to them, the melting iron is dropped in their flight. The following morning they go to work as usual at the store where they contrived to get employment in order to stave off suspicion. Rogers and Blackwood arrive at the bank the next day, and are dumbfounded at the sight of the melted safe and the missing money. The sheriff is notified, and on his way to the scene, comes through the alley and finds the mysterious looking invention of Rogers'. At the bank he looks the safe over and is sure that the iron he found has caused it. Rogers is taken back at the sight of his invention and tells of its use. Blackwood thinks the story weak and jumps at conclusions and orders Rogers arrested for the robbery. The sheriff is told of the invention being Rogers' and of Rogers' want of money to marry Lolita. Lolita comes to the bank to get the forgotten camera, and is amazed and heartbroken at the happenings told to her by her father. She goes home with the camera and attempts to ease her mind by developing the films. She finds the picture of Ryan at work on the safe. Rushing to her father, she shows him the needed evidence to free her lover. Together they race to the sheriff's office. Rogers is released, and the sheriff grabs the crooks at the store and locates the money in their room. What can Blackwood do? The papers in the city get hold of the story and some real promoters read it and buy Rogers' invention. So it is up to the stern old banker to turn his treasure, Lolita, over to Rogers.

THE SHOW DOWN (June 29).—Bennie is released from the reform school as a reward for good conduct, and after promising his friend, the chaplain, to live straight, goes to a metropolis in search of work. At the rooming house where Bennie puts up, he meets Annie Evans, a shop girl. Billings, a libertine drummer, employed by the same department where Annie works, is attracted by her beauty and tries to force his attentions upon her. When she repeatedly resists him, he causes her discharge from the store, believing that lack of funds will compel her to yield to him. Threatened with ejection from the house because she is behind in her rent, Annie unwillingly accepts money from Billings, who advances it to give him a hold upon her.

The reformed Bennie, unsuccessful in his search for work, interprets Annie's relations to Billings in the worst light. Deeming it no crime to take money from such a woman as he believes Annie to be, he steals the money Billings gave her. Annie has decided to return the money to Billings, but when she discovers that it has been stolen, she thinks she is irrevocably in his power and accompanies him to a private room in a cafe. Meanwhile Bennie has secured work, and tortured by the thought that he has broken his promise to the chaplain, he goes to repay Annie. A note in her room reveals to him that Annie is an innocent victim of Billings' plotting. He reaches the cafe barely in time to save Annie from the "Bird of Prey."

BY WHOSE HANDS (Two Parts—June 28).—Chester Rowe has committed robbery and murder. He seeks safety in flight to the mountains, where he meets and falls in love with Lottie Toby. Lottie returns his love, in a measure, and Oliver, a cripple, becomes insanely jealous. He sets out with his trusty gun, bent on revenge. Meanwhile Lottie's father receives word that $1,000 awaits him at the postoffice. He sets out to claim the money. The unscrupulous Rowe, learning of Mr. Toby's mission, plans to rob him of the money.

Oliver, the cripple, comes upon Rowe as he is stealing upon Mr. Toby. The elder man, at the same time, turns and his eyes fall on Rowe about to attack him. Both Toby and Oliver shoot, simultaneously, and Rowe falls dead in his tracks. Oliver thinks he has killed Rowe. He hides the body in an out of the way ruin. Jack, who is Toby's helper, finds Toby unconscious from a bullet wound. The sheriff arrives and the luckless Jack is accused of attacking his employer. Jack and Toby are taken to Toby's house. Toby's hat is left behind, and Oliver discovers it. He takes the headpiece to the Toby home, where Mrs. Toby tells him of the shooting. Oliver makes to her a confession that it was he who killed Rowe. It is discovered that Jack is innocent. Then the surprising fact is found out that Toby, not Oliver, killed Rowe. Toby stands trial for his act, and is acquitted on the ground of self-defense. Simultaneous with the mountain man's acquittal it is discovered that Rowe, now dead, was himself a robber and a murderer.

A GOOD BUSINESS DEAL (June 30).—Bobby Shermann is a likeable young chap—a broker—possessed of excellent business ability, but neglectful of his business and therefore always short of funds. Bobby's club fellows are young men of means, anxious to help Bobby in money matters, but unable to do so because of his extreme sensitiveness. Bobby is head over heels in love with Susan Garrick, a pretty young client of his, who has the highest social standing but not much money and Bobby's heavy indebtedness naturally prevents their marriage.

In the depths of despair, Bobby is about to do himself bodily harm, when Susan conceives the brilliant idea of incorporating him. She and their mutual friends, Jerry Dean and John Birch, set about making Bobby a legal corporation, paying his debts and becoming absolute masters of his destinies, including the privilege of dictating whom he shall marry. The directors decide he shall marry an heiress, despite the strenuous objections raised by Susan. Jerry Dean, president of the corporation, introduces him to wealthy Miss Golden. But Bobby is game. Resignedly he begins making love, when Susan has another brilliant scheme. She rushes to a wealthy Wall street friend, induces him to buy for her the controlling interest in Bobby Shermann, Inc. She at once assumes the presidency. Desiring to be a close corporation, she directs Bobby to marry the president—herself. He obeys with alacrity.

A WOMAN SCORNED (July 2).—Winnie Winters is jealous of the attentions that Neil, her husband, appears to be paying to Mrs. Fiske, a blonde and dashing young widow. She reprimands Neil and he, knowing the absurdity of her charges, resents them. Mrs. Fiske overhears the couple quarreling about her. Blake, a thoroughly bad egg, out of work and desperate at his inability to provide for a small baby, enters Mrs. Fiske's home to rob her. At a revolver's point, she catches him and enlists his and as the price of his liberty, in a plot against Neil and his wife. Mrs. Fiske being madly infatuated with Neil.

Mrs. Fiske writes to Neil that she overheard the quarrel. She has decided to leave, she writes. Will Mr. Winters come to her house to bid her good-bye. Mr. Winters comes. Impetuously Mrs. Fiske throws throws herself on him and kisses him. Blake, with a camera, makes a surreptitious snap shot. That is the plot. Mrs. Fiske now has tangible evidence which she plans to show to Neil's wife. Blake goes home to find that Mrs. Winters has visited his house and is taking his baby to a place where it can be given proper care. He is profuse in his protestations of gratitude. Next day Blake finds work as a gardener. He looks up and sees Mrs. Fiske torturing Mrs. Winters with the photograph. In his heart arises a great obligation to Mrs. Winters for the care she has given his child. He goes to her and makes a clean breast of the plot and his part in it. Winnie believes him and turns to her husband, whom she had just renounced, to reclaim his love. In chagrin and shame the designing widow slinks away.

MR. WALLACK'S WALLET (July 4).—Mr. Wallack, an avaricious person, loses his wallet containing much money and valuable papers. His wife insists that he offer a reward for the return of it. Bobo, a hobo, finds the wallet, and, afraid to examine its contents in the open, he hides in a dog kennel. The kennel is the residence of Mr. Wallack's great Dane, and at about this time Mr. Wallack decides to tie his dog up for the night. Bobo is forced to remain in his hiding place. In the morning Genevieve, a lady hobo, dismounts from a freight train. She sees a man tacking up the reward signs in reference to Mr. Wallack's Wallet. To avoid a passing policeman, Genevieve ducks down an alley just in time to see Bobo come from the dog kennel, Mr. Wallack having taken his dog for a morning stroll.

Genevieve finds an empty wallet in the kennel and, comparing the name on it with that mentioned in the reward signs, she decides that she is on the trail of the thief. She follows Bobo. The enterprising policeman has followed Genevieve as a suspicious character. Genevieve traces Bobo to Mr. Wallack's wood shed. She succeeds in recovering the money and locking Bobo in an empty trunk. The policeman catches Genevieve with the wallet and the money and immediately takes her off to jail, where Genevieve explains to the captain that she has locked the real thief in the trunk. The captain takes Genevieve back to catch Bobo in the trunk. It happens that Mr. Wallack and his gardener have already found Bobo in his hiding place and they have started for the police station. It looks bad for Genevieve when she and the officer arrive at the woodshed and find no trunk. Things are straightened out when they go back to the station, where they find Mr. Wallack and the police opening the trunk. Genevieve gets the reward.

THE ASH CAN; OR LITTLE DICK'S FIRST ADVENTURE (June 22).—The famous kid detective, Dick, with the co-operation of his stenographer, succeeds in running down a desperate character. But the little stenographer falls a victim to the wiles of the villain's wicked accomplices, and is placed by them in vile duress in an alley ash barrel, where she falls asleep. Comes the ash man and loads the barrel, with other trash, into his wagon and drives off. When the bad boy accomplices discoves that the ashmen has taken the barrel away to be dumped into the ocean, their terror knows no bounds. With Detective Dick, they pursue the wagon in hot haste, arriving at the ocean just as the ashman throws the barrel into the ocean. The little stenographer's hat floats to the surface, convincing the frightened kids that she is drowned. They inform the ashman what an awful tragedy has happened, and he dives to find the body. But the cute mistress of the typewriter, awakened by a sudden jolt of the wagon, has opportunely escaped from the barrel sometime before. When she appears to the boys in the flesh they believe she is a ghost and are frightened nearly to death.

THE MOTOR BOAT BANDITS (June 25).—Jane Pepper, reporter on the Record, goes to the beach for a week's rest. The adjoining cottage is occupied by two men and a woman, who try to be friendly with Jane and seem quite nice people. One afternoon Jane meets a young man on the pier, Bob Warren, and they engage in conversation. Jane recognizes him as a young detective, shows him her reporter's badge, and he confesses who he is. He tells her he has been down here for the past two weeks trying to locate some motorboat bandits, who have been looting a number of fine summer homes, making their escape each time in a fast motorboat. Just then two young men pass in bathing suits. Bob attracts Jane's attention to them and tells her he suspects them. She says, "Why, they live next door to my cottage." Bob suggests they walk to her home and see if they can investigate anything. They arrive at Jane's cottage, and notice the woman next door sitting on her porch. Bob arranges to meet Jane at the dance hall that evening, but in the meantime he will investigate things next door. Bob goes to the crook's cottage on the pretext of looking for a room.

Bob talks with the crook's wife and she takes him into the house to show him rooms. He then tries to force the woman to tell him about her men folks. While talking the two bathers enter. A fight ensues, in which Bob is overpowered, bound and gagged and is hid in a closet. That evening Jane goes to the dance hall but Bob does not show up, and she returns to her cottage. The two men next door are sitting on their porch. Jane passes in her house as though to retire, but watches from her window. About 12.30 she sees the two men next door leave with an extra man who is heavily coated. They leave the house stealthily and go to a nearby wharf and leave in a launch. She hurries over to the next house, and, at the point of a gun, compels the woman to tell who the extra man is and where the launch is going. She then rushes out, finds an officer and some life-saving men and they pursue the bandits in a faster motorboat. The crooks plan to drop the detective overboard near the breakers. Suddenly one of them notices they are followed. Jane's boat whistles for them to stop but they only answer by firing their guns and proceed faster. Jane's launch comes alongside and the officers engage in a hand-to-hand fight with the crooks and overpower them. Some of them jump overboard but are caught and bound. While the crooks are taken back under guard, Jane and Bob sit in the rear of the boat and talk over future plans.

CHILDREN OF THE SEA (Two Parts—June 27).—Years before Claudia was a fisherman's daughter longing for the world beyond the sea. She found it through the man who came to the island and took her away. Out in the world she became a famous actress, posing for Oliver Rand, the equally famous artist. To the artist she symbolized the fishermaid, and unknown to her he painted her in that character. These memories of her past repulsed her, and she destroyed the painting and left the artist for a man of wealth.

The artist, Rand, on his physician's advice, left the city and came to the island where Claudia formerly lived. Here he met Letty, Claudia's daughter, now living with her grandfather, old Max. Max was determined Letty should not go the way of her mother. Feeling it was in her blood, the old man tried to force the young fisherman, Landers, on her attention,

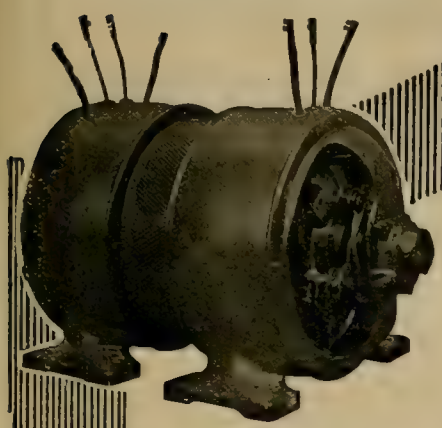
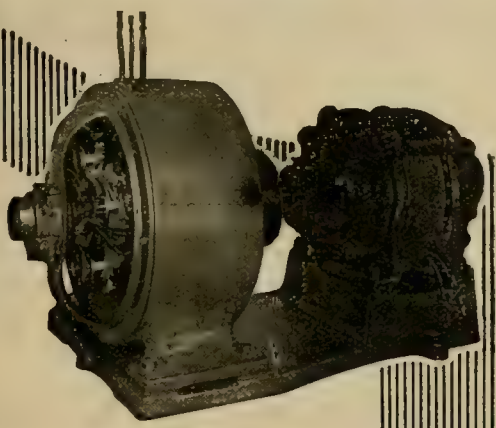
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

but now Rand came and Letty sought him. Rand, learning the girl's origin, tried to dissuade her. She, however, has been saving money, which she earned secretly at the fish market by selling clams.

She left a note behind to the artist explaining that she had gone to his actress friend, whom she had discovered. It is her own mother, Claudia. The artist is resolved to save her the pain of such a meeting and follows. Neither mother nor daughter know each other. The artist arrived, however, in time to take her back to her people. They suspected him, and when he came before to smooth the way, the old fisherman and Letty's young lover cornered him on the cliffs at the end of the beach. Their fancied vengeance was almost complete, when Letty arrived on the scene.

THE WOMAN FROM WARREN'S (Two Parts—June 20).—A woman arrives at a small country resort hotel and registers as Wynona Ware, Warren's, New Jersey. Hanson Landing, a "pay guest" from the city, is horrified on reading the name. He recalls certain events of several years before, which he would not for the world have come to the ears of Alice Thompson, the hotel keeper's daughter. Wynona and Alice become great friends. Landing is alarmed and writes the older woman a note, warning her not to interfere with his plans with Alice. Thompson, the hotel keeper, goes for a walk with the woman from Warren's and his daughter. On a railroad crossing, he gets his foot caught between a plank and the rail. Alice faints. But Wynona tears up the plank with her bare hands, and Thompson is released just in time to let the train go thundering past. Thompson now is convinced that he loves Wynona Ware. Meanwhile, Landing has received a letter from one of his boon companions in the city, saying that everything is in readiness for his mock marriage with the little country girl. By a clever subterfuge, Wynona contrives to elope with Landing in Alice's place. On the lonely road she faces him with a revolver. He promises to leave the region forever, and drives on alone. Wynona returns to the inn. She consents to marry Thompson—"especially," she tells him, "in order that she may be a mother to his innocent little girl."

THE OLD HIGH CHAIR (Two Parts—July 4).—In the attic of her home, an old lady comes upon the high chair of her children. The incidents of her life pass in visions before her. She recalls her home-coming as a bride, the happy years with her husband and growing children. The first great sorrow, the death of her only daughter, is lived over again. Then she sees her favorite son, Jack, leaving home to satisfy his longing for adventure. The call to arms takes husband and elder boy from her—the former never to return. Sam marries Sylvia Lee and goes away to build up a fortune in the city. Recently, she has visited him and his beautiful young wife. Sam has urged her to come and live with them, but the old lady has decided that their household, after all, never can be home to her. So she finds herself back now in her own cottage, peopled with precious memories. As she sits alone, brooding over the past, she hears steps on the stairs. A tall figure crosses the dusky attic room in two strides, and clasps the old lady in his arms. It is Jack, the adventurer, home from sea. Then, over the old high chair, mother and son exchange laughter, tears and kisses.

THE SEA GHOST (Two Parts—June 30).—The crew of the tramp brig, Annabelle, fish up from the sea a sealed bottle and take it to their captain, John Gordon. The bottle contains a letter from Frederick Keyes, who has been shipwrecked with his daughter, Grace, on a small circular island. Keyes offers to divide a vast fortune in gold, found in a cave on the island with his rescuer, whoever he may be. Gordon shows the letter to First Mate Merrill, who is a cold-blooded schemer. Merrill, who cares nothing about rescuing the castaways, but only for the gold, thinks if he were in charge of the ship the gold would be his and immediately thinks up a plan to rid himself of John. He bribes the crew to mutiny and John is put in a sealed cask and the Annabelle is wrecked. The crew is rescued by a freighter after a terrible storm and fitting up another boat, Merrill and his crew return in search of the island.

In the meantime the cask containing John is washed upon the shore of the island on which Keyes and Grace are stranded and John is saved from a terrible death. After a few days the castaways see a ship under full sail making for their island. They are jubilant until John, through the glasses, discovers that the commander of the ship is Merrill. He tells Keyes and Grace that if Merrill finds him it will mean death to them all and decides to conceal himself for the time being and wait for an opportunity. Merrill and his crew land and Merrill instructs his men to take the chest of gold and Grace to the boat, saying that the old man will stay on the island. That night the ship prepares to sail and John forms a desperate plan to board it secretly. He and Keyes take an old tree trunk, and with rough hewn oars, paddle out to the boat, catch hold of the anchor and chains and, standing on the log, pull themselves up. As John appears on deck he presents a weird sight, covered with seaweed and when Merrill sees him he thinks he is John's ghost and in an agony of fear jumps overboard. John proceeds to the ship's bridge. The steersman is alone and gives a wild shriek as he sees John. He runs to the men's quarters screaming "Captain Gordon has come back." John follows him and, looking sternly at the men says he will shoot the first one who does not give his word to obey him. The men see that John means what he says and, shaken and awed, they are completely cowed. John assumes command of the ship and they sail away, homeward bound.

BEAUTY.

THE MADONNA (June 29).—The cruelty and general worthlessness of John Middleton causes the death of his wife at the time their baby is born. On her death-bed, Edna leaves the babe in the care of her sister Gertie, warning Gertie in her dying breath to keep the child from its father. An artist in search of models for his picture, the madonna and child, engages Gertie with the infant. The picture is painted and placed on exhibition, where Bob Elmer, a dissolute young man, comes upon it. The picture fascinates him and the purity it symbolizes leads the young man to regeneration. In his breast is awakened a new sense of life, and he seeks out the girl and the babe who posed for the painting.

He comes upon Gertie and the child, happy in their poverty, and falls in love with the "substitute mother," as Gertie styles herself. Meanwhile John Middleton, who had fled before his wife's death, returns. He showers unwelcome attentions on Gertie, then takes away the baby, declaring he will not return the infant until Gertie consents to marry him. Then Bob comes on the scene, finding Gertie, his sweetheart, in tears. In grim determination he sets out to recover the child. When he discovers that Middleton, the father, is a man he knows as a thief, Bob has no difficulty in persuading him (Middleton) to give over the child. As the handsome Bob places the infant in Gertie's happy arms he declares his love and vows to love and protect Gertie and the baby.

THE FLOATING DEATH (Two Parts—June 25).—Eben Graham, owner of the Scotia Steamship lines, has his go-between, Austin, bribe Lathrop, the chief inspector of shipping, not to condemn the boat "Estelle," as it would mean a loss of a great deal of money to Graham. Lathrop accepts the bribe and shortly afterwards the "Estelle" makes an excursion trip loaded with women and children, among whom are Lathrop's wife and baby. The ship catches fire and burns at sea and all the passengers are lost. When Lathrop hears of the disaster, he shoots himself, having first written to Bruce Graham, the district attorney, and brother of Eben, telling him that, although he is guilty, the real criminal is Eben Graham, who bribed him. Bruce goes to his brother and accuses him of being responsible for the accident, and that he is going to see that he pays the penalty. Graham is much alarmed, and, believing Bruce to be secretly in love with his wife, Vivian, he tells Bruce that the day he indicts him he will file suit for divorce and name Bruce as co-respondent.

The next day Eben Graham sees in the paper that the government is after the "man higher up" and that a wealthy ship owner is to be indicted in the "Estelle" matter. Graham knows the wealthy ship owner to mean himself, and that night he sails on one of his freighters, "The Andres," to escape punishment. "The Andres" is run into by a derelict loaded with dynamite and both ships are entirely destroyed.

DOMINO.

HEARTS AND SWORDS (Two Parts—June 24).—Donna Gonzales has a daughter, Rosa, and a son, Maxim. Maxim is fighting in the Rebel cause, his mother being the widow of a Rebel general. He is pursued while taking important dispatches to the Rebel general, takes refuge in his home, hides himself in a chimney and eludes the Federals. Maxim is badly wounded, and his sister, Rosa, volunteers to carry the dispatches. She departs dressed in her brother's clothes and is captured. Her horse, which has been slightly wounded in the leg gallops back home. The dispatches are found on her and she is condemned to be shot. Lieut. Salza, son of the Federal general, recognizes in Rosa his former sweetheart, takes the place of the girl and she escapes. He is about to be shot, when Donna Gonzales, who has ridden rapidly to the Federal camp and who has obtained the general's mercy, arrives on the scene and prevents the execution. Salza leaves the camp disguised as a girl and later they meet and exchange a pledge of love.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE REWARD (Four Parts—New York Motion Picture Co.) June 24.—Jane Wallace, nicknamed the "Iceberg," discovers that a "straight" life is uneventful. Two girls in the chorus, Trixie and Pinkie, tell Dan Conby, an idler and cynic, about her. He laughs and gets an introduction, but fails to lead her astray. "What reward is there?" he demands, and she answers, "The respect of others!" To show how deep this goes he introduces her to his friends who scorn her because of her shabby clothes. That night she loses her job for being late, though Trixie and Pinkie escapes unscathed as their friends back the show.

Dan has just written Jane a letter asking her to marry him when she herself appears, saying she is disgusted with being good. He promptly shows her what the life leads to by taking her round the town, but she persists in her determination to fall from grace. He gives her the key to his apartment telling her to wait there for him. As she is unlocking the door a doctor comes from another apartment and asks her help. She assists at bringing a baby into the world and this event so affects her and Dan, when she sees him later, that they resolve to tread the straight and narrow path together.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 26—"The Gray Friar"—Two Parts—Released Week of June 21).—Elaine, informed by a note from her fiance, Craig Kennedy, that he is still alive and to be figured with, decides to give a masquerade party to celebrate her joy. To this party Del Mar, foreign spy, who professes to be in the United States Government service, is invited. He manages to pass in some of his accomplices, and together they try to locate Kennedy's lost torpedo. There is a little Gray Friar in the party, however, and he keeps them constantly in sight, and overpowers Del Mar after the secret agent forces open a safe in Elaine's bedroom. When Del Mar is discovered, bound, before the opened safe, he explains his position by claiming to have been overpowered by some secret agents when he tried to apprehend them in their investigation. He then persuades Elaine to employ a young woman, an accomplice of his, as maid, saying that he fears the intrigues of spies in the household. Elaine, struck with the honesty of the girl's appearance, hires her. The new maid discovers the lost torpedo in the garret where Elaine's dog brought it a few days before. Hearing Elaine approach, she hurriedly packs it in her trunk, and leaves the room. Elaine, not able to close her trunk, removes the tray containing the torpedo, and substitutes for it a tray from another trunk. The climax of this story comes in the scene immediately following, when a freight train, an automobile, and four men at cross purposes figure in the destiny of the coveted trunk. One of the men eventually gets it—only to find the missing torpedo still missing.

THE HEART THAT KNEW (Three Parts—Released Week of June 21).—Looked upon by her employer as his own child, Lucia Dorval, an orphan, is a trusted employee of Edward Alvino, a successful banker. Louisa Pasca, the secretary to the capitalist, secretly resents the confidence placed in the girl, who is deeply in love with Thomas Cardone, a violinist. Too close application to business saps the banker's strength, and he dies after a short illness. His will, cutting off his nephew, Joseph, leaves all to Lucia. This angers Joseph; and Pasca, who had also counted on being remembered in the will, enters a pact with the nephew by which he will receive his share if Joseph gets the estate. The sudden wealth changes the attitude of Thomas toward Lucia and he goes away. She writes her will, which Pasca finds, leaving her fortune to her lover in the event of her death, and, with the former secretary, who offers his services, goes in search of Cardone.

The violinist is found in his native city, and the three leave on a pleasure trip. Pasca, having decided on drastic measures in his efforts to do away with the girl, suggests that they visit Satan's Ravine. He removes the danger sign, warning the people that the way over the ravine is in poor repair. The girl later walks out on the structure and is hurled down the cliff. Thomas and Pasca run for help, but the girl is given up for dead. She is rescued by natives, however, and toils for them like a slave. Meanwhile Cardone has been arrested, charged with her murder, and, mainly through the efforts of Pasca, has been condemned to death. On the day set for his execution, his last request is that he be allowed to play his favorite violin. The request is granted and while he plays, Lucia, who is in the city of his imprisonment, recognizes the player as her lover. She rushes into the prison and obtains the release of Cardone and both have the pleasure of seeing the arrest and downfall of the treacherous Pasca.

WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD (Released Week of June 21) (Bray Cartoon).—Cam M. Bert, the doughty knight of the Ancient and Dishonorable Order of Insufferable Cheeses, fares forth. He overwhelms his opponents with the mere power of his personality. His rusty steed Ada Mant snorts in true charger fashion, and they proceed to scale the cliffs to a Donjon tower, whatever that is. The ascent, however, is sheer and precipitous, also steep and inclined. It has no regard for knightly dignity, and manages, at the most inopportune time (for Cam) to slip from beneath the feet of the noble colt. Persistency wins the day, however, and they finally gain the summit. It is only to find that the notorious, maneating Geewhizicuss occupies that and adjacent territory. Does Cam care? You bet he does. He is chased by the scaly antediluvian, and they battle all over the place. The day is particularly warm though, and Cam M. Bert's strength prodigious, stupendous, and enormous. He finally overcomes the Cuss, and as reward for his prowess wins the hand of the King's daughter.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (On Same Reel With the Foregoing—Released Week of June 21).—This film shows our numerous, fussy friends the sparrows, all importantly busy. The Chaffinch is also pictured. Here is an actual photograph of young birds being taught by their mother to fly.

WAR AND WOMAN (Three Parts—Released Week of June 21).—Colonel Pelton, aide to the Lovagnan Ambassador to Livonia, falls in love with Estelle Orloff, daughter of General Orloff, of the army of Livonia. Pelton's love is reciprocated, and on his return home confides his hopes to his mother. She disapproves of the union with a foreigner, but does not forbid it. Accordingly the son writes to General Orloff, asking for the hand of his daughter. The testy Livonian leader, ignoring the pleas of Estelle and Blanche, his younger daughter, refuses to permit the alliance, and sends a telegram by Blanche, who goes to the city, refusing the request. The daughter then changes the wording of the message, substituting her own, which tells Pelton to come as soon as he can. The lover arrives in due time, and after preliminary surprise and anger on the part of the father, all is forgiven and the marriage sanctioned.

Four years pass swiftly, and the couple, blessed with a sturdy boy, are supremely happy. But war clouds gather and soon strife breaks out betwoon Livonia and Lovagna. A barrier rises between husband and wife, and General Orloff writes his daughter to do her duty. Accordingly she tries to burn some military plans of her husband, but is prevented from so doing by her sister Blanche, who tells her that was not her father's idea. Pelton tells her that her duty is to her son. The dread carnage of war passes in time, and Pelton returns home.

to be guest of honor at a banquet. Estelle refuses to be present at the affair, which was held to celebrate a great victory, because it was given for one who has laid her country waste. Pelton remonstrates with her, but she is firm. Then, having done her duty by her son during the Colonel's absence, she goes to the home of her father, telling Pelton that her love for him is dead. The boy falls ill and Pelton is forced to send for the mother, who comes and nurses the youngster back to health. When about to leave for her home again, a rift comes in the clouds of misunderstanding and they are brought together by the common love for their boy and the revived love for each other.

WHO PAYS? Series No. 11. "The Fruit of Folly" (Balboa—Three Parts—Released Week of June 21).—Mrs. Clay finds exhaust for her feverish spirit over the card table. She loses in great sums—the sums her husband strives so hard to earn. She plays at the home of Cora Blake, whose house is used for that sort of thing. Mrs. Clay has finally to give Mrs. Blake her I. O. U. for a large amount of money. Mrs. Clay's husband, whose folly is drink, and his partner, whose folly is his faith in Clay, are both in dire financial peril, but see a way out in proving theft on Horace Stone, whose folly is women. They have the confession of Stone's dead clerk in Mrs. Clay's private safe. Stone knows this, and knows also that Mrs. Clay is indebted to Mrs. Blake whom he has promised to marry. Mrs. Blake, in order to protect her future husband, decides to go to Mrs. Clay's apartment, and under cover of demanding payment of her I. O. U., secure the confession which accuses her future husband. She gets the confession and starts away with it. But when she comes on Stone (whose folly is women), she finds he is planning to run away with another girl. She balks this, and holds the confession of his guilt over his head forever. Clay and his partner, eager to prove Stone's theft bring the Chief of Police to see the written confession. But the confession is not there. Mrs. Clay knows how it has disappeared, but cannot tell, lest she admit her indebtedness to Mrs. Blake. Without being able to recover the money from Stone, Clay and his partner face ruin, and the wife must stand by and see it come, lest she bring down on her head an equal wrath. Ruin comes—Who Pays?

BING, BANG, BIFF (Released Week of June 21).—Two knights of the road, Hen. Hemlock and Buddy Bugs vie with each other for the hand of a lady fair. After many troubles, including an unexpected and unwelcome bath, honors seem to be about even, and a revolver match is arranged to decide who is the lucky man. He shoots first and misses the mark, but Buddy, instead of trying for the mark, turns the gun on his rival and the father-in-law-he-would-like-to-have. He then locks his enemy in wagon shed and compels the old man at the point of the gun to consent to his marriage to the girl. The mother is also willing, but when they go in search of their young hopeful they see her in the act of eloping with her divinity student fiance, who has thought to play third fiddle in the race for her affections.

ROMANCE OF ELAINE, NO. 25 (Two Parts—Released Week of June 14).—Craig Kennedy's marvelous invention, a super-force torpedo to revolutionize warfare, has been stolen. Kennedy himself has disappeared, although Elaine has a note from him begging her not to grieve whatever happens, for he is safe. And then, one night, on a barren strip of land jutting out into the Atlantic, a fisherman, concealed behind a rock, sees the periscope of a submarine rise;—sees a man's head and shoulders rise seemingly out of the sea, and sees a pair of athletic arms strike out bravely for the shore.

That night, at a hotel in New York, a distinguished looking foreigner, much resembling the man who seemed to rise up out of the sea, is shadowed by a fussy old gentleman resembling the fisherman of the coast scenes. The foreigner out and the fussy old gentleman goes to his room, where, after a short, sharp struggle with a valet, he searches through all drawers and papers. One paper he pockets with glee, and then departs. Elaine and Jameson are visited by the distinguished-looking foreigner who tells them he is a secret service agent from Washington, and begs to get information with regard to Kennedy and the lost torpedo. Elaine's dog, digging with its forepaws in a pot of palms, unearths the lost torpedo and carries it to the attic, where he drops it behind a trunk. The torpedo's propeller, however, has been left in the palm-pot, where Marcius Del Mar, the foreigner, finds it. Elaine is suspected by him of having concealed the torpedo. The fussy old gentleman, in Del Mar's tracks since he left his rooms, is an interested spectator. He is unaware that Del Mar has spies guarding the house, and is set upon by them. Rushing madly into the conservatory, he faces Del Mar. Both draw their guns, but the fussy old gentleman fires first. His gun is loaded with bullets containing an overpowering gas. Both Del Mar and Elaine fall suffocated to the floor. How the fussy old gentleman escapes is a fitting climax to this episode. See this installment.

NICK WINTER AND THE MASKED THIEVES (Three Parts—Released Week of June 14).—A Banking house has been robbed of a large sum and the burglary insurance company sends Nick Winter, a master sleuth, to track the criminals. He bags a suspect, who later proves an alibi. A professor is giving a party on the opening of the shooting season at his country place, and one of the men invited to take part in the fun seeks the advice of Winter, since the host is an ally of the suspect. The detective tells him to accept and he goes himself in the guise of the man invited. The place is robbed during the party and Nick bags one of the band, who later proves to be a friend of the banker. He is jailed, but is allowed to escape, the sleuth knowing that he will go at once to his friends. This he does, and after a series of narrow escapes and quick changes of disguises Nick catches the whole band of thieves. The leader of the gang, who was able to establish an alibi on all occasions has a twin brother who goes out of town whenever a "job" is "pulled" and clears his brother of any charge against him by making a good alibi for the culprit.

MAN TO MAN (Colored—Balboa—Released Week of June 14).—Driven desperate by lack of work, the laborer takes a revolver and resolves to get money at any cost. He effects an entry into the home of a millionaire and "covers" the owner before the latter has a chance to move. The rich man has just placed a well filled wallet on the table and the burglar snatches it up, seating himself at the same time. Then there ensues a battle of wits between the two; one trying to outguess the other. The intruder, new to this style of law breaking, welches as he tries to shoot his unwelcome host; and the latter calls him a coward, saying that if he had the gun he would shoot him "like a cur." The burglar hands over the weapon and the rich man points it at the former's uncovered breast, but later wilts and lowers the arm. The butler, summoned by a floor button, sees the predicament of his employer and goes for the police, who rush into the house in search of the intruder. The latter hides and the officers are thrown off the scent by the intended victim. The thief breaks down and tries to hand back the money, but the rich man, softened by his visitor's poverty, refuses it and the two men, drawn together by the spirit of brotherhood, shake hands.

WHO PAYS? (Series No. 10—"Pomp of Earth"—Balboa—Three Parts—Released Week of June 14).—John Cole steals a million dollars from the bank of which he is president, and shifts the blame to his cashier, Don Porter, an innocent man, and Porter is sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. Edith Hilton and her mother, in a far western town have never heard of either John Cole or Don Porter, and know nothing of the effect their little affair will have on Edith's life. Cole goes to the city in which Edith lives, changes his name to Richard Walker, and starts regally to "spread" himself. Edith's mother, with a calculating eye to business, notes the coming of the millionaire, and tries to persuade her daughter to note also—as seriously as she. But Edith feels the call of Youth to Youth, and creates in the heart of Hugh Keene the hope of a great love. Keene is a young broker and does business for Walker. He scents a rival in his customer, and appropriates money not his to cut the dash of a richer suitor. His financial ventures break frightfully, and he is forced to "borrow" from the Sunset Club of which he is treasurer. Urged on by her mother's importunities and Walker's supplications, Ethel marries the millionaire. Walker, suspecting Keene, asks for an accounting, threatening arrest. Keene, knowing he can't pay, and crazed at his loss of Ethel, decides to kill Walker that night. But his plans are spoiled by Don Porter, who has escaped from the prison and made his way to the west. Porter does well the job Keene had laid out for himself. Asked by the Sunset Club for the funds in his possession, and seeing disgrace ahead, Keene finds the path of the bullet "the easiest way." Walker dead, Edith flies madly to Keene's office, turning naturally to him in her sorrow. She finds him seated in his office chair, a revolver at his feet, his face wreathed in a hideous smile. And as she looks at the limp, lifeless figure before her, she realizes that even the price of his honor did not buy for him that one balm for which he sold it.—Who Pays?

WHIFFLE'S BUSTED ALIBI (Released Week of June 14).—Sitting in a barber's chair, Whiffles sees a fair lady leaving her card with the cashier of the shop and asking that they send up a hairdresser to her home that evening. Our hero takes the card while no one is looking and proposes to go to Mlle. De Casse's, for that proved to be the name of the lady, and fix her hair himself.

Accordingly he gathers together in a leather case all his wife's toilet articles from her boudoir and sets out on his mission. Having done the lady's hair, after burning her several times, he is about to leave when her fiance comes to call. The latter is a pompous individual and when he orders a moustache treatment Whiffles puts the curling iron on his face more times than on the object of his treatment. Then, during a particularly violent burning, the fiance jumps suddenly and it is disclosed that he wears a wig, a fact of which the lady was ignorant. This causes his hasty departure.

Mrs. Whiffles has an important party engagement for the evening and her husband has agreed to call for her. He does, and finds her talking to one of the lady guests. The latter, when Whiffles gets a good look, he recognizes as the object of his tonsorial attentions. The recognition is mutual and the lady is much perturbed, but Whiffles, smiling in his inimitable way, assures that something is wrong and that he must have a double. He hands her his card in support of his story to prove that he is no hairdresser. "Oh, you must have the wrong person."

So far so good. But when the Whiffleses get home they find the toilet articles missing and explanations are in order. Mrs. W. suspects that the maid took them and her husband hands in a concurring opinion. Then the poor girl is discharged, but as she leaves a cabbie comes to the door with the lost articles, saying that Mr. Whiffles had left them in his hack. Then Whiffles gets his.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 6—Two Parts—"Shadows at Sunrise," June 7).—Stanley Hall was to be opened again! Two days later, after carpenters and renovators had completed their work, the new occupants, Hagar, the gypsy queen, and Esther, her ward, took up their many social duties. And they were recognized as mother and daughter seeking the quiet and rest to be found in Fairfax. In a short time Esther was again the center of attraction for the youths. Some of them were certain that they recognized in the young girl the former ward of Dr. Lee.

A few miles away Arthur Stanley continued his arduous duties as the hired man of Farmer Smith, and he loved to hold Esther to his manly bosom. Arthur's only regret was that he could not fulfill his promise made to Esther before the coming of the dark cloud, namely, to crown her queen of love and beauty at the annual tournament, now but a few days off. He was about to abandon all hope of keeping his promise, when his eye ran across the following announcement in a Richmond paper, received at the farmhouse that afternoon: "Ye old time tournament! Ye gallant cavaliers and squires and knights of Fairfax County will hold an old time tournament at ye Fairfax grounds next Saturday afternoon. All riders must be masked. Ye victorious knight shall crown his ladye fair as queen of love and beautie." Arthur would take a chance, for Esther's sake. Farmer Smith readily consents to loan him Starlight for the occasion.

Arthur knew that Hagar and Esther were making Stanley Hall their abode. Quickly, he scribbled a few lines on a piece of paper, and, stealing across the lawn to the window looking into Esther's room, he tossed it through the opening. Esther came to the great tree near the stile, where Arthur asked her to meet him, and beseeched him to give up his mad resolve. But he stood firm. Fairfax, as always, was represented at the tournament by everyone of any prominence. But this afternoon all eyes were centered on the well built youth, evidently a stranger, mounted on the beautiful Kentucky thoroughbred. Only two in the vast throng recognized him—Esther and Blair Stanley, who had penetrated his disguise. A cheer went up as Blair, on his mount, swerved to frustrate the rush of horsemen in his direction. A moment later, Arthur's mount crashed into him, unseating him. Humiliated in the presence of Vivian, Blair planned immediate revenge. As Arthur, winner of the tournament, was about to place the crown on the head of the radiant Esther, Blair pointed out Arthur to Sheriff Swain. "There's your man, Arthur Stanley, murderer of Dr. Lee," he told him. It was Quabba, who rushed to Arthur and warned him. In a moment Arthur was on his mount. Fighting, struggling, the gypsy lad, surrounded by a cordon of mounted men, was being slowly driven into a corner near the grandstand. His very life, his liberty, he realized, depended on his escape!

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 7—Two Parts—"The Fox and the Pig"—June 14).—Crashing through the cordon of masked horsemen, Arthur suddenly swerved his mount straight toward the crowded grandstand, the spectators rushing to the upper seats as Star-

Fifth Annual Convention
Motion Picture Exhibitors League
of America
and
Exposition of Motion Picture Arts
San Francisco, July 13 to 16, 1915

ITEMS OF INTEREST ABOUT THE CONVENTION

It is to be held in the most magnificent auditorium in America, as shown above. The convention chamber seats 2,000.

The exposition salon is larger than any heretofore used, but from present indications additional floor space will be needed.

There will be elaborate displays of all equipment and supplies used in any and all branches of the motion picture industry.

Three miniature theaters will be operated continuously each afternoon and evening, showing the latest and best in pictures and their projection.

The Convention closes Friday night with the greatest ball in motion picture history. The dance floor in the Auditorium is 197 feet square, and is entirely unobstructed by pillars or posts. The galleries have a seating capacity of 5,000.

Seventy-five film stars will be brought on a special train from Los Angeles studios to attend this dance.

You can visit the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco and the San Diego Exposition; also the great motion picture studios of the Pacific Coast without extra expense. An opportunity like this will never be repeated in a life time.

Plan to arrive in San Francisco not later than Tuesday morning, July 13th, and spend the entire week.

Saturday, July 17th, is motion picture day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It is also Liberty Bell Day.

Hotel rates are very reasonable. The Convention Committee is making reservations and guaranteeing the rates. Accommodations may be secured as follows: One person in single room, without bath, $1.00 per day up; with bath, $1.50. Two people, with bath, $2.00 per day up.

Address requests for hotel accommodations or information to Convention Committee, Room 306, 948 Market Street, San Francisco.

light gained the lower tier. In the multitude, the gypsy youth discerned his mother and Esther. Arthur spurred Starlight on, who safely accomplished the fifteen foot leap from the end of the grandstand to the ground. Arthur drew rein as he approached the grounds of the Monticello Hunt Club, over which the annual chase was then being run. Temporarily free from pursuit, the youth sought rest for himself and Starlight behind a hedge, skirting the field, from where he watched the pursuit of the hapless fox. In the distance he observed a red-coated driver, apparently outdistanced, spurring on his mount. Suddenly it stumbled, throwing the rider. Arthur ran to his side, only to find that he was dead. The youth dragged the dead man to his hiding place behind the hedge and quickly changed clothes with the corpse. Then tying Starlight to a fence, where he would be found and returned to his owners, he leaped into the saddle of the dead hunter's horse and soon disappeared around the bend in the road. Sheriff Swain and his posse arrived an hour later and, certain that the mutilated body was that of the fugitive, bore it back to Stanley Hall.

That night, however, friends of the dead hunter furnished a positive identification, further complicating the mystery of Arthur's whereabouts. Detective Blake, much to the surprise of Hagar, visited Stanley Hall the following afternoon, carrying a large leather portfolio. Alone with the gypsy queen in the study of the Hall Blake convinced her of Arthur's innocence and Blair's guilt of Dr. Lee's murder. Finger prints of the assassin found in the study where the murder occurred, corresponded exactly, he said, with finger prints found on a worthless check Blair had passed on a Richmond gambling house proprietor. Esther, seated on the veranda of the Hall, heard nothing of the conversation between Hagar and Blake, it being deemed best to keep her ignorant of the discovery until Blair's mother had been confronted with the evidence and a plan of action decided upon. Esther never doubted Arthur's innocence. But why, she argued, did he insist in remaining away? Was he attempting to shield someone else? Sorely puzzled, the girl directed her gaze on a hunchback individual slowly climbing the hill toward the Hall, guiding a monkey on a leash. It was Quabba.

Hagar reached the home of Widow Stanley as Blair, for the tenth time, was begging money. Instead of granting his request the widow roundly chided him for his infatuation for Vivian Marston, which could bring about no good, she argued, and on whom he had spent practically all of his inheritance. The widow received Hagar with anything but friendliness, and sat spellbound as Hagar convinced her, by means of the finger prints furnished by Blake, of Blair's guilt of the murder. Hagar, alone in the room, while the widow went to seek her son, sat with her back facing the curtains. Suddenly a hand reached forth and circled about the visitor's throat. She fought Blair as best as she could. A blow on the head from a poker brought her to her knees. Another rendered her unconscious. Then the desperate youth hurriedly dragged her into the secret closet, took possession of the incriminating finger prints, swung the movable wall back into position and hurried away. Some ten miles away, a negro boy, keeper of a herd of swine, had climbed a giant tree in search of owl eggs. Stuffing his puny hand into a nest, he brought forth the diamond from the sky, where it had been playfully dropped by Quabba's monkey. Later, unmindful of the fortune he held in his hand, the boy was amusing himself by dangling the gem before the eyes of the uninterested pigs over which he maintained watch.

PARAMOUNT.

THE ARAB (Lasky).—Jamil Abdullah Azam, son of the Bedouin Sheik, plots with friends to rob the caravan of Meshur, his father's greatest enemy. The day selected, however, is a religious fast day, a fact forgotten by Jamil. His father sends a messenger to find him, which the messenger does after much trouble, and, fearing to disobey his father, Jamil returns home, warning his followers that as it is truly a fast day they must not carry out their plans. They do, it however, despite his orders, and his father learns of it. His father accuses him, and in the quarrel which follows words are passed which so anger Jamil that he leaves his father's home.

This part of the picture forms a sort of prologue, and the balance and main part of it shows the formation of a plot to massacre the Christians in the village, at the command of the Sultan, the working out of the plot in all its subtle ramifications, and its final defeat, due to the love of Jamil for a Christian girl, the daughter of an American missionary, which causes him to protect the Christians with his Bedouin followers, he having become Sheik through the death of his father.

BROTHER OFFICERS (Cosmofotofilm).—A bookmaker's son is brought up in an evil atmosphere in London. His father's clerk teaches him to cheat at cards when he is too young to know the wickedness of it. This clerk, whose name is Stanton, absconds with all his employer's money, and shortly after is followed by the boy's mother, who is infatuated with him. The shock kills the boy's father, and the boy, homeless, goes out into the world with one great ambition—to find Stanton and kill him. After knocking about for some years the bookmaker's son, now a young man, enlists in the British Army under the name of Hinds. He eventually becomes a sergeant, and in a fight with some native Afghans wins the gratitude and friendship of Lieutenant Pleydell by saving his life at much risk to his own. About this time Hinds wins the Calcutta Sweep, a famous lottery, and buys a commission in the army with the money, thus becoming a "brother officer" of Pleydell's, who agrees to train Hinds how to act as "an officer and a gentleman."

In the meantime, Stanton has made a large fortune in Australia, and no one would recognize the bookmaker's clerk in the affluent millionaire, "Robert Hutton." He returns to England, and by chance meets Pleydell, and in a game of cards cheats him out of a large sum of money. Pleydell gives him his I O U, and Hutton uses it as a club to force Pleydell to introduce him into good society. To stave off the day of reckoning as long as possible, Pleydell presents Hutton to his mother, Lady Margaret Pleydell, and to his friend Honora, the Baroness Royden, as well as to many other intimates. Hutton is strongly attracted to Honora, with whom Hinds has already fallen in love without suspecting that she and Pleydell love each other. Hutton's attentions to Honora are distasteful to her and goad Pleydell to a fury. His anger and despair are so marked that Hinds is moved to force him to confide the reason.

A little later Hinds accidentally overhears a conversation between Honora and Pleydell which reveals the truth to him. He has a sharp struggle with himself for a while, since all he has to do to crush Pleydell and have a fair chance to win Honora for himself is to allow events to take their own course, but eventually his better nature triumphs and he decides to do what he can to help Pleydell. Accordingly he sends for Hutton. All the while he has had a vague feeling that he has seen Hutton somewhere before, and when Hutton comes to him he suddenly recognizes him and exposes him. Hutton is forced to give up Pleydell's I O U, and Hinds shows Lady Pleydell and Honora how Pleydell was cheated. The gratitude of Pleydell and Honora and the rest is very great, but Hinds has been sorely hurt, and, knowing that the best thing for him is to go away, he bids them farewell. The last view we have of him shows his face drawn in suffering over his loss and the thought of what might have been.

THE WHITE SISTER (Essanay—Six Parts—June 21).—Donna Angela Chairomonte returns home from a sitting at a famous artist's with her aunt, the Marchesa, and Giovanni Severi, a young officer, who is in love with her, and finds that her father has been killed. Her aunt, the Marchesa, who is in love with the officer and is extremely jealous of her niece, takes charge of the castle. She takes occasion to destroy a will leaving the property to her niece. Because there was no civil marriage, the property reverts to her husband. The Marchesa then takes the title of Princess Chiaromonte, while Donna Angela, with no name or fortune, goes to live with a former nurse in a humble cottage.

Giovanni is suddenly ordered to Egypt at the head of a command. Shortly afterwards word comes that he and all his troops have been waylaid and killed. Donna Angela is overwhelmed with grief and enters a convent. In two years she takes the vows and becomes "The White Sister." Five years after his disappearance Giovanni returns, the only survivor of the expedition. He had been wounded and captured and made a slave until his escape. He is overwhelmed with grief to find his betrothed has taken the veil. He does everything to persuade her to renounce her vows, but she stands firm.

Finally Giovanni, who has been put in charge of a powder magazine, is injured in an explosion. He is taken to the convent hospital. The doctor tells him that his life can be saved by the amputation of his arm. Giovanni refuses to consent, saying he prefers to die. "The White Sister" pleads with him, but he will not yield. But the kindly Mgr. Sarasemesti, who has been watching the couple for some time and sees how desperately both are in love, gets a special dispensation, so that "The White Sister" can leave the convent and the sisterhood. The sweethearts are then reunited.

Familiar Names

Each great industry has at least one familiar name—a name identified with progress and popularity —a name that has come gradually to represent the highest ideals and achievements in its particular industry—a name that is a synonym for honorable dealing—a name that comes first to the lips when the industry it stands for comes into the mind.

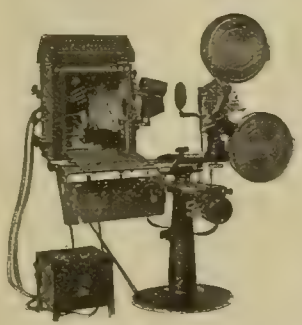
MOTIOGRAPH

The Best Projector for Every Exhibitor.
Clear, Sharp. Definition of Picture Unexcelled.



The material used gives it a lasting quality, which is far superior to all others. Every part is made in its own factory and thoroughly tested before shipping. MR. USER, this is very important. As you know, some of the cheap assembled machines (although top notches in price) which are not properly run in will freeze or tighten—after the adjustments are loosened—what have you??? Not so with the MOTIOGRAPH. Every machine is thoroughly tested and run in before shipping. MOTIOGRAPH users say the MOTIOGRAPH works the same 365 days in the year. Ask them.

Motiograph prices are the lowest, quality the highest.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

UNITED STATES WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIFIES
GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stero Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO., INC.,

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Exhibitor:

BY word of mouth the fame of the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen is being passed about. That is the way in which fame—or infamy is created. Once created it remains and grows.

When you come to exhibitor-users though, you get the true-to-size statements. It is there we live. From mouth to mouth the exhibitors, who have bought our screens, who have tried 'em on the crowds, are passing boosts for the Minusa Gold Fibre.

We know it because our screens are right!

We know it because our dealers have no come-backs. We know it because they have no difficulty selling all the prospects in their territory. We know it because we have no difficulty selling the same exhibitor the second, third and fourth time. We know it because our sales steadily increase.

We know it because our screens are scientifically "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre.

Send us specifications and ask for samples.

Theatre Record Ledger System

For Every Exhibitors' Business

Have you ever thought of the necessity of keeping a correct and accurate set of books in your business? Hundreds of managers today do everything but keep books. That's the reason I compiled my Theatre Record Ledger System. With no trouble at all you can keep a correct and accurate record of all receipts, no matter what, besides a complete history of every expense. One complete week's business on each page; 52 pages, or one year's business to every book. Sent with privilege of returning if not satisfactory, upon receipt of $2.50 (plus 20c. extra for postage). J. V. BRYSON, The Theatre Record Ledger, 252 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, U. S. A.

"....I'LL TEAR IT UP!"

AFTER ARTHUR ENSIGN, SCIENTIST, HAS SOLD THE STOVE TO KEEP HIS AGED WIFE FROM STARVATION, HE DISCOVERS THE ETHER WAVE—

THE WAR OFFICE CONDUCTS A SUCCESSFUL TEST AND FOREIGN SPIES LOSE THEIR LIVES IN AN ATTEMPT TO STEAL THE SECRET—

THE AGED INVENTOR HAS A DREAM—HE IS A GENERAL IN AN ARMY—INVADERS ARE RAVAGING THE COUNTRY—HIS POWERFUL EXPLOSIVE, "TRIXITE" AND THE "ETHER WAVE," ARE UTILIZED, AND BATTLEFIELDS ARE PILED DEEP WITH DEAD BODIES—

BUT ENSIGN'S TRIUMPH TURNS TO GALL AND WORMWOOD WHEN HE DISCOVERS THE LIFELESS BODY OF HIS BELOVED DAUGHTER ON THE FIELD OF CARNAGE—

A VISION OF THE CHRIST APPEARS AND THE INVENTOR IS TOLD: "YOU LIVE THAT MEN MIGHT DIE; HE DIED THAT MEN MIGHT LIVE!"

THEN COME GRIEF-STRICKEN WIVES, MOTHERS, AND SWEETHEARTS; THEN COME ORPHANS CRYING FOR BREAD; COME THE LAME, THE HALT, AND THE BLIND, MADE SO BY THE HIDEOUS GOD, WAR—

THE SLEEPER AWAKENS AND IS OVERJOYED TO SEE HIS CHERISHED DAUGHTER AND HER HUSBAND APPROACHING—THEY HAVE COME HOME TO VISIT THE "OLD FOLKS."

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS ACCEPT ENSIGN'S FORMULA—THEY TELL HIM THAT FAME AND RICHES ARE NOW HIS FOR THE ASKING; THEY REQUEST THE FORMULA—

SURROUNDED BY HIS LOVED ONES, THE AGED MAN SACRIFICES THE LABOR OF A LIFE-TIME—"I'LL TEAR IT UP," HE SLOWLY SAYS. THE PRIZED SECRET BECOMES SCRAPS OF PAPER—

"WAR O' DREAMS," A SELIG DIAMOND SPECIAL IN THREE REELS, RELEASED IN REGULAR SERVICE ON JULY FIRST, IS A STRONG SERMON WRITTEN BY W. E. WING OPPOSING THE RUTHLESS SLAYING OF HUMAN BEINGS—

"WAR O' DREAMS" POSSESSES THE PUNCH, THE POWER, AND THE APPEAL—MISS BESSIE EYTON IS THE STAR; THOUSANDS OF SOLDIERS ENGAGE IN REALISTIC WARFARE; THE LESSON IS SUCH THAT ALL WHO RUN MAY READ—

SHERMAN SAID THAT WAR IS HELL! "WAR O' DREAMS" PROVES CONVINCINGLY, IMPRESSIVELY, THAT SHERMAN WAS RIGHT—BOOK "WAR O' DREAMS" AND IN SO DOING YOU WILL HAVE ADDED TO THE WIDOW'S MITE!
